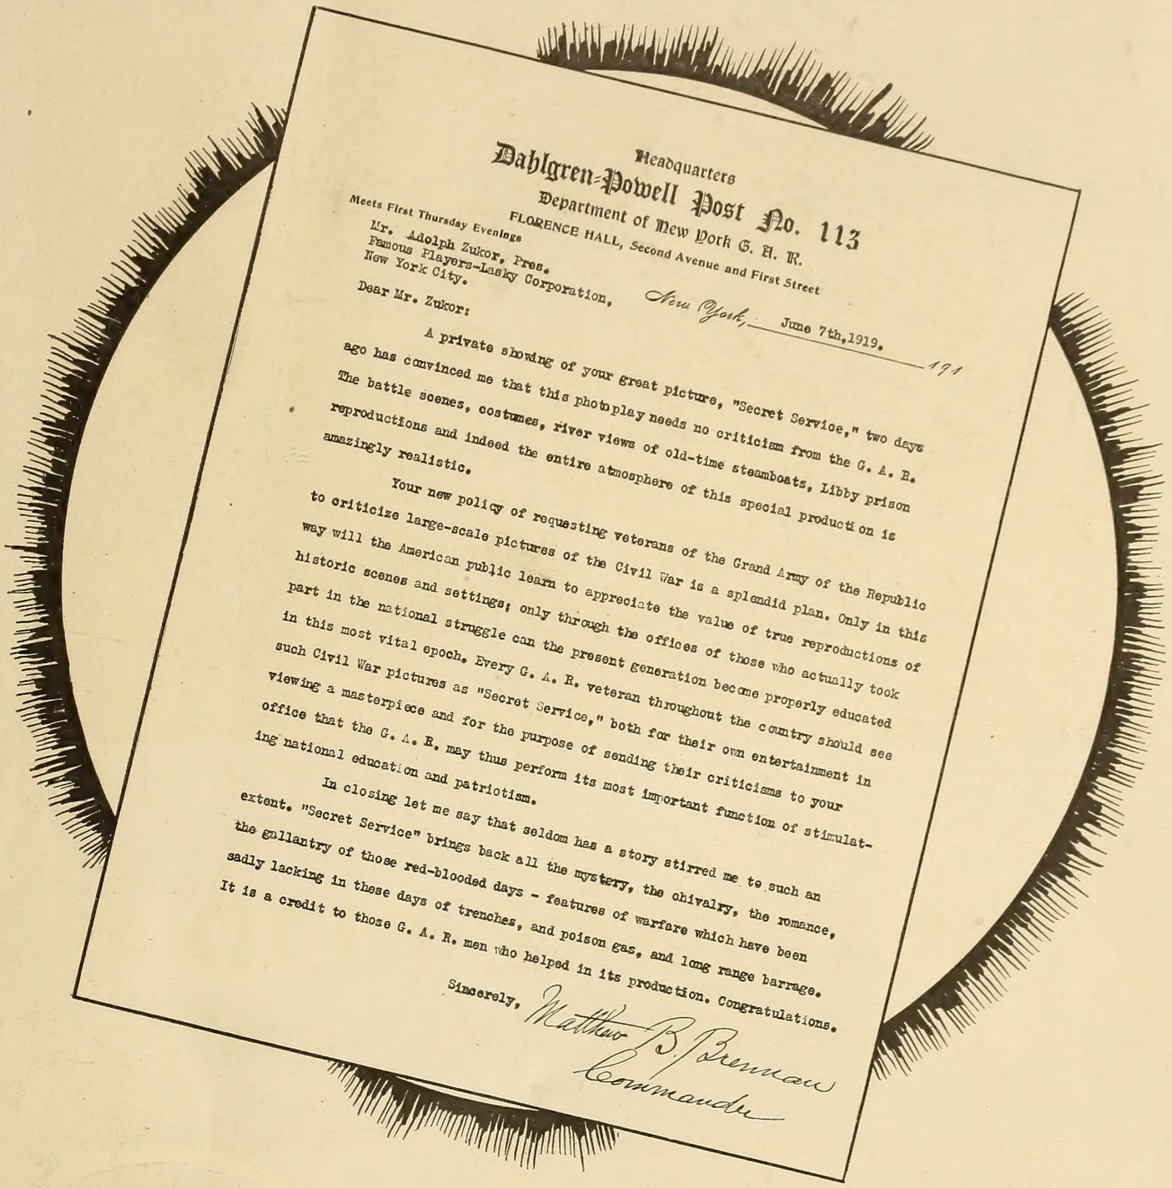
Here's what the G. A. R. thinks of "Secret Service"



Headquarters
Dahlgren-Powell Post No. 113
Department of New York G. A. R.
Meets First Thursday Evenings
FLORENCE HALL, Second Avenue and First Street

Mr. Adolph Zukor, Pres.
Famous Players-Lasky Corporation,
New York City.

New York, June 7th, 1919.

Dear Mr. Zukor:

A private showing of your great picture, "Secret Service," two days ago has convinced me that this photoplay needs no criticism from the G. A. R. The battle scenes, costumes, river views of old-time steamboats, Libby prison reproductions and indeed the entire atmosphere of this special production is amazingly realistic.

Your new policy of requesting veterans of the Grand Army of the Republic to criticize large-scale pictures of the Civil War is a splendid plan. Only in this way will the American public learn to appreciate the value of true reproductions of historic scenes and settings; only through the offices of those who actually took part in the national struggle can the present generation become properly educated in this most vital epoch. Every G. A. R. veteran throughout the country should see such Civil War pictures as "Secret Service," both for their own entertainment in viewing a masterpiece and for the purpose of sending their criticisms to your office that the G. A. R. may thus perform its most important function of stimulating national education and patriotism.

In closing let me say that seldom has a story stirred me to such an extent. "Secret Service" brings back all the mystery, the chivalry, the romance, the gallantry of those red-blooded days - features of warfare which have been sadly lacking in these days of trenches, and poison gas, and long range barrage. It is a credit to those G. A. R. men who helped in its production. Congratulations.

Sincerely,
Matthew B. Brennan

HART IN "SQUARE DEAL SANDERSON"

- An ARTCRAFT Picture -

A Girl in His Arms—

AND a gun in his hand—it was then that "Square Deal Sanderson" lived up to his name.

He was on the level—not a bad man, except for villains. There with the quick draw, he fought only for the right.

And the way he puts them over for a helpless girl will stir you to the very heart.

A game American, a true lover, a real man—Square Deal Sanderson.

Concerning Sanderson

THE N. Y. American said: "Just the screen diet for Hart. Full to every bit of its melodramatic length with action and Hart-interest. Imbued with romance and virility." The N. Y. Globe said: "The picture is worth seeing for its background alone, from which Thomas H. Ince has drawn all the poetry of life on a range. With Hart, no picture can miss fire." The N. Y. Sun said: "Literally makes good the threadbare phrase 'a thrill every moment.'" The N. Y. Post said: "Replete in exciting moments and full of action." The N. Y. Telegraph said: "Vivid and striking. Hart is at the head of his class." The N. Y. Telegram said: "Rapid action, heroic rescues, all the thrills of the southwest." The Motion Picture News says: 'As good a picture as Artcraft ever released, featuring William S. Hart. Suspense is tense and on an even level from start to finish. Should satisfy everyone of those picturegoers who enjoy the Western, manly sort of photoplays."

The others say the same.

Heart Interest

ONE of the things that make the pictures in which Charles Ray appears so universally popular. It's here in " Hay Foot, Straw Foot "—just enough of it to start a tear in smiling eyes.

It's one of Ray's best and you can afford to play it up for all its worth.

The story is by Julien Josephson. Directed by Jerome Storm. Photographed by Chester Lyons. Supervised by Thomas H. Ince.

THE other thing that brings the crowds to see a Ray picture. This one is full of them.

He got everything all mixed up when he tried to bring the chickens out of the magician's egg, but when he went out after real love he won the sweetest girl in the world.

You'll die laughing about his troubles, but then you'll come to life and be tickled to death when he finds all happiness.

NEVER has Elsie Ferguson exceeded the power of her dramatic portrayal as mother and as daughter in "The Avalanche." In this drama, disclosing the sway of the gambling passion that comes to two lives, she has an opportunity of emotional acting that is sensational in its power.

The Only Author Who Was Ever Satisfied With the Filming of His Book

STEWART EDWARD WHITE

Dear Hampton;

When I went to Los Angeles two months ago-to see what had been done about filming my book THE WESTERNERS it was with the idea of saying a few polite words and going on. You see, I have been there before. My experience has been that the author's name and that of the book are generally all that is left after everybody has finished up with it. The final state of mind of the author is measured by how far the amount of the check compensates for shattered ideas. But after I had talked with you, and gained an insight of your ideas, I sat up and took notice. Then and there I decided really to have something to do with the film; and for that reason I gave so much time and attention to the matters in which I could help. After seeing the run of the film I am even more enthusiastic; and cannot forbear writing to tell you that in my opinion you have got it over. The film is the book. I mean that not merely as following plot and action; but as embodying the underlying idea and spirit I tried to get into the printed page. So far as getting my notion of the movement that must lie behind any work of art, and the spirit that must inform it, I dont give a hang whether people read the book or see the picture. That, in my opinion is quite a notable achievment on your part and the part of Mr Sloman.

And your idea of getting the best of actors and permitting nobody to be the Star(capital S) has worked out well. As soon as you begin to feed to one man you must distort the unities by giving undue emphasis. If you preserve the unities the paradoxical result is that every actor receives more real attention and appreciation than he would had he been the Great and Only. It works, and you really have half a dozen star parts instead of one.

With best regards,

Stewart Edward White

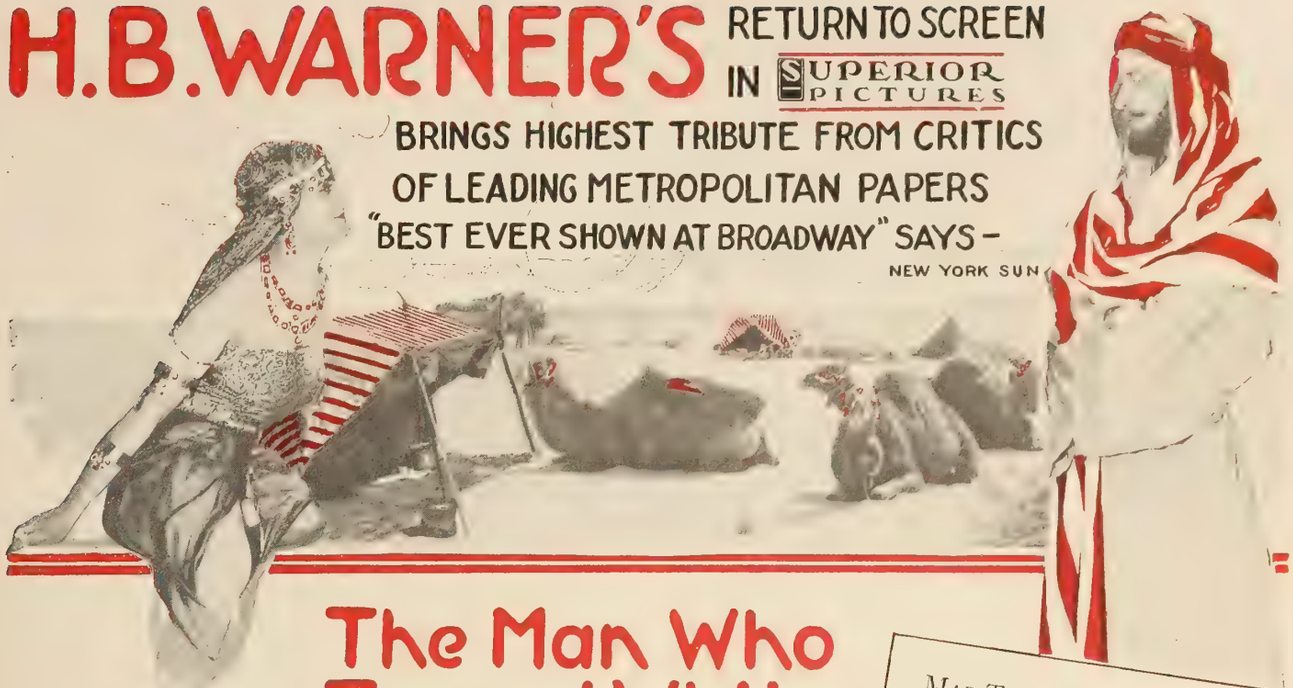
H.B. WARNER'S RETURN TO SCREEN IN SUPERIOR PICTURES

BRINGS HIGHEST TRIBUTE FROM CRITICS OF LEADING METROPOLITAN PAPERS

"BEST EVER SHOWN AT BROADWAY" SAYS – NEW YORK SUN



The Man Who Turned White

Presented by
JESSE D. HAMPTON

THE TRIBUNE says:

"We have always considered that Mr. Warner had more dignity and more repression than any other male star on the screen so it was with keen anticipation that we stood in line in front of the Broadway, for it seemed that everyone else had shared our eagerness to see 'The Man Who Turned White.'"

THE TIMES says:

"In his double role he has the grace and dramatic presence for which he is known. Barbara Castleton meets the requirements of her part as leading woman."

MAE TINEE in CHICAGO TRIBUNE says:

"One never can answer for the man, but be sure that Mr. Warner in 'The Man Who Turned White' is 'What Every Woman Wants.'"

THE MORNING SUN says:

"It has stir and color, some striking night scenes, and altogether is an agreeable improvement over the aggravating war drama that opened B. S. Moss's management of the Broadway."

THE TELEGRAM says:

"H. B. Warner is duplicating the success he won on the legitimate stage. As the hero in 'The Man Who Turned White' Mr. Warner has an ideal motion picture role. Go to the Broadway and see how he wins the girl. It's worth while."

THE MAIL says:

"'The Man Who Turned White' is conclusive endorsement of the program policy announced by B. S. Moss several weeks ago. He said that he was going to make the Broadway the home of unusual photoplays. Let fans wend their way to the Broadway —and bless Mr. Moss for the bait that has brought them."

ROB REEL in CHICAGO AMERICAN says:

"H. B. Warner, the longest, lankiest, leanest of those for whom the sub-debs are wafted softly screenward, has come back. He really has. 'The Man Who Turned White' is his come back picture."

THE GLOBE says:

"H. B. Warner is fatally handsome in his Bedouin disguise and still more handsome as a smooth-shaven Englishman. The picture is well directed and acted."

Dear Mr. McShane:-

I am enclosing you herewith a picture of the crowd in front of our Metropolitan Theatre. It was taken forty-five minutes before the box-office opened for the first showing of "WHAT EVERY WOMAN WANTS". As you know the Metropolitan has a reputation of well known stars and we practically upon presentation of well known stars and we up are now trying to change that to the "PLAY IS THE THING", are now trying to change that to the result of the publicity campaign we and this crowd is the result of the publicity campaign we launched.

The title, "WHAT EVERY WOMAN WANTS" has wonderful advertising possibilities for every exhibitor and our business held up for the entire run at our Metropolitan and Knickerbocker Theatres, both running day and date and being two of the largest theatres in Washington. We would surely have extended the showing had it not been for your inability to let us have a print. This show pleased all and was very favorably commented on by the women.

Let us have more like this.

Very truly yours,

If United Artists Corporation were offering a product of unknown value,

If Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and D. W. Griffith were merely names,

If these United Artists were not going to release their own pictures through their own organization,

If they had not selected as their representatives the men of integrity, experience and high standing who head their sales organization,

If the policies and plans of the company were in doubt and beclouded by vague words and uncertain meanings,

If the pictures of the United Artists were not going to be marketed individually, on a single picture basis, purely on their merits,

If the foremost showmen in the country were not already booking the first release of United Artists Corporation,

There might be a question

but—

BUT Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and D. W. Griffith represent the very height of box-office power.

United Artists Corporation is their own organization, through which their pictures are to be released direct from artist to exhibitor, each production on its own merits, and by the single picture only.

The United Artists have chosen as the heads of their sales organization men in whom the exhibitors of the country have the utmost confidence.

The productions of United Artists Corporation will be rented only through its own sales organization; no outside exchange, circuit or booking agency will in any way be concerned in the handling of its pictures.

And because these things are as they are, the leading exhibitors of the country are already booking United Artists Corporation's first release.

The only question is—

The Bull's-Eye of Open Booking

¶What does open booking offer?

What is its real and large value to the exhibitor, to the industry?

We have had some discussion of the subject. It is the big subject of the year; we all know that. But just what is its bigness?

The bull's-eye of open booking is advertising.

There you have it, in one word; there lies its true, its central significance.

First of all, open booking means competition.

That sounds mild and ordinary.

But competition is a big word in the business world; it means a lot.

Consider, first, that we have never had unfettered competition in this business.

You cannot, of course, have unfettered competition—beginning with the making of pictures—until you have pictures sold on a basis of unfettered competition, a basis where merit is the one and only sales argument and consideration.

And not having unfettered competition we have not had unfettered advertising; that is to say, advertising has never been permitted to reach its full development, for advertising never follows and never flourishes, in any business, unless it has to do with goods sold openly and purchased selectively—on merit only.

And now—to go further—since we are all agreed that advertising is the well-spring of this business, that it counts half along with the pictures, we can readily see that the big development in this business, now facing us, will come through advertising—the new and better advertising which in turn has been made possible by open booking.

Open booking calls for better pictures—because only better pictures can be sold openly.

Open booking makes possible the fullest possible sale of these better pictures because open booking makes advertising possible.

Advertising from beginning to end, from producer—to exhibitor—to public is the dominant force here; it is the force in the circle making for better pictures; a bigger public, bigger proceeds, and around again to bigger, constantly bigger advertising. It grows of its own force.

We have always contended, and we are supremely confident, that some day pictures will be the most widely advertised commodity in the history of the world.

That day is fast coming. It has already been ushered in by open booking.

It will mark a totally new era in this business.

First we had the era wherein the motion picture was rated only as a patented novelty.

Then followed the era when the picture was thought to be purely theatrical.

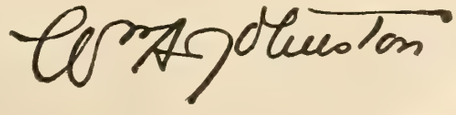
Now we have the merchandising era, in which this business will take rank with the biggest of modern industries.

Advertising was never a factor in the first two eras; now it is to be the ruling factor.

Advertising won't be fully free to develop until the routine of production has been so changed that pictures can be seen before the producer's advertising has been prepared; and newspapers everywhere must awaken to the full possibilities of picture advertising.

Advertising, at its best, must be co-operative—co-operative between producer and exhibitor; and that means that both will have to sense more fully its importance and be prepared to give the appropriation and ability and all that modern day advertising demands.

This is particularly true of the exhibitor. More than ever, in the future, his success will be measured by his advertising resources.



Speaking Editorially

Prohibition and Pictures

"THIS is THE year."

In some form or another that comment is heard from all branches of the industry. There are many apparent reasons why such optimism should radiate from all sides. Other, and less mentioned reasons will, however, have quite a bearing.

In either the immediate or not far distant future, Prohibition will become a reality. Without arguing pro or con on the subject, it is well to pause a moment here.

A precedent in the way of substitutes will be created. We have not the exact figures on the number of million dollars spent over the bar or cafe tables on an average year, but the total is quite a neat sum as sums were considered prior to the war.

What will Mr. Average Man and his family do with the money which weekly went to the coffers of the cafe owner in the past?

Undoubtedly a goodly portion will be saved. Living conditions may rise to a better plane and—

"Well, I'll save some, and go to more theatres," was a remark heard casually the other day.

There is the answer. Amusements will be more sought after when they can be better afforded. The operas, the theatres, the motion picture houses, the recreation parks will all find a goodly increase of trade coming their way. The time passed in a cabaret by the well-to-do man who desired a drink AND a show, will now be spent by him at a show, either legitimate or high class picture. The money left at the corner by the working man will now at times be left at another corner—for a motion picture performance.

Victory in the Excess Tax Fight

EXHIBITORS in the smaller communities particularly will appreciate the success attending MOTION PICTURE NEWS efforts to secure reasonable interpretations of the points raised by the revenue law section levying a fifty per cent tax on the excess when admission prices are increased.

Many small town exhibitors had decided that they would not be able to show special attractions this year, since the tax would take away so large a share of the increase over their regular prices.

But it seems clear from the interpretation given MOTION PICTURE NEWS by the Revenue Department at Washington and published on page 299 that exhibitors may find a way to meet the spirit and letter of the law without paying the exorbitant tax.

The most important point to be observed by the exhibitor is for him to make it clear on all his advertising matter that it is his "regular and established" practise to charge a certain definite increased price when showing "special" attractions.

This is the year of the "special"—the year of bigger and better things for patrons as well as exhibitors and producers. So the interpretation is all-important.

If your local Internal Revenue Collector has ruled at variance with the interpretations given in this issue show him the clipping from MOTION PICTURE NEWS and the authority—Deputy Commissioner of Internal Revenue J. E. Walker.

Consolation for Some

THE greater bulk of our population has greeted the abolition of day light saving with a far from cheerful attitude. To the factory and office worker the loss of the day light hours in Summer will be a severe blow.

But we know of one class that will greet the news with accord. Not the farmers, who went on record in opposition; nor the electric light and gas companies, but the small town exhibitor.

If our letters from Mr. Small Town are any indication daylight saving has helped to make this a far from prosperous summer for him. "The folks" didn't give much thought to the picture theatre when it was possible to get the flivver out and enjoy two and three hours of sunlight and fresh air before 9 P. M. rolled around.

James Strong Judd

JAMES STRONG JUDD, one of the executives of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, died on Tuesday, June twenty-fourth.

The ordinary phrases fail at this moment. Sadness there is, deep sadness; and sadness will remain even in the hearts of his widest circles of acquaintances.

But, also, those who knew him well, know that a very rare and remarkable man has left this life.

There is much that might be said of the character of James S. Judd; and these things could be truly said of very few men in the wide world today. His integrity was simple, soundless, true: you felt, you grew to know, that it was one of the few dependable things in life. He was sunny, kindly, gentle, utterly faithful to his own, to his work and friends, to the best in life.

Is such a rare character possible? He made it so.

I never knew a finer man.

WILLIAM A. JOHNSTON.

Boy!—Page Canon Censorship Chase!

CIGARETTE advertising is nothing if not subtle. "Ask Dad, He Knows," has served its purpose to boost to beginners the cigarette a youngster is most likely to be able to afford.

Now there are those who see in the use of pictures of ladies of the harem a sly attempt on the part of the manufacturers to interest the one-time gentler sex in their wares. And warnings have not been lacking that the cigarette men are seeking the fate that stupidity and short-sightedness brought upon the brewers and distillers.

But there are still greater heights to which the "psychologic" copy writer may aspire. A flash of inspiration—and in the motion picture he has found his most subtle weapon. So, beneath a group of photographs of a prominent actress, we read:

"My director always recommends Hocus-Pocus cigarettes for my smoking scenes because they are so mild."

Shades of Major Funkhouser!

To paraphrase another cigarette ad:

"Censorship—Everywhere!—Why?"

The Age of Miracles

WONDER of wonders—a crazed youth took the suicide route by hanging the other day in New York and the newspapers did not say "the deed was prompted by seeing motion pictures."

In fact the newspapers put all the blame on the boy's reading of sensational dime-novel literature!

How did it all happen?

Well, it was all so clear that even a human-interest hungry reporter couldn't go wrong. Beside the unfortunate boy's body was found a copy of the lurid novel, opened at a page describing a hanging. The clues were broad enough for Sherlock's pal, "Doc" Watson.

So we have the Fates to thank that another demented deed was not ascribed to motion pictures; that another wave of censorship agitation was not started.

Though, come to think of it, the newspaper which boasts a "Bureau of Accuracy and Fair Play" did slip so far as to use the phrase "sensational novels and movies" in its story. This writer had to pull the screen in—even by the scruff of the neck.

The West Coast

Salt Lake Distributors Complain of High Rates to Montana

DECLARING that express rates on films from this territory prohibit the distribution of films from here in Montana and that if fair charges existed from $150,000 to $200,000 would be added to payrolls in Salt Lake City, the film distributors have launched a fight with the object of causing a reduction in the tariffs.

At present Seattle distributors are serving Montana despite the fact that the distance from here to Montana is must less than from the northwest port.

The local film distributors as a result have conferred with H. W. Prickett, manager of the Traffic Service Bureau of Utah with a view to obtaining justice, and Mr. Prickett is now preparing a complaint to file with the American Railway Express company in New York.

Local film distributors to get into the Montant field are obliged to pay heavier express rates than Seattle distributors, with the result that they are robbed of business which they assert rightfully belongs to this trading section.

Salt Lake Universal Has Booklet

GUS HAGER, manager of the local Universal exchange, has issued a booklet entitled Suggestions to Exhibitors. Besides many timely hints it contains an account of the Universal offer of a cash prize of $1,750.00 to the office that will show the biggest increase in business during the next thirty days over the previous thirty days and it urges exhibitors aid in putting Salt Lake over the top. In addition to this offer Mr. Laemmle of the Universal is to give his check for $1,000 for the lucky or rather hard working one that will show the required increase. Mr. Hager has taken the occasion to make a personal appeal for business and with each booklet sent to exhibitors he encloses a post card that they may fill out and mail to the office with their orders.

Convention and Ball for Seattle

PRESIDENT LUKAN of The Northwest Film Board of Trade is working hard to make a big Film Men's convention and Screen Ball a success. It will only be a few days when the big event will take place. Some of the committees are working harder than ever to be sure that every one will enjoy themselves when they come. Money will not be spared to make everything a success. There are some who say it will cost $1,500 or over to decorate the hall in which the screen stars will dance with "all comers." Of course $1,500 is a lot of money for a stunt of this kind, but it only goes to show that Seattle doesn't care what it does just so it makes things pleasant for the visitors. Besides this money will be spent for chartering ships, for excursions, for banquets, etc.

Holmes Going Big in Northwest

"BOB" NAVE, Northwest manager for Triangle in the Northwest, announces that the Thomas-Taylor Holmes series are going so strong in his territory that he does not believe it will be long before each section or picture house that has played them will be asking for second runs. Some managers have already asked for them. Ed. Dolan, manager of the "Weir" and "Dream," Aberdeen, Wash., has asked for them twice and said that these pictures are among the best he has ever exhibited. "The Coliseum," one of the Northwest's greatest show houses is playing them with great success.

Salt Lake Has Convention Week

THE Rotary Club International Convention started in Salt Lake June 16. Local moving picture theatres offered their best pictures during the week of the convention. It was estimated that over 6,000 people were visitors in Salt Lake. The delegates numbered 3,100 and many were accompanied by their families and friends who took the occasion to visit Salt Lake, Yellowstone Park and other points of interest in the intermountain country.

Woody of Seattle Manager of New Realart Pictures

NORTHWEST friends of Jack Woody are glad to hear that he has been made general sales manager of the new "Realart Pictures Corporation. Jack Woody is a Seattle man and was a member of Seattle's Film Row for a good many years. He started on it in 1912 with the General Film Company. In 1914 he switched to Mutual, when he was made general Northwest manager. As his sales ability became known to a still wider circle, he was induced to go East and join the Triangle Distributing offices in New York. His great sales record induced Mr. Kane, then general salesmanager for Select, to make Woody field manager for Select pictures, his territory being the United States. Shortly afterwards he was elevated to general sales manager.

Mr. Kane, president of the Realart corporation, also worked on Seattle's Film row, years ago when he handled this territory for the old General Film Corporation and later for Artcraft Pictures.

With Los Angeles Exchanges

THOMAS HANCOCK has booked the Houdini serial, "The Master Mystery," at Clune's Broadway beginning the week of June 22. Houdini, who is at present in Los Angeles working at the Lasky studios, will appear in person on the opening night. The serial has also been booked by the Pickwick theatre in San Diego for the summer months.

ARTHUR LAMB, branch manager and Harry Lustig, district manager, for Metro, are on their way to New York to attend the annual convention of that corporation's exchange managers. Dwight L. Hill, who has been handling California territory out of Los Angeles, has been called in to act as manager in Lamb's absence. Hill, who has just returned from a trip north along the coast reports conditions encouraging in that section. He booked Nazimova's "The Red Lantern," in all coast towns.

W. W. DUNLAP, salesman for the Pathe exchange, has returned from a north coast trip. He reports business quiet, but sold "Common Clay" in Santa Barbara, San Luis Obispo and Santa Maria, Cal.

ELMER R. PEARSON has been appointed to the post of feature sales manager for Pathe in Thomas North's place, with offices in New York. He has been associated with the General Film Company, V. L. S. E. and the World Film Corporation covering a period of ten years. More recently he has been with the First National Exhibitors.

J. HESS, of the Triangle sales force, who has been in Arizona for the past three weeks, reports business better than usual for this season of the year. He expects to remain on the road for an additional fortnight.

C. H. MARLEY, manager of the Triangle exchange, reports the Olive Thomas and Taylor Holmes series of five reel productions booking one hundred per cent up into September. The Holmes productions are going particularly strong in the Northwest and the Thomas pictures running in the lead throughout the Southland. Claude Hausel, manager of the American theatre here, has booked the second run on the latter to follow their initial exhibition at been received at the exchange and previewed by the trade. It is regarded locally as the best of the Holmes productions thus far offered through the Triangle offices.

THE Pathe Company has taken over the distribution of "The Thirteenth Chair." This will be released as a Special but the date for letting it go has not yet been officially announced.

FANNY WARD in "Common Clay" opened this week at Quinn's Rialto, Los Angeles.

W. J. MULLANEY, who covers the Arizona territory for Pathe, is planning an extensive trip through that state featuring the Ruth Roland serial, "The Tiger's Trail." This offering is going well throughout Southern California.

FRANK DUFFY, assistant to the general manager of the Pathe, is expected to visit San Francisco the latter part of the week, coming up here from Los Angeles.

San Francisco Light Is Declared Best for Film Producing

THE mutual benefits to San Francisco, the bay section and the motion picture industry which will result from the location here of a number of producing companies now operating in Southern California were recounted by Joseph A. Eliason of the Herman Film Corporation at the Home Industry League luncheon in San Francisco this week.

"I came here six weeks ago with the intention of staying a few days in the interest of my own company," said Eliason, "and, as the result of personal investigations, I have come here for good. I am convinced that San Francisco should soon have an equal share with Los Angeles in the motion picture industry."

Exploding certain fallacies regarding San Francisco climate, Eliason said that according to Government reports San Francisco had only eight more days of fog and ten days more of rain in a year than Los Angeles.. Furthermore he said that the diffusion of light here is more uniform than in the Southern part of the State and on account of the absence of glare, is better suited for the purposes of his business

Eliason announced that the organization of a motion picture welfare commission, comprising representatives of twenty organizations, was virtually completed, and only awaits the return of Mayor Rolph, who is in the East, for its launching. Through its support and cooperation he believes that a large share of the motion picture producing companies will establish headquarters in this city within a year.

Supervisor Joseph Mulvihill announces that the Herman Film Co., of Los Angeles, has leased the Hotaling block, Stanyan, Haight, Page and Shrader streets, and will move its studio to this city.. Mulvihill said that other Los Angeles studios will come here if proper inducements are made. The San Francisco Board of Supervisors has adopted a resolution for the appointment of a committee for the purpose of inducnig motion picture companies to come to this city. A fund of $100,000 to give publicity to San Francisco's advantages from the motion picture standpoint was proposed.

News of Nevada

GLEN HURST, who has two houses in Reno, Nev., is chairman of the committee which is preparing a three-day Fourth of July celebration in Reno, consisting of a Rodeo and carnival.

J. W. FLOOD of Fallon, Nev., has just received plans from the architect for a $50,000 theatre in his town. The theatre will be up-to-date in all respects and will have a seating capacity of about 1,000.

GEORGE EWAN of Orpheum, Lovelocks, Nev., has closed his theatre for the months of June and July for repairs and because of the hot weather.

H. C. OASTLER, American theatre, Winnemucca, Nev., has opened an open air dancing pavilion for the summer months.

JULES E. SMITH, of Tonapah has opened up the Liberty theatre which has been closed for some time, and is running it on Saturday and Sunday nights to take care of the overflow from his regular theatre, the Butler.

Salt Lake and Vicinity

"BILLY" WALL, of the Vitagraph exchange has been made specialty salesman for Vitagraph and is covering the key towns of the intermountain country. He is now in Montana and working his way back to Salt Lake.

The Larry Seaman comedies are being booked in the leading theaters of the state according to the Vitagraph management, and are going big.

W. H. HINTON was in Salt Lake last week and secured bookings of several of the big Universal pictures. He is the manager of the new theater now being completed in Buhl, Idaho. It will cost $15,000 and will seat 500 people. It will be opened on July 15. Mr. Hinton plans on offering vaudeville, lectures and some of the best pictures. He also purchased considerable equipment for the new showhouse while in Salt Lake City.

G. ARCHIBALD, secretary of the C. & A. Amusement company of Pocatello, Idaho, was in Salt Lake last week accompanied by his wife. He stated that business was good in that city and that a prosperous summer was expected. Among the pictures booked by Mr. Archibald was "Destiny."

THE OLYMPIC THEATRE of Pocatello will close for thirty days in order that the theatre may be remodeled. It will open August 1. A big organ will be installed at once.

"DESTINY" has been booked by the C. & A. Amusement company at Pocatello and at the Ogden theatre in Ogden, Utah and negotiations are being made with the Orpheum theatre of Salt Lake for a week's run here.

BURT BICKERT of the Boise Amusement company in Idaho, which has theatres in Boise, Caldwell and Napa, was a Salt Lake visitor last week. Burt managed to call on every exchange and moving picture house in the city.

G. A. METZGER, division manager of the Universal exchange offices in cities west of Denver will be in Salt Lake soon to spend several weeks in perfecting plans for the new Rialto theatre which will open in November.

"ELMO THE MIGHTY" has been booked at the Pantages theatre and will start early in July.

SANTAQUIN, UTAH, will soon have a new $25,000 theatre. Elmer Tiedgen, who is the owner, was in Salt Lake last week and signed a contract for Universal pictures. The new house is to be modern in every respect. Simplex machines will be installed. Photoplay music will be used. The new theatre will seat 400 people and will be open about July 1.

GEORGE CARPENTER, manager of the Paramount-Empress theatre, handled the publicity for the Boy Scout fund drive last week. The committee raised the desired amount two days before the day set for the ending of the campaign.

With the West Coast Exhibitors

M. R. WALSH, well known in theatrical and exchange circles here and in the Middle West, has resigned from the position of manager of the Pickwick theatre, San Diego, Cal., to take effect July 26. He has been in charge of that house since January of this year, during which time he has done much to increase its popularity in the Southern city. His successor has not yet been named nor has Walsh announced his plans.

IRVIN KAISER, former manager of Ei Monterey theatre at San Luis Obispo, Cal., has returned from the trenches in France and resumed the management of that house.

A CORPORATION backed by Mexican capital which controls the field in Mexicali, Baja California, has purchased a site in Calexico, Cal. and begun the construction of a new $50,000 theatre there.

EDRINGTON AND POWELL have bought into the Gayety theatre, San Luis Obispo, and will assume active interest in the management after July 1.

G. A. BUSH, manager of the Superba theatre, San Diego, Cal., passed through Los Angeles this week with a party of friends en route to Yosemite valley by auto.

O. W. LEWIS, of Alhambra, Cal., is re-modeling, preparatory to opening the Alhambra theatre in that place. The new house will seat 600. It is scheduled to open July1 with Dorothy Phillips' latest production, "Destiny." Arrangements have been made for Miss Phillips to appear at the opening in person.

"THE DELICIOUS LITTLE DEVIL," Mae Murray's latest opens at Quinn's Rialto June 29 for a second Broadway showing. Mr. Gates has been put in temporary charge of the theatre during the absence of Quinn who is in New York.

"DESTINY," the most recent Dorothy Phillips picture opened at the Superba theatre here Sunday, June 15 for a two weeks' run.

THE PICKWICK THEATRE, San Diego, Cal., has signed up for four Priscilla Dean and four Mae Murray productions through the local Universal exchange.

"ELMO, THE MIGHTY," Henry McRae's latest Universal serial production, opened Sunday, June 15, at the Garden theatre here. The film was made from the story by Joe Brandt and Will E. Wing and features Elmo Lincoln with Grace Cunard supporting.

Joe Ryan, the bad man of Vitagraph serials, and William Duncan, star and director, talking over a new thriller

In and Around Denver

MILTON COHN, local manager for Paramount, H. I. Krause and O. Wog, Paramount salesmen, are attending the conference of western managers and salesmen at Los Angeles.

H. D. CASSIDY, manager of Exhibitors-Mutual local exchange, is visiting Utah exhibitors. While in Salt Lake he expects to give trade showings of "The Man Who Turned White," and "Just Squaw." He will also give private screenings of the same pictures in Ogden.

R. H. McCLUSKEY has just returned from a very successful trip covering southern Colorado points for Exhibitors-Mutual.

W. C. LEMASTER, manager of the Opera House, Victor, Colo., and his partner, S. N. Ward of the Star theatre at Cripple Creek, Colo., were recently in Denver arranging service.

TOM BUCY of the Lyric at Sterling, Colo., was also a recent Denver visitor.

A. S. KIRKPATRICK, former assistant general manager of Exhibitors Mutual, spent several days here last week. He has just finished a visit with all exchanges and studios on the coast and is now returning to New York.

GUY A PARFET, special feature salesman for Pathe, reports several successful bookings of the Albert Capellani big production, "Oh, Boy!" He has just closed for a first run at the Rivoli on Curtis street, July 2 to 9 inclusive, also booking the same picture for the Lyric, Sterling, Colo., the Liberty Bell at Leadville, and the Ogden theatre, Denver.

What They Say in Seattle

PACIFIC COAST representative Loots, for Select has been at the Seattle office since Al Eden resigned as Northwest manager, until the new manager will arrive.

BOTH stage and screen of the Moore theatre, Seattle, where the Orpheum circuit plays each week, was practically a Mack Sennett week, as his stars were on the stage in their bathing costumes and they were in the film in "Yankee Doodle in Berlin." The Northwest rights to "Yankee Doodle in Berlin" were purchased by the De Luxe Film Company of Seattle. The screen is a remarkable one. It is five reels in length and full of fun, sarcasm and beauty.

DURING the absence of Geo. Endert, manager and Guy Navarre, assist. manager of the Northwest exchange of The Famous Players Lasky Corporation, who have been attending the Western convention of The Famous Plapers corporation in Los Angeles, Ca., Frank Heffron and John D. Howard had the office in charge.

HOWARD J. SHEEHAN succeeds Paul C. Mooney as Pacific Coast representative for Fox.

H. B. DOBBS has resigned from the Select office in Seattle to accept the position as special representative for The First National, working out of the office of the Exhibitor's Film Exchange.

CARL STEARN, Northwest Manager for Metro, has returned from his trip to New York, where he attended the Metro's managers' convention.

THE "BUSY BEE," Hot Springs, Montana, was recently partially destroyed by fire.

San Francisco News

EUGENE ROTH of the California theatre, after reviewing the first Joe Martin comedy entitled, "Roaring Lions and Monkey Shines," at the Strand theatre, New York, immediately on his return to San Francisco got in touch with the Universal Exchange and booked the picture for the week of July 13. The exchange feels that this is a big boost in the introduction of Martin to the San Francisco fans.

THE Universal Exchange has just closed a contract with George Mann of the Rialto for "Elmo the Mighty," the wonderful two reel serial feature, beginning July 6. Ralph Ruffner the new manager of the Rialto is reported to have some great stuff up his sleeve in the way of advertising the serial and the Universal feels particularly elated over the fact that this is the first serial at any of the first run houses on Market street for some years.

EDWARD WALDO, Auditor of the Fox Film Corporation, is in San Francisco on business for a few days. He goes north from here.

H. W. SCHMIDT, formerly local manager of the General in this city and afterwards in Los Angeles, this week assumed the management of the Film Clearing House, succeeding Murray Hawkins. He is making extensive alterations in the exchange headquarters. He says the Rothapfel program is being booked rapidly. It will have its first run in this city at the Rialto.

E. O. CHILD, manager of the Pathe Exchange, is taking a trip over the north coast of the State and will be away about ten days.

GEORGE C. PARSONS, manager of the Goldwyn exchanges is on a week's trip through the valley in his new Peerless 8.

G. A. METCALFE announces that he has been appointed distributor for the National Carbons. A full carload of assorted sizes is already en route from the factory.

MANAGER CLOVER, formerly of the Stockton T. & D. theatre has an interest and will be manager of a new house which is being erected in the Oriental district of Stockton. The new house has the backing of the Japanese association of Stockton and it will be the equal in appearance of any house in the city. Already the two other houses in the Oriental district are feeling the prospective competition and in order to influence their clients each has dropped its price from 10 to 5 cents.

MAX DUPONT, camera man, is just back from Lake Tahoe where he has been making pictures for "The Wolf" for the Vitagraph.

HENRY WALTHAL, with the National, was in San Francisco this week, and shot some scenes for a picture the National is making.

BARNEY GOODMAN of the Kinema theatre, Fresno, motored in from Fresno this week and spent a couple of days in San Francisco.

W. H. WEEKS, San Francisco architect, is planning a $100,000 theatre to be built on East Main street, Turlock. Turner & Dahnken have taken a lease on the theatre.

JERRY PONCHIE has started the erection of a new theatre at Sparks, Nev. He will visit San Francisco in July to arrange for the fittings.

Dealing in Personalities

EARL HAMMONS is back from Europe, with a broad smile on his face. He modestly admits that a big deal was put over while he was on the other side and that it will pay to keep an eye on "Educational" activities in the future.

Also, if you press him, he'll tell you what he thinks is the biggest event in screen history in months. "Just think," he says, "the Robert Bruce subject, 'Sundown' is the first single reel attraction to follow in the footsteps of 'The Red Lantern' and 'The Knickerbocker Buckaroo' and play a first run at the Rialto followed by a week at the Rivoli."

After that he won't say much. Just looks mysterious and tells you to wait.

Alright, Harry, we'll take your tip. The one you sent in this morning's mail, we mean. The one that reads: "Don't go away over the week-end. 'When Bearcat Went Dry' arrives next Saturday." We won't go any further than Elmhurst, Harry, and there isn't a projection room in the town.

LAST week we received a wire from your old friend, Mabel Condon, reading: "William Russell will appreciate your denying story published in various papers that he will appear in all-star productions of Louis Gasnier and Sidney L. Cohen. Mr. Russell leaving for New York Monday to sign contract with producing firm which has studios in both East and on Coast. Announcements will be made by firm upon Mr. Russell's arrival."

Mr. Russell hasn't arrived as yet so the announcements are still in abeyance. And since we don't deal in rumors we are not able to tell you in this week's issue that William Fox has signed William Russell. We'll have to wait till next week to tell you about it. Shucks, it's a tough life when you have to wait for "announcements."

If Harry Crandall keeps on appearing in New York with such frequency we will get real mean and start a rumor that he is taking over a New York theatre. Of course, he has nothing of the kind in mind, but it's easy to start rumors and you'd be surprised at the way they spread. In fact a rumor on Broadway can spread almost as fast as the "Harry Crandall chain of Washington theatres" and that's going some.

WE'VE got lots of zippy reading matter for you in this issue—just to show that every issue in the new size is going to be a feature issue. Turn to Page 299 and read "This Boy is Sore." It's a letter from an exhibitor with a grouch and if it doesn't give you a smile—and then a few real serious thoughts—we'll miss our guess. Right on the same page you'll find other interesting odds and ends. Then, if you want concentrated pepper, go on to Page 308. "Letters From Readers" would be a mild term to use on this page so we have headed it "One Page of Dynamite." And the headline speaks the truth. If there is one thing an exhibitor does love to do it is to pan.

There's a real idea suggested on this page,

too—in the letter from a New England exhibitor who wants to know if the boosted rentals and boosted admissions are not bringing many exhibitors in middle sized communities dangerously near to thoughts of vaudeville. "My people are asking for vaudeville," he says, "and if I could be sure of the quality I would give it to them."

This is just a private word to John Zanft to tip him off to the fact that in Harry MacDonald, of the Fox theatre forces, he has a Class A, high-calibred "Best Man." We know—for we saw Harry officiate in the cut-away on Wednesday of this week. And just to make our story complete we may as well tell you that the groom was Donald O'Brien, of the Springfield, Mass., Union; the bride, Miss Florence Duffy; the brides-maid, Miss Irene Duffy. Here's a couple of pages of good wishes!

METRO'S exchange managers convention brought forth the full announcement of its Fall plans. Arthur Kane announces another star this week in the person of Constance Binney. Famous Players-Lasky has finished "announcing" and is now off at full speed on the real work. The next week or so should bring the Goldwyn announcement—and we can slip you the tip now that we understand it will be a hummer. About four or five weeks from now should see the First National organization announcing some bang-up plans. Oh, there won't be any reason for monotony. Meanwhile, we'd hate to be in the position of an exhibitor trying to decide on his booking policy for the coming Fall and Winter seasons. Everything said by every company sounds so good and looks so good that it sure would have us guessing.

Gosh, boys, you don't know how good we felt on Friday, Saturday and Monday when you were phoning congratulations and good wishes on the new enlarged NEWS. Each time we hung up the receiver we said to ourselves, "Say, that fellow made us feel good. Wonder what we can do to help him even more than we ever have?" We just wanted to break our blamed necks giving SERVICE. And we feel that way now.

Convention Headlights

WITH three hundred delegates present the annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America opened at the Statler Hotel, St. Louis, on June 24.

Addresses were delivered by Mayor Kiel of St. Louis, President Johnson of the local Chamber of Commerce, John Ring, Advertising Club President.

A further session was held during a trip down the Mississippi River. Many entertainments were provided for those in attendance during the three days.

Mentioned for the next President during the opening session were the names of Marcus Loew and Frank Rembusch.

Loew made an early announcement of his intention to build two theatres, each to cost a million dollars and to seat forty-four hundred people. These will be erected in St. Louis.

Among those listed in filmdom's "Who's Who" in attendance are: Fred C. Aiken of Chicago; S. J. Baker, St. Louis; Dan Barton, Chicago; Samuel I. Berman, New York; Alfred S. Black, Rockland, Maine; George Blaisdell, New York; Louis F. Blumenthal, New York; D. E. Boswell, St. Louis; Samuel Bowman, St. Louis; L. W. Brophy, Muskogee, Okla.; Herman J. Brown, Boise, Idaho; Sam Bullock, Cleveland; Harry Buxbaum, Pittsburg; Maurice A. Choyinski, Chicago; Dale J. Crittenberger, Indianapolis; R. H. Debruler, Atlanta; Abe Frankel, Des Moines; W. H. Gueringer, New Orleans; T. R. Gillian, Chicago.

Charles W. Harden, Kansas City; Ernest H. Horstmann, Boston; Fred J. Herrington, Pittsburg; Frank G. Heller, Anderson, Ind.; Miss E. Johnson, Houston, Texas; Mr. and Mrs. R. G. Liggett, Kansas City; Robert R. Levy, Chicago; Al Lichtman, New York; Joseph Mogler, St. Louis; Sam E. Morris, New York; Frank L. Newman, Kansas City; C. C. Pettijohn, New York; Ralph O. Proctor, New York; D. G. Rodgers, Kansas City; Charles R. Rodgers, New York; Sydney Reynolds, New York; Hunt Stromberg, New York; J. H. Saenger, New Orleans; Peter J. Schaeffer, Chicago; H. J. Terry, Chicago; William Wright, New York; Marcus Loew, Jack Woody and Milton Goldsmith.

Here Comes the Doctor!

Arthur Nelson, of the Dominion Film Corporation Presents an Ambitious Plan to Cure the Industry's Ills

PRACTICALLY all the objectionable renditions complained of in this industry are traceable to three principal causes, i.e., wasteful distributing system, unbusinesslike exhibiting policies and inefficient direction of production activity. The urgent need of the industry, therefore, is for a more scientific adjustment of its economic machinery. Present methods are archaic—so much so that they would not be tolerated in any other business. While it is true that efforts have been made to effect an adjustment it is equally true that such efforts have usually deteriorated into personal admiration platitudes or resolved themselves into mere compromises. Of all the remedies offered not one has contained the fundamental elements of a cure. This obtains because we persist in treating effect, instead of bending our energies to eliminate the cause.

If any industry, other than amusements, was suffering from offensive and unjustifiable conditions, as concededly bad as they are in this industry, its exponents, thru the compelling application of economic presure if not thru sheer pride, would bring about the needed adjustment—nor would they talk about it for twenty years as we have done, and are still doing. Modern business engineers thoroughly conversant not only with the intricacies of the industry in question but with the principles of scientific business economics in particular, would bring their trained intelligence to bear and a solution of the problem, irrespective as to its complexity, would be speedily—even noiselessly—provided.

If this is true of other industries, and business history will amply substantiate such a premise, are we then to assume that our own industry is suffering largely on account of the fact that we have not got the necessary trained intelligence with which to bring about an organized and equitable readjustment which would be reasonably satisfactory and permanent? Other writers, more daring than myself, have repeated and contended that we have no big calibre men. Whether such assertions are true or not it is true that none have as yet come forward to deny by a constructive act, so scarifying an indictment. It is on this account that I am constrained to step into the breach and offer, for the earnest consideration of exhibitors, distributors and producers alike, a number of corrective measures which I feel will, if put into practice, eliminate the conditions complained of, and to substitute in their stead exhibiting, distributing and manufacturing policies which will make for a more equitable readjustment and distribution of individual obligations, a better understanding between opposing factions and a fuller and deeper faith in economy, usefulness and progressiveness, which are the life blood of any industry that is to endure.

The builder who would build a mightier and more enduring structure upon the bare foundation of an old and obsolete structure, which has outlived its usefulness, must not only tear down the interfering parts of the old building—he must broaden and strengthen the foundation upon which the new is to rest. Any re-building that promises less than this would be a compromise—and the time for compromise is past.

As the present distributing system is the real under-lying cause of a large part of the evil from which the industry is suffering THE FIRST THING TO BE DONE IS TO WIPE OUT THE PRESENT SYSTEMS OF BOOKING AND DISTRIBUTING AND ERECT IN THEIR PLACE A STRICTLY OPEN MARKET BOOKING AND CENTRAL CLEARING-HOUSE DISTRIBUTING SYSTEM, FOR EACH DISTRICT, WHERE ALL PRODUCTIONS, IRRESPECTIVE AS TO WHO PRODUCED THEM, MAY BE SCREENED WITHOUT PREJUDICE, AND BOOKED BY EXHIBITORS UPON A BASIS OF "SELECTION BY MERIT ONLY."

This would centralize distribution in each Exchange district, eliminate hundreds of exchanges with their enormous overhead, conserve valuable time now wasted in useless effort, bring exhibitors and distributors in closer touch with each other, and do away with the present necessity for certain types of distributors. It would, in fact, put each branch of the industry where it belongs—producing in the hands of the producer, distributing in the hands of the distributor and exhibiting in the hands of the exhibitor.

The abuses of the present system, working through the natural laws of evolution, would in themselves sooner or later effect a radical change in present methods and bring about the solution I propose. (The First National, United and other co-operative distribution systems are simply a step in this direction.) Evolution, however, moves slowly, and when it moves too slow necessity is prone to call in revolution to assist her in putting her house in order. This is particularly a case wherein the industry hasn't the time to wait on evolution to do the work for it—the remedy calls for action.

There are a great many reasons why the plan proposed will solve existing problems, some of which are as follows:

(1) Pictures under this system would be marketed strictly on merit, which would do more to speed up quality of productions than any other one factor in this business.

(2) It would give good pictures an opportunity to be booked but which now, as in the case of big independent productions, are shut out of whole territories by the present insane policy of buying "pigs in a poke"—irrespective as to what they may turn out to be—good, bad, or indifferent.

(3) It would place stars according to the value of their (each) offering, eliminate the "pets" of directors (corporate as well as dramatic) and give budding genius a chance to be seen if not heard.

(4) It would encourage independent productions and throw the door wide open to merit plus.

(5) It would effectually close the door against mediocrity, as well as questionable promotion schemes and film-alley speculators, and write finis to a number of names and methods which are a detriment to the industry.

(6) It would eliminate favoritism and special privilege, and put the production and marketing of pictures upon a business basis.

(7) It would give talent an opportunity and incentive to express itself, and compel production efficiency according to the tested and accepted laws of business economics.

(8) It would remove the necessity for, and the expense of, the distributor-to-exhibitor publicity bunk which at present fills the waste baskets of the exhibitor, and for all of which he pays—one way or another.

(9) It would do away with useless misrepresentative trade-paper advertising, and encourage something more constructive to take it's place.

(10) It would insure Service that would be a reality and not a promise.

(11) It would serve to eliminate some of the "supervising" abominations whose sole reason for existence is their money interest in an art of which they know little, and appreciate less.

(12) It would permit the manufacturer to concentrate the major portion of time to making good pictures instead of forcing him to spend ninety per cent of his time, as he now does, to selling bad ones.

(13) It would insure a standard-market for the best available authors, and give encouragement to the creation and perpetuation of a literature adaptable and peculiar to the special needs of the Silent Art—an encouragement which, with our present hysteria for big names and little stories, is now sadly lacking.

EDITOR'S NOTE

¶ J. Arthur Nelson, of the Dominion Film Corporation, Seattle, Washington, has complained that the various discussions on the industry's problems during the past year have failed to offer anything constructive.

¶ So he has come to the front with an ambitious programme that is aimed to cure the ills of production, distribution and exhibition.

¶ Many will call his ideas Utopian.

¶ But they are interesting, at least.

¶ Three articles will appear in the series, touching on the three main divisions mentioned above.

ODDS AND ENDS OF INTEREST

The Fifty Per Cent Tax

Motion Picture News Secures Ruling on Various Angles of Puzzle in Revenue Law

MOTION PICTURE NEWS has finally succeeded in securing an interpretation from the Internal Revenue Department at Washington of Paragraph 4, Section 800, Title VIII of the Revenue Act of 1919, which requires: "A tax equivalent to fifty per centum of the amount for which the proprietors, managers or employees of any opera house, theatre, or other place of amusement sell or dispose of tickets or cards of admission in excess of the regular or established price or charge therefor."

Following is a questionnaire submitted to the Revenue Department on this section, with the replies, as given by J. E. Walker, Deputy Commissioner of Internal Revenue, following each question in italics:

1. Does an exhibitor come within the provision of the 50 per cent. tax if it is his "regular and established" practice to charge 15 cents admission for ordinary programs and 25 cents for such programs as are clearly and definitely known in the trade as "special" attractions.——No 50 per cent. tax on such attractions.

2. If it is ruled that he comes within the provision of the 50 per cent. tax on such occasions, would his position be improved if on all advertising matter and announcements throughout the year he made it clear and plain that the "regular and established price of admission" for such special attractions was greater than for ordinary programs.——Answered in No. 1.

3. Is an exhibitor obliged to pay a 50 per cent. tax on the increased price of admission, if for example, it is his "regular and established practice" to ask 15 cents on Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays, Thursdays and Fridays and to increase to 25 cents on Saturday and Sunday performances.——No.

4. If, in this last mentioned case, he is absolved from paying the 50 per cent. tax, would it not be possible for him to make it clear on his program and other printed matter that it was his "regular and established" practice to charge a certain price on certain days and an increased price of a certain amount on other days.——This would be permitted.

5. In this case it can be seen that the exhibitor would establish certain specified days of the week on which he would show the "special" attractions, costing him considerably more for rental and other expenses and making necessary an increased admission price.——This is permitted and the exhibitor exempt from the 50 per cent. tax.

A Few Things That Happened and Some That Were Merely Promised This Week Five Years Ago

CURRENT serials are "Lucille Love," featuring Grace Cunard and Francis Ford, released by Universal in fifteen installments, and "The Perils of Pauline," starring Pearl White, released by Eclectic Feature Film Exchanges.

Warner Brothers' exchanges are offering a good list of six-reel features.

Beatriz Michelena, the beautiful and celebrated prima donna, will appear in a number of dramatic motion pictures with House Peters for California Motion Pitcure Corporation.

Essanay offers "One Wonderful Night" in four reels, starring Francis X. Bushman.

Thirty Famous Players Film Company features are offered each year. Daniel Frohman offers Mary Pickford in "The Eagle's Mate."

Forty-eight branch exchanges are announced by General Film Company, covering the entire United States.

The Duke of Manchester, associated with Rev. William Carter, Rev. Chas. H. Parkhurst, S. S. McClure and Henry Clews, have organized a $500,000 film company to produce educational films to supply churches, colleges and schools.

H. E. Aitken and C. J. Hite are again selected to head the Mutual Film Corporation.

William A. Pinkerton in an address before the International Association of Police Chiefs urged that they request the motion picture producers to eliminate crime scenes in their offerings, arguing that the ideas bred crimes.

Eleanor Gates, the authoress, has formed her own motion picture producing company.

Mary Fuller, the Edison star, has just signed with Universal.

Special scenery had to be built by Popular Plays and Players to successfully produce "The Ragged Earl."

Charles Stombaugh, manager of the General Film Company exchange at Omaha, is said to know almost personally every one of the 275 exhibitors in the states of Iowa, Nebraska and South Dakota.

This Boy is Sore!

Got a Grouch—Blamed If We Don't Think He Is Justified—Against the Whole Darned Business

UNFORTUNATELY—for the sake of our story—the exhibitor who wrote the following letter squeezed the phrase "not for publication" in the first line of his screed. But we have read his letter over so many times and with such whole-hearted enjoyment that we can't withhold it. Even if the only clue we can give to the writer's identity is to say that he is running a first class theatre in a first class town.

The letter follows:

"I am in receipt of your letter asking for a photograph and in reply, not for publication, will say that I don't care for it. I want as few of my old time friends as possible to know that I am in this business.

"I would be tickled to death to be able to get out, even at actual cost. But I am getting deeper than ever in self protection.

"Don't think by this that I am not what one would call a success. For during my eight years here I have trimmed up eight competitors, some of them good ones, and have had the field to myself for nearly half that time. I am now building a seventy-five thousand dollar nine hundred seat house.

"Affairs with the public and my neighbors are all that one could ask. But these shyster exchanges—and that includes about all of them—disgust one with the whole business. Things have come to a fine pass when I can't get a one sheet poster without a C. O. D.—when I have never owed anyone a single dollar over Saturday night. What's more they all know it. But it's all because there are a few crooked ones in my end of the game who wouldn't pay if they could.

"Until this recent FILM Club combination I never stood for a C. O. D. from anyone, but now they are all allowed to come that way. I hope they like it—it gets their money a week or ten days later than under the old system. Although it costs me some I don't mind if it costs twice as much. If all exhibitors would do this it would put some common business sense in them. It is merely a scheme to get more cash to operate on.

"I worked twenty years in a National Bank and I believe I am competent to know right from wrong. Most exchanges are crooked.

"So far as giving credit where credit is due—one of them would not credit me with an item of eleven dollars accrued shortage on paper orders when they even admitted the shortage. It was the old steam roller—they had some fifty dollars of my money from advance deposits which I had neglected to deduct when the star contracts expired so they just refused to remit the overpayment.

"Another of the old established exchanges gave me a contract for one every other week, accepted a twenty-five dollar advance deposit, and then told me that I must play one every week. I was unable to do that and they refused to return the cash or give me service for it. It was fully six months before I got it through a new contract."

Second Appearance of the Department that Gives You a Chance to Meet the "Real Boys"

FRED DAHNKEN doesn't need any more said about him than the facts you can glean from the Turner and Dahnken letter-head. Mr. Dahnken is president and general manager of that organization, which, the letterhead informs you, is "Member of the First National Exhibitors Circuit.—Controlling T. & D. Circuit of Theatres.—Tivoli Opera House, San Francisco, New T. & D. in Oakland, and T. & D. theatres in Berkeley, Sacramento, Stockton, Watsonville, San Jose and Richmond."

That letter-head says a lot—we'll say so!

MERLE DAVIS watched the film game from the side lines for six years including two years as cartoonist and publicity man for S & C Vaudeville in Butte, Mont., and then broke into the game in November, 1918, as general manager of the Ansonia Amusement Co. This organization operates the Ansonia, Orpheum and Broadway Theatre, in Butte, Marlow, Helena; in addition to playing Pantages vaudeville in a string of houses.

General conditions in Montana are reported pretty good, though Butte is a little off on account of local labor trouble.

AS a youth, John H. Kunsky, of Detroit, used to repair leaks in kitchen pipes. They couldn't come big enough to interest him particularly, and when he heard that theatre box offices had infinitely larger leaks much more difficult to repair, Kunsky cast off the plumber's uniform and went after new game.

Just how successful he has been in soldering box office leaks is indicated by the list of Detroit theatres now under his control. They number ten, with more in prospect.

Kunsky is a unique composite of showman, organizer, and business man. To his mind entertainment is a commodity that must be sold to the public. This reasoning made him consider keenly the ways and means by which he could do it most successfully. A convert to organization, he has welded his staff of managers, assistant managers, advertising and publicity men, and other theatre employees into a very effective sales force. Managers hold daily meetings. They discuss methods and systems for pleasing the public. "Service" is not a word to the Kunsky forces. It is a religion to be practised twenty-four hours a day.

He believes in co-operation and the strength of numbers. When J. D. Williams first presented to Kunsky the plan for First National Exhibitors' Circuit it required just thirty minutes of questioning by the premier Detroit exhibitor to satisfy him. Then he wrote his check.

"It's organization," he said. "That's what this business needs."

A new Kunsky theatre is even now in the formative stages. It will be a typical Kunsky enterprise—two jumps ahead of anything his patrons anticipate or expect for the future.

WELL, well—here's our old friend Frank Rembusch, of Indiana. Yes, an old friend—and still we'll wager that all these years you have been reading about Frank Rembusch in the trade papers you haven't read much about the man himself.

You've read of things he was doing for exhibitor organization; you've read of things he was saying about exhibitor organization; but how much have you read about Frank himself and his theatres?

We'll tell it all now. Frank has been an exhibitor since 1904. At the present date his Indiana theatres include the Alhambra, the American in Columbus, Grace in Martinsville, Maxine in Martinsville, Gem and Manhattan in Indianapolis—and, of course, there's a new one building in Indianapolis now. Seems to us every exhibitor in the country is building a new theatre these days.

Frank has no partners, and still he finds time to run a screen factory along with his theatres. But he confesses "My managers are the best." His theatres run everything in pictures—features, serials, short subjects, etc. The "show on schedule" is one of his hobbies, however, as is his belief in big but truthful advertising. Pictures for the Rembusch houses are carefully selected with "the happy side of life" uppermost in mind.

P. S.—The photo above was taken ten years ago. But Frank won't get another taken because he declares "I can never look as young again." But we'll wager he felt as young in St. Louis this week. There's nothing like a convention to liven up the Sage of Shelbyville.

PERCY W. WELLS is president of Howard-Wells Amusement Company, Inc., of Wilmington, N. C., controlling the amusement situation in Wilmington.

And if you don't believe that Wells holds the whip here's the list—the Grand, Bijou, Royal, Victoria and Academy of Music are the theatres, and just to "catch 'em" when the hot weather comes, Lakeside Park is also on the Wells list.

The Bijou Theatre was the first motion picture theatre in Wilmington—only in those days they called them "nickleodeons." Not only was it the first in Wilmington, but it is declared that the records show it to be the third in the South. If you don't believe that Percy Wells is the original "old-time showman," ask Lieut. Jim Anderson to start on a story-telling bee.

D. M. Bain is the live wire who does the booking and publicity work for the Wells houses. Although within the original draft age, this boy Bain boasts of nine years newspaper experience and four years with wells.

J. H. SPENCER is managing the Winding Gulf Exhibitors Circuit, of Winding Gulf, West Virginia. Fifteen Raleigh County houses are in the organization. Describing the workings of the organization, Mr. Spencer said to our representative recently:

"The greater number of our houses are small, but we are making an effort to use the best service and are doing so. Although every effort is made to run our theatres in an up-to-date way, the real object of our work is to entertain and educate our people who are working in the coal fields. Open market contracts are used exclusively and the programs carefully selected for each day. Our greatest difficulty is found in getting first run service because of our distance from the exchanges, so that too much time is lost in transit for the sum our houses can afford to pay."

The Fellows Who Fight in the Front Line

WHEN L. A. Burnstine, of the Star and Lyric theatres, Lincoln, Ill., returned from service in khaki to the town of Lincoln the local newspaper ran the photo above and captioned it "Who's Back?" Some stunt, we'll say.

Then when we asked Mr. Burnstine about conditions in his territory he wrote us, "Conditions here have not been of the best. Just what the trouble is I cannot say as I have just returned from the service and haven't really had time to turn around—as you can see from the photo."

Yes, we see it.

"The entire time I was in the service," continued Mr. Burnstine, "I was a constant reader of MOTION PICTURE NEWS and when I received my discharge I found myself quite familiar with the game despite a year's absence."

"LUBLINER and Trinz" means a lot in Chicago, and it means a lot in New York too if you have heard—as we have—the tone the magnates use when telling you that Lubliner and Trinz are playing their picture over the circuit.

Harry M. Lubliner, shown in the photo above, and Joseph Trinz make up the firm of which so much has been heard.

It's dangerous to give you a list of the Lubliner and Trinz houses because every now and then a new one is added to the roster. But the latest record available shows their name over the door at these Chicago theatres: Biograph, Covent Garden, Knickerbocker, Michigan, Pantheon, Oak Park, Paramount, Vitagraph, West End and Pershing. Headquarters for the circuit are in the Kimball Building.

CHARLES B. PAINE is running the Morgan theatre, with a capacity of one thousand, and the Yale, seating five hundred, both at Henryette, Oklahoma. And if the oil boom should send his town up he is prepared to open the Royal theatre, which just now is housing a grocery store.

Just now an Oklahoma man has to give "tab" shows—mostly girls—to get the business so the "tab" and feature pictures combine at the Royal. Paramount-Artcraft, World and Select features get good words from Mr. Paine, while Pathe, Universal and Vitagraph serials find favor, for his folks "like Western serials with lots of action and shoot 'em up stuff."

Bre'er Paine confesses that he is playing the oil game himself, "but so far no luck. I always have an interest in dry holes."

QUITE a number of film salesmen and others who travel over the country have told us of the livewire Weil organization up in Port Huron, Michigan. And taking a look at Herbert L. Weil we can see that they haven't exaggerated.

Mr. Weil entered the picture field as an exhibitor in 1917 which doesn't seem so long ago but his list already includes five theatres in Port Huron. They are the Majestic, Family, American, Maxine and Bijou.

Only the highest class attractions are run at the Weil houses, with a leaning towards the open market feature that can stand on its individual merits. Mr. Weil finds the outlook for next season very encouraging.

"I really don't know what I would do without MOTION PICTURE NEWS," wrote Mr. Weil to us once. "It comes like a letter from home each week."

Shake Hands With the Regular Fellows

F. L. O'LEARY is one exhibitor who ought to know how to handle those pestiferous fillum salesmen and the majestic exchange managers. For Mr. O'Leary at one time travelled through South Texas for the Consolidated Film and Supply Company, and also had his turn at managing with the Super-Feature Film Co., of Dallas and Waco.

Just now Mr. O'Leary is running the Queen theatre, at Eagle Lake, Texas. The house is an up-to-date small-town theatre, boasting of proper projection and good music. "It looks to me," said Mr. O'Leary to our representative, "As though 1919-20 will be the big season in the show games. We now get twenty-five cents admission where last year we could not get ten cents and keep our heads above water. I believe that if given good pictures, music, and good projection they are always willing to pay for it."

N. H. CASEY, who runs the New Royal and Alhambra Theatres in Evansville, Indiana, took over the former when it was a run down place showing to a few hundred people a week; now it shows to over five thousand a week with four hundred seats. That's what it is to run a first class theatre with five large factories feeding you. Mr. Casey is also connected with the municipal government as Chief Sanitary Officer, in addition to being proprietor of the Crescent City Disinfectant Co.

Wonder if he uses any of it on his pictures?

B. DATTOLA came into this picture business back in 1911 and is now manager of the Strand Theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa. The state right productions find a home in the Strand, as well as Universal, Pathe and American features. Universal serials are among his popular bets. Mr. Dattola's reports show conditions as being satisfactory and in a recent letter to us declared, "Motion Picture News is the key to the whole business for any exhibitor. It is the best of all the trade publications and the exhibitor who reads it need not worry about being in touch with the business."

BACK in 1910 Jack F. Truitt entered the picture business. He is now president of the organization running the Sedalia theatre, at Sedalia, Mo., and the Grand theatre at a nearby town.

Mr. Truitt finds that conditions in his section have been fairly good since the first of the year, and doesn't complain about war conditions which, he says: "Held up as well as could be epected. The attractions we get are of the highest class, as our houses cater to the better grade of patronage. We give the presentation end considerable of our personal attention, using special stage settings, an eight-piece orchestra, etc. It is in connection with the presentation that I find MOTION PICTURE NEWS the most helpful, for I can truthfully say that the suggestions in any one issue will more than pay for a year's subscription."

Realart Signs A Young Broadway Star

Constance Binney, Much Sought After Young Ingenue of Stage Success "39 East" is Added to Growing List of Realart Celebrities

A CONTRACT assuring the company of her services for a period of several years has been signed by Constance Binney, star of "39 East," the Broadway success, with Realart Picture Corporation. Miss Binney's acquisition follows closely on the signing of Mary Miles Minter by this new concern.

Miss Binney is to continue her stage work in "39 East," which despite the hot weather is one of the few New York shows still playing to capacity houses, and later will go on tour with the play, making pictures for Realart at the same time. It is probable her first release will be made when the play goes on tour.

It is understood there were several concerns bidding for Miss Binney's signature. She has heretofore appeared in but three screen productions, and scored a success from the outstart.

Favored Dancer

This young actress flashed across the horizon of the great metropolis as a dancer in the premier production of the bright and tuneful "Oh Lady, Lady!" Although in this part she was seen and not heard, the metropolitan critics registered deep and fervent approval of her dancing and predicted great things.

The big chance did not come in her next part—the ingenue role of "Lucy" in the Winthrop Ames Production, "From Saturday to Monday,"—but it did come when she was assigned to play the stellar role in the Rachel Crothers comedy, "39 East." This play has created a veritable furore of public favor and in all the excellent character delineations the work of Constance Binney stands out most conspicuously. The young star has been before the public for only two seasons, and is not yet old enough to cast her first vote. She was born in New York, but lately has called Philadelphia her home.

She made her first screen appearance in Maurice Tourneur's production of "Sporting Life," adapted from the Drury Lane melodrama. Because of her aptitude for photo dramatic impersonation, Miss Binney was cast for leads with John Barrymore in two famous Players-Lasky pictures. "Here Comes the Bride!" a farce comedy, adapted from the stage play of the same name, and "The Test of Honor," a psychological drama. Her performance in each, calling for such a variety of acting, certainly stamp her as one of the most versatile of our younger actresses.

Miss Binney's first vehicle with Realart is "Erstwhile Susan," the Broadway success of a season or two ago, with Mrs. Fiske as the star.

In Realart pictures it is promised nothing will be left undone to bring to the screen all the winsomeness and charm of her beauty and youth.

Convention Delegates of Pathe Exchange

Pathe Exchange, Inc., will be well represented at the national convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., to be held in St. Louis, Mo., on June 25, 26, 27 and 28.

The Pathe representatives will be headed by Fred C. Quimby, Director of Exchanges. The Pathe feature stars will be represented by Frank Keenan, who releases his productions through Pathe. The serial stars will be represented by Charles Hutchison, the "stunt" man, whose latest serial, "The Great Gamble," will be releasd on August 3rd.

Mr. Quimby, Mr. Keenan and Mr. Hutchison will remain in St. Louis during the entire convention.

Correction

A slip of the pen last week made Motion Picture News caption a photograph of Nat Friend with the line General Manager, Paramount-Bray Pictograms." Mr. Friend, who was formerly connected with the Bray Studios, though not as general manager, will now conduct a Paramount pictorial magazine. This latter release is in no way connected with the Bray organization.

James S. Judd Answers Last Call

With poignant regret we announce the death on June 24 of James S. Judd, for three years Circulation and Office Manager of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

The funeral was held on June 26 from his late residence, 925 Park Ave., New York City. Interment was made at Flushing, L. I., in which city Mr. Judd was born in 1863.

Descended from a family which for several generations had been connected with the publishing business, James S. Judd early made his mark in the industry. Prior to his connection with MOTION PICTURE NEWS he had reached success as Circulation Manager for Vogue and for Vanity Fair. His name was widely known in motion picture and publishing circles.

Fineman Heads Corporation

Attractions Distributing Corp. Formed in Albany; to Handle Big Films

A NEW film releasing organization, the Attractions Distributing Corporation, was incorporated last week in Albany with B. P. Fineman as president, J. G. Bachmann treasurer and Henry Herzbrun secretary. The papers were filed by Mr. Herzbrun, who is a well known attorney at 60 Wall Street. The corporation has no authorized capitalization, and the stock which has no par value, is held among a limited number of shareholders.

The Attractions Distributing Corporation will release a number of motion picture attractions during the coming year. It has already acquired the distributing rights to the Katherine MacDonald productions, through Mr. Fineman, and is expected to announce shortly the names of several other stars and star producers whose pictures it will release.

In connection with the formation of the Attractions Distributing Corporation, Mr. Fineman issued the following statement:

"The Attractions Distributing Corporation was organized to afford a releasing outlet for the independent motion picture producer. It will release only productions that are worthy to be called attractions.

"The Katherine MacDonald productions are a series that are illustrative of the type of picture we will release. Miss MacDonald is a star by virtue of sheer ability and personality.

"We already have under way negotiations with several other stars and star directors, for the distribution of their productions, and in every case their previous work has been of such character as to guarantee that their future pictures will rank as 'attractions.'

"Of course, different types of productions will demand different methods of distribution. In every case the problem presented by a picture, or a series, will be carefully studied, and the most advantageous method of distribution, suitable to that type of production, will be adopted."

Al Lichtman Attending St. Louis Convention

Al Lichtman, General Manager of the Department of Distribution of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has gone to St. Louis where, at the invitation of the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, he will address the members of that organization assembled in convention.

Mr. Lichtman, in addition to speaking upon the subject chosen for him by those in charge of the program, will carry the message of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, regarding its plans for the coming season, direct to the exhibitors. He will also hold a trade showing of the first two Paramount-Artcraft productions for the year, Elsie Ferguson in "The Witness for the Defense" and Wallace Reid in "The Valley of the Giants," which will be released the first week in September.

Heads Richmond Office of First National

Carl F. Sennings, formerly Office Manager, late Special Representative of the Fox Office, Washington, D. C., recently resigned from Fox, has accepted the management of the Richmond office of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. Mr. Sennings has been with Fox of Washington for some five years. He is known by every Southern exhibitor as being a clean exchange manager.

Mr. C. R. Beacham will remain in charge of the Atlanta office.

Metro Discloses Plans for New Season

Members of the Southeastern Theatre Managers' Association at a banquet given at the Hotel Ansley, Atlanta

Big Plays Acquired—Open Booking—Extensive Advertising and Fewer and Better Pictures Is on Company's New Program

ACQUISITION of thirty Broadway successes and big novels, and abolishment of the company's program pictures after September 1, are the predominating points answering the question "What is Metro going to do?"

W. E. Atkinson, General Manager of Metro, announced these facts of the company's program and plans for the new season, at the fourth annual convention of Exchange Managers held at the Hotel Astor, New York.

"Fewer and better pictures regardless of commercial consideration of time involved in production; open booking and especial attention to big theatres; improved exhibitor service and a newer and larger publicity policy"—those are the outstanding features of Metro's plans.

With its recent changes in personelle and its newly decided change in policy, Metro aims to pull far toward the front rank of producers this season.

To Contend with Best

The change from program to superfeatures means, Mr. Atkinson explained, that the company has entered the motion picture field as a contender for first honors.

The new system under which the company will operate has occupied the attention of Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro, and his executives for the past year, and the plans that have been perfected permit of immediate inauguration of the new policy, Mr. Atkinson pointed out. The erection of the company's million dollar studios on the coast had been made with this end in view, he said, and Mr. Rowland's trip abroad to enlarge the company's activities there and arrange for Metro producing pictures in Europe were a part of the new production plans.

The big stage plays acquired by the company for its stars, which will be made by Screen Classics, Inc., and distributed by Metro, include not only recent long run Broadway successes but plays that have been popular for years but which heretofore have been unobtainable for screen purposes.

Three of these will be placed in production at once by Maxwell Karger. Director General of Metro and Screen Classics, Inc., who will supervise the screening of all the forthcoming features.

The first, "Fair and Warmer," the Avery Hopwood comedy, produced by Selwyn & Co., which ran for two seasons on Broadway and which is enjoying a similar popularity in London now, has been selected for May Allison's first starring vehicle under the new policy.

"Lombardi Ltd," Frederic and Fanny Hatton's most popular comedy, which Oliver Morosco has been presenting with such success on Broadway, has been obtained for Bert Lytell.

"Please Get Married," another Morosco success now turning away Broadway audiences, has been selected for Viola Dana and will be screened as soon as Miss Dana finishes her present story, "The Microbe."

BLANCHE SWEET WITH HAMPTON

Blanche Sweet, whose recent success in "The Unpardonable Sin" has been the talk of exhibitors throughout the country, has, according to a dispatch received from Los Angeles, signed a two year contract with Jesse D. Hampton.

It is understood the terms of the agreement call for the production of at least six special features during the period, distributed by Pathe.

Prior to receipt of this news it had been understood that Miss Sweet was to remain under Harry Garson's banner for a term of years.

Unjust Censorship Whipped

Committee of National Association Successful in Efforts in 24 States

THE active work of the Censorship Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry covering the state legislative sessions, was terminated last Wednesday when Chairman Gabriel L. Hess received a wire from State Chairman Peter J. Schaefer in Chicago, advising that the Buck bill, which had been pending at Springfield for several weeks had finally been defeated.

This announcement was received in New York just prior to the banquet held at the Waldorf Astoria on Wednesday evening to commemorate the legalizing of motion picture exhibitions in New York State on Sunday and from the facial expressions of the officers of the National Association and the Chairmen and members of the committees concerned, who had labored so hard during the past winter, it was plainly evident that they were very happy at the outcome of their many months of endeavor.

The favorable and most decisive report filed by the Committee on General Welfare of the Board of Aldermen condemning the proposed ordinance for censoring motion pictures in Greater New York, it is believed, had much to do with the action of the Illinois Legislature in refusing to enact the Buck bill. The members of the Illinois Legislature have in reality, in the parlance of the street, "passed the Buck" to their successors.

Illinois is the twenty-fourth state which has decided not to exact any censorship legislation during the present sessions.

In many states the opposition to the motion picture interests was very strong, and hard fights were put up by the National Association's Committee and representatives especially in Missouri, Nebraska, Michigan, Minnesota, Arizona, Wisconsin, New Jersey, and New York, as well as in many other states.

In addition to Chairman Hess, the Censorship Committee of the National Association comprises the following:

D. W. Griffith, P. A. Powers, W. A. Brady, Lewis Innerarity, Paul H. Cromelin, Walter W. Irwin, and J. Robert Rubin.

Successful Metro Gathering

Convention of Branch Managers Best Held: New Distribution Method Soon

MANAGERS of the Metro Pictures Corporation exchange branches gathered at the home office in New York last week and aided in making the occasion the largest and most important annual convention in the history of the company.

Official headquarters were maintained at the Hotel Astor, most of the exchange men stopping there. W. E. Atkinson, General Manager of Metro, opened the convention with an outline of the plans with which the firm proposes to handle the distribution of its forthcoming "fewer, bigger and better" productions.

The opening date for the distribution of the new features as announced by Mr. Atkinson will be on or about September 1st of this year and the plans which he will impart to his exchange managers cover in detail the manner in which Metro will market its new specials. His address will be followed by one by Harry J. Cohen, Foreign Manager of the Company.

Among the entertainment features offered the visitors Mr. Atkinson has arranged to take the Convention in a body to a popular shore restaurant at the Island.

Another day the picture men "saw New York," and on the same evening were guests of Mr. Atkinson at a dinner at the Astor, followed by a theatre party.

Among the managers present were: O. E. Kessnich, E. A. Golden, H. Kahn, C. E. Smith, W. C. Bachmeyer, C. E. Almy, L. Bickel, C. Klein, W. N. Skirboll, S. L. Haldeman, A. B. Lamb, J. Grauman, A. H. Fischer, H. Jans, J. Klein, C. Briant, Sam Brink, S. MacIntyre, R. Lynch, J. E. Davis, J. Rosenberg, L. Reichert, C. Stearn, C. Werner, G. W. Fuller, J. J. Unger and P. O. Loghlin.

This convention of the Metro managers is one of most important recent events of the industry, in view of the fact that it deals with a serious change in the field of the motion picture which is of national interest today.

No Frohman Connection

The Charles Frohman, Inc. offices issue a statement to the effect that Edward V. Durling, who, they claim, is offering plays of that corporation for motion pictures, has no authority to act for the concern.

American Enterprise Invades Europe

Paramount Executive Sails to Push Productions of F. P.-Lasky British Producers Ltd.; All of Europe Will Later be Active Field

THE first step in the inauguration of the production program of Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., is taken with the departure for London of Captain Albert A. Kaufman, formerly Eastern Production Manager for F. P.-Lasky. The British Producers is the recently formed $3,000,000 organization which will produce Paramount-Artcraft picture abroad.

Mr. Kaufman will be in active charge of the production work of General Production Manager. Work on the first picture will be begun in the London studios within the next few weeks, all arrangements having been made.

A technical staff accompanies Mr. Kaufman. Hugh Ford, director, Richard Murphy, scenic artist, and Eve Unsell, scenarioist will shortly follow.

A European Invasion

Other persons prominent in the American film industry including a number of the most famous American stars, are expected to sail for Europe shortly to take part in the extensive production program which has been prepared for the new producing unit. Important announcements regarding the American invasion of the European producing field are expected shortly, and will undoubtedly prove of wide interest because of the prominence of the names to be mentioned.

Much interest is attached to the fact that Captain Kaufman and Hugh Ford will supervise the launching of the European production program. Both are pioneer members of the Famous Players-Lasky production department, having served under the original Famous Players company. Their long association in the Famous Players-Lasky studios, which was broken for two years while Captain Kaufman served in the army abroad, guided officials of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in selecting the production staff for the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd.

Announcements to be made by Captain Kaufman as quickly as he can work out his plans in London are expected to throw considerable light on the ambitious production progress to be launched not only in London, but in the other great Old World Capitals. As quickly as plans can be worked out, studios will be established in many of the great cities on the continent, which means that Paramount-Artcraft pictures will be produced on a scale never before attempted. With a world-wide producing organization at their command, the producers of Paramount-Artcraft pictures will be able to enhance greatly the standing of motion pictures as the universal language of the world's millions.

To Use Foreign Artists

With studios and producing units in Paris, Italy, Spain, Switzerland, Belgium and other European nations, the works of the foremost writers of Europe will be filmed on locations actually described in the stories. The foremost European and American artists will be recruited for the work of making these pictures, and the motion picture fans of the world will have the unique treat of seeing their favorite stars working side by side with those from all of the great nations.

For the present, however, the production activities of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will be confined to England. The beautiful lake regions of England, Scotland and Wales will be utilized as the settings for many of the stories to be filmed, the wonderful scenery of these historic regions providing unlimited opportunities for the artistic development of motion pictures of the highest grade. Announcements of stars who care to work under the auspices of the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, to be made in the near future from London, will include the names of a number of celebrated film players of England and America. It is also expected that the purchase of the motion picture rights for some of the greatest English stories will be announced shortly after the arrival in England of Captain Kaufman.

The work of building the huge studios and production plants which will house the production activities of the British organization, will be given new impetus on the arrival of Captain Kaufman and his assistants.

VIOLET HEMING IN "EVERYWOMAN"

SHORTLY before going to press announcement was received from Famous Players-Lasky that Violet Heming, for the past season playing a leading role in "The Faces East," had been engaged to create the title role in the Paramount-Artcraft version of "Every-Woman."

It was also stated that George Melford has been assigned to direct the production, and that work will be started within two week. Twenty-odd young women, of the most beautiful types—as is requisite in such a production — have been engaged, and the production is expected to surpass anything of like nature yet undertaken.

Canadian Concern Makes Aero Pictures

A NEW Canadian moving picture institution has been established with the organization of the Canadian Aero Film Company with offices in Toronto, Ontario. This company is somewhat of a novelty in that its operation consist of a mixture of air and celluloid. The object of the concern is to make novelty pictures with the aid of aeroplanes and several well-known moving picture men are behind the proposition.

The sales manager is Sidney B. Taube, a former and widely known exchange manager of the Dominion. Another official of the company is Blaine Irish, formerly with the British-Canadian Pathe News, who has become the director of the Canadian Aero Film Company.

Film Trade Boards Organize

Propose a National Body to Standardize Distribution and to Aid All Business

WITH the avowed object of standardizing the distribution of film and advocating general policies for the raising of the standard of business dealings between film exchanges and exhibitors, representatives of many of the film boards of trade throughout the country, purpose to meet in New York City and form a national organization.

There are said to be about twenty-five of these film boards of trade or managers' associations in as many of the principal film distributing centers of the United States and Canada. Prior to a year ago, similar organizations in many of the territories are said to have had a more or less sporadic existence.

The ideas brought forth during the past twelve months have been exchanged by the various district organizations and the consummation of the plans for a National Film Board of Trade is expected to be realized in July.

Exhibitors individually and collectively in many of the districts are said to have objected most strenuously to some of the rules placed in force by the district board of the exchange men, but several of the sponsors for the proposed National organization declare that when all the rules of trade are taken generally and not one or two apparently obnoxious ones specifically, the majority of the exhibitors begin to see the proposition in a new and more favorable light.

W. E. Flynn of the Detroit Board of Trade, in conjunction with the Minneapolis Film Board of Trade, is said to have been among the first to exchange ideas.

Benjamin M. Goldman, a prominent attorney in Minneapolis, said to be thoroughly familiar with film conditions because of numbering so many film companies and theatre proprietors among his clients, is reported to have drawn up the Articles of Incorporation and By-Laws that have been copied by about half a dozen of the tains 1200 signatures.

Officials of the Minneapolis Board state that theirs is not a collection organization in any shape or manner and that in view of the trade rules adopted by the Minneapolis Board and many other district associations, there is no longer any need for collection organizations. They further state that the "collection" feature was the ruin of the organizations heretofore. Certain New York officials are reported to have already given the proposed National association their hearty endorsement.

Exchange Managers Are Extolling Northwest

Many of the big film distributing organizations in planning and announcing their new policies for the coming season, call in their sales forces for a conference in New York City.

Among the recent visitors were Max Weisfeldt, manager of the Fox exchange at Minneapolis, and S. MacIntyre, manager of the Metro exchange at Omaha. Both men have been long in the mid-northwest territory, and enthusiastically pronounce conditions in that section better than at any time in its history.

MacIntyre was made manager of the Omaha office of Metro on June 1, and was with the same company at Minneapolis for two years. Max Weisfeldt has been the Fox manager at Minneapolis for the last seven months, and before that he had been with both the Minneapolis Mutual and Chicago main office of the Mutual.

Cincinnati Exchange Body Satisfies

Though the new rules adopted by the Associated Film Exchanges of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce have been in effect only one week, their beneficial results are already apparent.

Practically all the exhibitors in the territory covered by the Cincinnati Film Exchanges have manifested a hearty desire to co-operate in enforcing the new rules.

Expressions of satisfaction both on the part of the exchange manager as well as the exhibitor are forthcoming and perfect harmony seems to be dawning.

Film Theft Committee of N. A. M. P. I. After Investigation Charges Several Exchange Men; Many More Arrests Said Forthcoming

FOLLOWING a months quiet and searching investigation, the Film Theft Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, this week announced what it claims are the first few of many arrests which will put an end once and for all to film thievery.

Four arrests in as many cities, widely separated, are given out by the committee. In these cases the accused have pleaded "not guilty." The charges will be pressed, as, according to the investigators, the evidence gathered is most conclusive.

A chain of other arrests are promised, exceptions being made only when film exchange employees and others voluntarily come forward with admission of their guilt and promise of restitution.

Employees Led Astray

So great are its powers, and it is claimed, so conclusive is the evidence it has already collected, that the committee believes it will do more than stop the illicit traffic in motion picture reels. As a member of the committee stated, "A month's quiet work has encouraged us to believe that we will not only end film thefts but that we can stop the corruption of employees of responsible film concerns that has been systematically carried on by representatives of dishonest ones."

The National Association Committee specifically states that evidence acquired resulted in arrests in New York City, Syracus, Saugerties, N. Y., and Wilkes Barre, Penn. In Syracuse the name of John R. Van Arnam is given with the statement that he is accused of receiving stolen property in the form of two films. His attorney, it is said, entered a plea of not guilty.

As a result of a consultation between the association's agents with the widow of the Davis Film Exchange, Wilkes Barre, it is announced she promised to return all reels that were the legitimate property of manufacturers and exchanges affiliated with the National Association. An attorney, W. R. Casteline, is declared by the association to be awaiting action of the Grand Jury on charges.

The Film Theft Committee reports that there are still under indictment in New York County, William Burns for the larceny of a five-reel feature owned by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, and Frank Dolan for the larceny of a similar feature belonging to the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

An indictment is also said to have been obtained against H. W. Fowzer, who is charged with receiving stolen property and having in his possession over 150 reels belonging to various companies.

While it is feared that the evidence from all parts of the country now in the hands of the committee would compel it to bring many deluded exchange and theatre employees into the meshes of the law, it is said this could not be helped, as the National Association had determined to put a definite end to film thefts before the year drew to a close.

Exchangemen in Hot Water

Men in Los Angeles Branches Face Arrest; Misunderstand Licence Ordinance

EVERY film exchange manager of Los Angeles is said to have faced arrest the past week on the charge of perjury as a result of affidavits made by them respecting the number of releases rented by them during the past three months and given to the license department that their license receipts could be made out for the quarter ending July 1.

Several months ago one of the smaller exchanges thought the rate of license too high and through an attorney petitioned for a reduction or a change in the ordinance which would graduate the scale of licenses according to the amount of business transacted by the exchange. This new license was submitted to a number of the exchange men and they found it satisfactory believing that it read "New releases" instead of "Reels rented."

When an investigation was made by the license department and all exchange managers were found to have made statements widely different from the belief of the license bureau, the matter was turned over to the City Prosecutor who detailed detectives to learn the number of reels rented by each exchange. Seeking the list of all exchanges the detective visited West Coast office of MOTION PICTURE NEWS and intimated the "crimes" committed by the exchange managers. Investigation followed and it showed all exchange managers did not know the correct wording of the City Ordinance which concerns film exchanges.

A special meeting of the Exchange Board of Trade was called and the City Prosecutor was taken into the confidence of the exchange men; they explained that the license fee as provided by the Ordinance would make it impossible for them to continue business if such license rates were to be charged. For example the fees for the Famous Players-Lasky per quarter would amount to approximately $1,600 as based upon the interpretation of the license collector, but based upon the interpretation of the Ordinance by the Prosecutor the quarterly license for this same exchange would amount to many times the sum given above, for the prosecutor interprets the Ordinance to mean a fee of $1.00 per reel license for every time a film is rented.

Bill Aimed at Child Attendance is Killed

After having passed, with a struggle, through the Senate of Pennsylvania, the bill that would have prohibited children between 8 and 14 years old from attending motion picture shows during school hours, unless with written permits of their teachers, took the K. O. in the House of Representatives on June 18. It was bowled over by a vote of 64 to 72.

The bill, which was introduced by Senator Leiby, of Perry county, was fought earnestly by the motion picture interests, the exhibitors realizing that, had it become law it would have tended to cut down materially the sizes of audiences in daytime when, even under ordinary conditions, the crowds in Pennsylvania theatres usually are smaller than at nights.

Proposed Picture Men's Club Obtains Rooms

At a recent meeting at the Hotel Knickerbocker, of the club now in process of formation by business men of the picture industry, tentatively known as the Motion Picture Business Men's Club, it was decided to engage a suite of rooms in the Knickerbocker Hotel, to be used as club rooms. Mr. Regan's private suite was obtained.

The following officers were elected: Percy L. Waters, president; B. S. Moss, first vice-president; Jules E. Brulatour, second vice-president, and C. F. Zittel, treasurer.

The board of directors consists of the foregoing members, with Paul Brunet, William Randolph Hearst and Adolph Zukor in addition.

Southeastern Theatre Men Hold Meeting

Six southern states were represented on June 17 at the meeting of the Southeastern Theatre Managers' Association, which was held at an Atlanta hotel.

At this meeting the association went on record as favoring paying in advance for films, but opposed to the deposit system, which is in force in this section.

The meeting was an enthusiastic one and various questions pertaining to the motion picture business were discussed at length. Talks were made by managers from several different states, and all expressed the belief that many benefits would accrue from the organization of the managers in the southeast.

Permanent officers were elected by the association as follows: Willard C. Patterson, manager Criterion theatre, Atlanta, president; Percy W. Wells, vice-president; Hugh L. Cardoza, treasurer, and B. Lee Smith, manager Tudor theatre, secretary.

At a banquet held in the evening the members of the Atlanta Film Managers' Association were guests of the theatre managers, and closer cooperation between the representatives of the two different branches of the motion picture industry was urged.

What New York

DEAR MR. JOHNSTON:

Undoubtedly this is the year of years in the motion picture industry and while the exhibitors and producers announce better and greater things, it is not only commendable, but of much interest that the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, one of the greatest of magazines, also announces a bigger and greater future.

Your new issue, that of June 28th, was a knock out in the trade paper ring.

The new sections will meet with great favor to all those who are interested, and if motion picture trade papers ever improve over your latest issue, I am sure you will be the one to improve them.

Accept my heartiest congratulations.

Sincerely yours,
R. H. COCHRANE, Vice-President,
Universal Film Mfg. Company.

MY DEAR MR. JOHNSTON:

The important place that the NEWS has always held in the industry is materially augmented by the new size which you inaugurated with the issue of June 28, 1919.

This move on your part is additional evidence of the spirit of progressiveness that has always prevaded your columns.

We feel certain that the industry at large is going to accept the new size as being advantageous to all concerned.

It presents unlimited possibilities over the old size and we feel certain that you are going to enjoy even greater success with the new MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Very truly yours,
B. S. COLE,
Robertson-Cole Company.

MY DEAR MR. JOHNSTON:

I am delighted with the changed appearance of the NEWS in its new size, and think it shows a real progressive spirit in keeping abreast of the recent changes in the publishing field.

The advertisers should gain materially by the improved opportunity this gives them for layouts and copy, and editorially it indicates great improvement.

Sincerely yours,
EDWARD A. MACMANUS,
MacManus Corporation.

DEAR MR. JOHNSTON:

I asked each of three exhibitors who visited my office this week what they thought of the enlarged size of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

"The NEWS looks more interesting. It has the feel of bigness and quality." This exhibitor used to be a diamond salesman.

The second one dotes on artistic presentations. He said:

"The new size is better in appearance. The typographical arrangement of the pages is more artistic and attractive."

The third exhibitor is keenly interested in showmanship ideas, advertising, promotions and stunts. He said: "Now I can read the ad reproductions in the Exhibitors' Service Bureau. It doesn't make any difference whether my youngsters lose my magnifying glass or not. I should say that the new size is like a larger theatre for an exhibitor. It gives greater opportunities to do things."

When exhibitors are pleased what more is there to be said?

E. J. HUDSON,
Publicity Dept., First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

DEAR MR. JOHNSTON:

Suffice it to say that the latest issue of your publication has no peer.

Even though I was more than pleased, I was not surprised, for those who do the big things are not caught napping.

Your new NEWS is in keeping with the growth of this wonderful art.

Allow me to add my best wishes and congratulations to the many others which you will doubtless receive because of this innovation.

The NEWS was, is, and always will be, in the front ranks.

Very sincerely yours,
TARKINGTON BAKER,
General Manager,
Universal Film Mfg. Company.

Next Week: "What the Exhibitors Have to Say." You ought to read some of the telegrams we are getting. They are corkers. From New York to Oshkosh—they all say "A Knockout!"

Has to Say!

DEAR MR. JOHNSTON:

The first issue of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS in the new size is a riot. When you took this step you had on your seven league boots.

Everybody in the Motion Picture Industry is talking about it, and I am very glad that the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation had an opportunity to use this number for making our announcement of our new plans for next year. It's an issue that everybody is going to read from cover to cover and save. With best wishes for your continued success, I am,

Yours very truly,
J. BEATTY, Advertising Manager,
Famous-Players-Lasky Corporation.

MY DEAR MR. JOHNSTON:

Just a few lines of congratulations on your revised edition of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS. I personally consider it a very big IMPROVEMENT.

Even the plain type "ad" which MR. MAYER wired from the coast to you announcing the fact that he had signed a long term contract for a series of special production with MILDRED HARRIS CHAPLIN stood out in your book so that I believe it was impossible for any exhibitor to go through the NEWS without reading our advertisement.

Wishing you continued success, and with best and kindest wishes, I am,

Cordially yours,
JOSEPH F. LEE,
General Sales Manager,
Anita Stewart Productions, Inc.

DEAR MR. JOHNSTON:

The Exploitation Department can revel in the "smashing" opportunities of the GREATER NEWS ad pages.

The Publicity branch, delighting in ample headlines, will chuckle at the Editor's loss of the plea of "lack of space."

The Exhibitor will doubtless speak for himself—and, as for the millennium of size uniformity—Well! which IS the odd size, anyway?

HORACE JUDGE,
Advertising and Publicity United Picture Theatres of America, Inc.

DEAR MR. JOHNSTON:

Congratulations on your new book. It marks an advance in motion picture trade paper journalism.

JOHN C. FLINN,
Director of Advertising and Publicity,
Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

New MOTION PICTURE NEWS looks like the real goods. Increase in size should be welcomed by trade—and particularly the publicity man who wants to cooperate rather than put something over. Congratulations.

PETE SMITH,
Publicity Manager, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

DEAR MR. JOHNSTON:

The MOTION PICTURE NEWS is developing so many progressive features that the new size, while a surprise, does not make me marvel at your enterprise.

Best wishes to the NEWS in the new size.

Very truly yours,
PAUL H. CROMELIN,
President, Inter-Ocean Film Corporation.

Gentlemen:

I have been reading the MOTION PICTURE NEWS since 1910, and note with satisfaction its series of changes for the better culminating in the new size of its pages.

Sincerely,
BERT ADLER,
Advertising Manager Inter-Ocean Film Corporation.

The Following Week: "Over-flow Issue." Some of the telegrams we are getting from the West Coast and many of the New Yorkers letters squeezed out of this issue.

ONE PAGE OF DYNAMITE

Rental Increases Threaten Downfall of Pictures

Motion Picture News, Inc.,
New York City.

When a star goes to the box office, the exhibitor gets the rentals on us. When the United Artists start their pictures [illegible] we will be forced to pay fully twice as much for their pictures as we have been paying. First National is asking more than twice as much for Mary Pickford as Artcraft did. Every time a star jumps to another company the rental of his pictures jump the same way. When a salesman comes in here and gives us this story we tell him we can't afford it. Then he says, "But this picture is so much better than anything the star has ever done that it is worth the extra money." But on a two-day run how does our patron know that it is going to be such an extra good picture when, as a matter of fact, you couldn't tell it from any of the star's other pictures if it wasn't for the manufacturer's name on the start-[illegible]

When they start to raise the prices too high I am afraid they are not going to benefit very much by it. If they raise our rentals very much more we will cut out films entirely and put in vaudeville and it won't cost us any more either, and with vaudeville we can raise our admissions from 20c top to 50c top. The town has been asking for vaudeville a long time, but because you cannot depend on the quality of it we have kept away from it. We are in a position where we can book it in here in nice shape and the prices they will want next Fall depends on whether we will play vaudeville or pictures.

In my estimation it would be more satisfactory to exhibitors throughout the country if all films were of a standard length, say five or six reels. We have got past the "filler" age and select our single reels to run with a five-reel picture. For instance, on a Monday-Tuesday we play a Harold Lloyd comedy, Universal Screen Magazine and a Kinograms, and of course, the feature. The feature opens the show, then the singles follow and then we repeat the feature and call it a night. Quite a number of our patrons like the Kinograms and come on the Monday-Tuesday knowing they will see it. Others like the Lloyds or the Screen Magazine. And, if we happen to have a seven-reeler we cannot run one or two of the single reels and it causes disappointment to someone. If there was some standard to the length of film we would be able to book the balance of our show to better satisfaction.

We have played all of the Nazimova productions excepting "The Red Lantern." Metro is asking us exactly four times as much for this picture as any of her other pictures. And we don't make an awful lot on any of them after paying the film rental. I doubt if we could take in enough to pay what they ask for the picture.

It's a great old game, but we'll see what the Fall brings forth.

EARL B. RAIFSTANGER,
Managing Director Mahaiwe Theatre,
Great Barrington, Mass.

Believes as Does J. D. Williams: Double-Cross Too Prevalent

Motion Picture News,
New York City.

The motion picture trade papers are going in the right direction when they give publicity to articles such as the one recently appearing in your valuable magazine from the pen of J. D. Williams, manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc. Please give us some more such constructive [illegible]

[illegible] the article with great interest, and I have talked it over with others also with much interest. We built up bogeys and [illegible] over. We have not found permanent flaw with the idea. It will work; I am sure it will. I only wish every com[illegible] had this idea, and could put it over. The exhibitors then would have a fairer [illegible]e, and you and I know he needs it.

[illegible] talking [illegible] this: If [illegible] by advertising [illegible] competitor copy her next one, wouldn't you lose ten times [illegible] pictures and then your competitor copped her? What, if anything, will prevent the competitor grabbing the star after you have, [illegible] made her famous in your territory?

Some Live Letters from News Readers

That was a stumper for a bit, and I pride myself that I—no, it wasn't I, either, it was Mr. Williams—floored this bogey too.

If you remember, Mr. Williams said in his article, near the end: "If Kalamazoo must pay $100 a day for first run, the distributors can charge that amount. The fact that the exhibitor makes an unusual profit at that rental should not affect the rental."

Or in other words, you will charge a set price for a certain town. This will be the same price to all exhibitors except the man who has been showing the star under your contract, will hold an option on the contract and will have the first chance to pay the price.

What could be fairer?

You know and I know, Mr. Editor, of the film salesman who goes to one exhibitor and quotes a picture at a certain price. Then he goes to the exhibitor's competitor and asks him if he won't pay more, after the first exhibitor has booked the picture. If the competitor agrees to pay more, then the salesman goes back to the exchange and tells his boss. The boss fakes up some excuse, or deliberately writes the exhibitor that his salesman had no authority for booking such and such a picture at such a low price, and that he, the exchange manager, is not allowed by his New York office to book that price. If Mr. Exhibitor will pay so much, he may have the picture and the contract will stand, otherwise—and because exhibitors have some spirit, it is usually otherwise.

A lot of these exchanges make much noise over having certain prices for such and such a sized town, with other conditions being equal. But that is all they do make—noise. They do not make prices.

Mr. Williams, nor you, nor no one else knows better than I how it feels to have to book a whole program just to pick out one here and there, and lay a whole flock on the shelf. I know how that goes.

I also had a recent experience of exploiting a big star in a big way, and then having the price on that star's next picture raised on me until I couldn't take her. Someone else showed the star.

Both evils are as plain to me as a wart on my nose.

I have thought and thought, and I can think of no better answer than the brilliant and worth-while idea suggested by Mr. Williams, of the First National.

Hoping your excellent magazine will continue its policy of such valuable publicity, I am, sincerely yours.

H. M. THOMAS,
Manager Rialto Theatre,
Omaha, Neb.

More Arguments Against Single Picture Booking

There is one very important feature that is not being mentioned by some of the exhibitors who have written about the single picture booking. I agree with them against the single picture booking. They all had their say and it's all true. They have, however, overlooked the additional malicy of the single picture booking and that is the time it will take up to keep one's theatre open every day in the week. The exhibitors will be busy nearly all the time in booking up his pictures. I don't believe he would have time to exploit these pictures to make money enough out of them to pay these manufacturers; for his time will surely be taken up in booking single pictures.

I am speaking of the great majority of the exhibitors who do their own booking, advertising, managing, etc., and not for those few exhibitors who have a special man for each department, and I am quite positive that you will find fully 95 per cent. of the former, and think of the expense that each picture would be loaded down with.

Think of all the additional advertising it would have to be done on each single picture by both the manufacturers and exhibitors.

Think of all the salesmen's expense. think of the exhibitors' expense from the country if he will have to go to the city and book his pictures.

On top of the killing that the manufacturers would make and benefit by, there would also loom up an expense that no one would benefit and the box office would have to shoulder it all and if they think the box office has no limit they are badly mistaken.

It is easily seen that whenever any changes are contemplated by the manufacturers they have the large city theatres in mind, and forget all about the country theatres (which by the way must be fully 80 per cent.). It is very easy for these large theatres such as the Strand of New York, and Grauman's of California and a few others like them throughout the country to book up on the single picture plan.

First: That these people can afford to pay almost any price asked.

Second: That the manufacturers have enough respect and consider it a dignity to their pictures if run by them, hence there is no danger that they will ask them more than they take in, but the sucker of a country exhibitor would certainly pay the penalty, as there would be no reasoning under such a plan. Their plan would be to the highest bidder and that would settle it.

As to the high laurels given Mr. Williams, of the First National, want to say that he was not always so good as all that. Many exhibitors will remember that he was for the single picture slaughter proposition at first, but since he found it to be impractical he then changed his tactics, however, so good for the present, better late than never.

As for me I would book on the directors and stars series only (of course, with a cancellation clause), for two reasons:

First: That I cannot afford to pay the price that the manufacturers would have to get, and would want to get and possibly will get, if the pictures are booked singly.

Second: That I will not have time to book each picture singly, and still keep my place open.

Yours truly,
HENRY GOLDMAN,
Grand-Colonial Theatre,
Green Bay, Wis.

Has No Word in Favor of the "Single Picture" Policy

That treatise on the "single picture" policy prepared by J. D. Williams, manager of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, is the best thing I've seen for a long time. It touches the spot that is tenderest just now. I agree with Mr. Williams heartily as the opinions he expresses are the same I have held for months.

The "single picture" policy gives no protection to an exhibitor for any efforts he puts forth to advertise a star. It not only gives other exhibitors the benefit of his work, but lessens his enthusiasm in pushing a star. For example, I have taken Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks and have spent $500 exploiting them. I have done much to make them popular here, or rather, much to add to their usual popularity. I feel as if I am entitled to reap the benefits of my efforts and money in pushing them. But under the "single picture" plan someone who wants to bid $100 more for one of their pictures can get that picture and also get the benefits of my advertising. The "single picture" policy means we are simply working for the exchanges and not for ourselves. The exhibitor is jumping from the frying pan into the fire when he goes on record as favoring "single picture" policies in place of the program system.

I have lost two big pictures here recently because of the "single picture" method used in farming them out. In both instances I had boosted the stars of these pictures in the past and tried to keep them at my theatre. I couldn't equal the bids of some other exhibitors because I didn't see how I could pay that much and make money, so I lost them.

I have contended the "single picture" policy is wrong, right along and the prospects that exhibitors would soon be engaged in cutting each other's throats has worried me.

The star series contracts with the one or two picture cancellation clause are fair and of much greater protection. Under such contracts an exhibitor can put all the punch he wants into advertising a star because he knows he will reap benefits not only from this picture, but from future pictures featuring this star. When it comes to non-star features, like "Auction of Souls," which I showed recently, the "single picture" policy appears in a different light. I can advertise as much as I like without any danger that some competitor is going to pick the plums. For such pictures the single booking is the right thing.

Alleged Dispatch from London Threatening Boycott of Famous Players-Lasky Films Not Credited by Zukor

Following closely on the announcement of the departure of Captain Kaufman of Famous Players-Lasky for England, and the plans concerning productions to be made there, a news dispatch attributed to the London Central News was given wide circulation.

This dispatch was to the effect that at a conference of representatives of the cinematograph trade, held at Glasgow on June 24, a resolution had been passed not to book or show Famous Players-Lasky pictures after a date later to be fixed. This ban, the dispatch stated, was to continue until F. P.-Lasky gave satisfactory guarantees that they have disassociated themselves from the large exhibiting company just formed.

Adolph Zukor, on having the dispatch shown him, issued the following statement:

"In view of the absence of any report of any kind from our London office we cannot take the report of this alleged boycott seriously. However, the fact of the matter is that soon after the organization of the Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd., by Major David Davies, M. P., well known coal land owner; Major Norman Holden, Alexander Nisbet, W. J. Burdon Evans, Albert Hirst, the woolen manufacturer; A. W. Kerley, Thomas Wrigley, banker; J. H. Kippax, J. G. Thompson, George Isaac and Abraham Collins, who are among the strongest and most progressive financiers and capitalists in the United Kingdom, the same gentlemen organized a corporation known as Picture Play House, Ltd., with a capitalization of £1,000,000, to build and operate large motion picture houses in Great Britain. Our participation in this new corporation is only to the extent of assuring to it a consistent supply of motion pictures, including both those produced by us in the United States and those produced by us in England with British artists, authors and directors."

Hyman Uses Distinctive Ads to Get Away from the Mass Type Effects

By Edward L. Hyman

Manager Fox's Liberty Theatre, St. Louis

(Gradually we are getting the ideas of the best advertisers of the country. These ideas differ, but they are well worth while to every manager. These articles will appear regularly here.)

WHEN I came to St. Louis to take the management of William Fox's Liberty Theatre, I found advertising conditions very much as they were described in an article which appeared in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS in the issue of December 14, 1918, although there has been considerable improvement since.

The style of advertising that was being used consisted largely of black type and there was little distinction between the displays of the various theatres. Because there are five newspapers here to be used if one would cover the whole field, the cost of advertising of the size that appears in some of the cities is prohibitive, and one must seek to get the best results out of the space that it is possible to use.

It occurred to me at once that the way to make my advertising stand out without increasing the amount of space was to have them distinctive. So I engaged an artist and gave him full leeway with the designs of the advertising after giving him my own ideas of what I wanted featured. I think all will agree with me that the result has been that the displays of William Fox's Liberty theatre attract attention.

Attractive drawing makes name of star and title stand out

There was an immediate response to this style of advertising. In the first place it is attractive to the eye and one feels that a house whose designs are distinctive and artistic is really offering something worth while in the way of a motion picture entertainment. That is the sort of reflex that I try to have in all my displays whether they are a mere announcement of the pictures being shown at the Liberty or whether they are of the more elaborate character.

In addition to these designs we use half tone effects in the displays, but only when there is something worth while to be reproduced, an attractive figure or something of the sort. For instance, in the Theda Bara advertisement which is reproduced here, we have an attractive picture of the star that is certain to get the eye. You will notice that there is very little matter used in any of the displays. I would like to have the selling arguments, but if I put these in these displays the result would be the crowded-up effect that we always want to avoid.

Half-tone effects are used when good opportunity offers

Designs for these advertisements vary with their each appearance. We like to have them in the same general harmony of design that associated the display with the name of the theatre, but at the same time sufficiently varied to call attention to the fact that we are doing something different each day. We believe that the time has past when the theatre can go along with the same old thing week after week, and we try to give at least the impression that something different is being done and something worth while shown.

We do give attention, too, to the short subjects when we have something we think will attract unusual attention. For instance, with the interest strong in the Willard-Dempsey fight at Toledo, and everyone wondering whether the champion can get in condition to meet the younger man, we used

Edward L. Hyman

"The Heart Punch," a picture that shows the fighter getting in condition. We invited the sport writers to see the picture and the reward was stories on the sporting pages of all the papers.

At the invitation of the editor of the Exhibitors' Service Bureau, I have outlined here some of my ideas of advertising as we do it here. But I want to say that I am opposed to general rules in advertising, an opposition which has been always voiced by the editors of these pages. One must keep up to the minute and be able to take advantage of the opportunities that are presented.

Advertising possibilities, I believe, are limited only by the developments of the manager and the opportunities of the picture. I do not profess to be an advertising expert and I hesitate to make even an outline of my ideas public here.

Every employe of this house is made to realize that William Fox's Liberty Theatre is an institution, and that we are not working for the admissions that have been paid at the box office today, but for the possibilities of tomorrow and next week. Our advertising is based on the same plan.

Attractive double bill announcement

Your Idea and Ours

WE ARE distinctly opposed to putting anything suggestive in an advertisement when there is nothing of the sort in a picture. We don't believe that the Strand theatre, Dayton, O., meant to do this, but it remains that the appeal is of that sort. In this 7½ inch, three column dis play the figure of Miss Ferguson has been used in a manner that at least suggests the physical appeal and then to our mind the big selling argument is that this was made from the Saturday Evening Post story. This is not mentioned in the display, but the selling line goes ahead to say:

In the role of a cabaret dancing girl who dared much for her blind lover. A most unusual story with elaborate costuming and gorgeous scenes.

You can readily see how the heart interest has been ignored here. Unless the patron knew something about the picture from some other source he would not only get the wrong impression, but the theatre would miss selling a lot of people.

Don't worry about stopping something you started—but START it.

HERE is just about a model of the circus style of advertisement. The Colonial theatre, Seattle, is a little late in playing the Billie Rhodes picture but it has certainly offered a novelty in simplicity and in getting the appeal of that sort over strong. The only thing the matter is the background with the cut. It prevents the halftone from coming out as strong as it would and if there had been a faint outline of white around the figure of Miss Rhodes there would have been further improvement.

The catch line at the top "It's Circus Day Today" will attract unusual attention and then the remainder is in very brief sentences, the typing being black and standing out strong. Ten inches, five columns was the space.

SIZE and the striking design used are bound to get attention for this eighteen-inch five-column display of the Clinton Square theatre, Albany. We have called your attention recently several times to the fact that Albany exhibitors are improving in their advertising, and we are glad to cite more samples from time to time.

But here was a case where the display is not as good as it could have been for the very strong orphan appeal with Mary Pickford as a child is entirely omitted, and instead there are used a large picture showing her in bed, and a smaller love scene. We would much have preferred to have brought out the other element all the stronger.

It would have had a greater appeal both to children and to grown-ups.

Of course the moment the eye hits the future, one gets the slate effect, with the name of the star and the title, so that big type is not necessary for them later. The type matter will all be read, we feel pretty sure. It is far better than the average work.

Courtesy by strops soon becomes a torrent of patronage.

WE don't want to get tiresome, therefore we hesitate to keep telling you about the way that the Strand theatre, Birmingham, Ala., has come to the front as an advertiser since its change in management. Therefore we will illustrate it. The last time we commented on this work we found that the only thing wrong was that the newspapers failed to afford the right sort of printing, but this appears to have been remedied so that the house is right in the front rank.

Nazimova appeared in "The Red Lantern" at the Strand to celebrate the first anniversary of the present management. In the Sunday issues a quarter of a page was used in making the announcement, hand drawn work being employed that brought the Chinese atmosphere out strong with

The scene cut at the upper right was too small to get any sort of effect and rather confuses, and we would much rather have had the white space at the top and bottom of the selling argument which impresses on the reader that the Strand has obtained the most important production of the year for its anniversary celebration.

It hasn't quite the punch of the other display for the reason that the hand drawn effect, when well done, generally pleases the eye better than straight black type. But either of them will get any man's attention—and after all that's the main thing in advertising. And they are written in the spirit that convinces the reader that this is a picture he must see.

Let "That Wailing Trombone" be the only thing that wails about your theatre.

THIS is a good example of taking fullest advantage of the beauty and attractive personality of a star. Lyric theatre, Minneapolis, has made the cut of Madge Kennedy stand out strong and then the rule has been brought up to make this stand out all the stronger. The main thing that we do not like is the use of so much black type. We fail to see yet where the use of all black effects get any more emphasis to a display, but if there ever was a case where it is excusable this is one. Here is the selling argument used:

She should worry—
Susan was one of those "take things as they come sort of girls.
She didn't look for trouble, but she had plenty.
When it came, did she face it with proper spirit?
"Leave it to Susan"—she was some girl.

Another improvement could be used by the Lyric and most of the other Minneapolis houses by the employment of a distinctive name-plate.

Whatever the name of your theatre let it begin with THE.

PALACE theatre, Tyler, Texas, has a most attractive advertisement in eleven inch four column display and it comes mighty near doing what a small city theatre should do. It evidently has a strong regard for the Paramount trade-mark because this has been used in all four corners and we doubt very much whether the theatre did the best in submerging its own name, unless the house has been so closely associated with Paramount productions that the people are looking forward to them. The use of the trade-mark of the producer depends largely on local conditions.

Here the theatre has used one of its own half-tones of the star and we have never yet seen a picture of a player make a stronger appeal to the eye. The selling arguments are set above, below and on either side of the display. Here they are:

Elope? Just the thing! Let's pack up? Call a car, dear. Have you phoned the Reverend? When does the train leave?
What's that? My husband might object? Oh dear, Oh dear. That's so. Come on anyway. We should worry about hubby!

like of which are seldom erected for motion picture plays.

You'll worry if you don't see Marguerite Clark in "Let's Elope." The whole town's going to talk about it. Come!

Quite a little of the strong stuff and we doubt it's advisability, but the tone of it may get it by.

When they don't fare well at your theatre, it's pretty sure to be "farewell" for you.

CASINO theatre, Des Moines, probably had the right idea in captioning the appearance of Dolores Cassinelli as "A brilliant new star" and using a striking picture of her in this two column but why didn't it go a little further and tell something more about her.

It is our impression that where a theatre makes a single direct statement and uses no other selling argument to back it up that the most of the patrons are led to believe that the manager knows little about it himself. People are demanding more and more in the shape of guarantees of pictures these days and there should never be left the chance to say that the house is simply filling in with something.

Certainly the Casino could have afforded to use a couple of inches more and talk about Miss Cassinelli as the actress who made a hit in "Lafayette, We come," about her beauty and her ability. Then there would have been created a real desire on the part of people who had never seen her to come to the theatre. The way it is done here invites patrons to say: "We never heard of her. Let's stay away."

A lot of people who THINK they know have never even thought.

IF YOU feature tragedy in your displays you are going to keep a lot of people away from the theatre. That is one sure rule that you can take in advertising, a field where ordinarily we do not believe that rules are worth attention.

That does not mean that the public does not now and then welcome the tense in motion pictures, that it doesn't want the heart interest. But it does not want mere killing illustrated. Alhambra theatre, Indianapolis, generally does mighty good advertising, but something slipped here. Illustrated, there is an incident at the start of picture where the mother of the heroine is killed. It gives a cause for the story, but it is essentially a background. It hasn't the slightest appeal to the patron. The whole selling argument tells us about the romance, and how at the end the new moon looked down on the happy lovers. We would have a whole lot rather gotten this in the display. Lots of us would rather see lovers happy than someone in the agony of death.

Any one can run a "motion picture show"—and it is generally a "show."

THIS half page display of the Regent theatre, Toronto, was taken from two advertising pages which appeared in the June 7 issue of the Motion Picture News and while it was good trade paper advertising we do not believe that this arrangement is the most effective for newspaper use. The illustration to the left showing Warner and the girl does not come out strikingly enough even in the original half page of the newspaper to get attention and then the meaning of the figure at the right is not clear. The whole thing leaves too much of a sole appeal of the desert. We would have much rather used a striking picture of Warner and either Barbara Castleton or the dancing girl.

As a matter of fact while some of these scenes are laid in the desert that is not the appeal of the picture and we wouldn't use such on these hot days at any rate. The love story, the Oriental charm and the tense action should have been brought out much stronger.

The thirteen inch five columns with the big head of Warner is much the more convincing, but here we have the same objection that it puts the whole interest up to the desert scenes. The statement of what the picture is about is too blunt. It should have been suggestive of the elements we have mentioned. There is a great deal of difference in the direct statement. As a matter of fact one would get the idea that this is a sordid story with these two paragraphs:

In a raid on a merchant's caravan an English girl falls into his hands and he decides to make her his, principally because he desired revenge on the man with whom he found her.

During a tussle with the girl his shirt becomes torn and the girl is horrified to see that the man whom she has been pleading and clawing is really a white man.

We would have put this decidedly more delicately, but here we are left. This is really the introduction to the story, the background, as it were, for the dramatic incidents, the heart ap-

WE question very much whether the Orpheum theatre, Erie, Pa., got the most possible patronage out of the Rothapfel program by the style of advertising that was used. The Orpheum used generous space carrying eleven inches, three columns during the four day run, but it merely carried the program and ran the same advertisement every day. We believe that it would have been far better to have told something about the charm of the various angles of the program in the different days of advertising instead of merely listing the units.

There could have been the original announcement in the form used, with the addition of selling talk on the Rothapfel idea and after that we would have followed with opinions of leading citizens for the second ad and then based one of the others largely on the new idea comedy and the other on the feature, both, of course, with the other matter listed, preferably in a small box at one of the lower corners. Then a more general appeal would have been obtained.

Don't worry if you "skid" once in a while. It at least shows that you are moving.

WE are sent a number of specimens of the advertising of Keeney's theatre, Williamsport, Pa., by an exhibitor from another town with the request for our opinion. This theatre uses on the average of 8½ inches, three columns, space but with few exceptions the displays that have been sent to us rely on type exclusively. Occasionally a cut is used, but these anything but strikingly.

We are told that this theatre does the biggest business of the city, but in our opinion it could do more if the appeal of the particular picture were put over the more strongly. The house has the right idea in selling itself first, but you cannot afford to stop there. It evidently works on the theory that every one wants to know what is happening at Keeney's today, but it does not grasp the idea of getting those who are not interested in that particular matter. There is too much type matter, too many adjectives, too much announcement of coming productions, and too little of the specific. It is hard to make such statements in the face of the fact that the theatre is doing the business, but with the right sort of advertising it could do more, and if it is doing capacity now it could work for longer runs.

If some theatres were as cool as some managers are to their patrons, how they would be thronged in summer.

WE'VE been studying motion picture advertising a mighty long time, but we will have to hand this work of the Grand theatre, name of town purposely omitted, the prize for just about the worst that we have ever seen. In this seven-inch double-column affair.

In the first place the name of the theatre and the date are practically hidden with the use of 8 point type for them and then the charm of the picture has been ignored to make it an "old time western thriller." As a matter of fact this would leave the impression with many that this was a reissue or something of the sort. The only merit that this one has is the amount of white space and we cannot resist the temptation of adding that it would have been just as convincing with the whole space white.

Exhibitors who will ignore every selling argument with a picture cannot expect to do business with it unless the people of their cities literally have no other place to go.

HERE'S a clever little display from the Strand theatre, Cincinnati. It occupies only 5¼ inches double columns, but there is a lot more punch in it than you will find in most solid pages. Now let's explain to you that Cincinnati is some ball town. The fans have been simply wild about winning a pennant but it has been y'ars and y'ars since such a thing happened. So the designed hit upon the line: "If the Cincinnati Reds only had Charlie." That was enough to get the attention and then he proceeded to talk about what a good baseball story this one is. It's certainly a splendid example of taking advantage of local conditions.

At the top the language of a fan in the bleachers talking to the pitcher is used and then at the bottom the talk is confined to a few short sentences which run:

Some bush leaguer, that boy.
But doggone it, he needed the "girl cure"—and got it.
Some baseball love story.

Good work, Strand theatre.

He who thinks most has time to forget business first.

GARDEN theatre, Des Moines, has made a strong picture appeal with this sixteen inch, four column display. Here the greatest reliance has been placed on the halftones, but it has been a bit overdone, largely the result of the printing that is obtained in this particular specimen. Here is a case where the ordinary rules are reversed inasmuch as the appeal largely lies on the exposition of the excesses of the Turkish soldiers on the helpless Christians. Scenes that bring these out are the more or less essential, and especially are they strong when women are shown as the victims.

But there are some things wrong. The picture of Aurora Madrigan is properly brought out strong, but there is a weakening of the title by using the simple little word "of" in smaller type. There was plenty of room for it and it should have been used. There was another bet passed up in failing to refer to the fact that this story had been told in black and white in the magazine featured by the Hearst syndicate and doubtless printed in Des Moines. Still stronger would have been the lengthening of this display by an inch and featuring the lines "Along the Trail of the Unspeakable Turk," in two 48 point lower case italic lines flush at the left. As it stands these lines are likely to be overlooked.

MAIN trouble about this one is that it stopped too soon. The Rex theatre, Jackson, Mich., would have found that it paid mighty well to add a two inch depth to this four column six inch display on "Mary Regan" and then to have included the selling argument.

But all the theatre has done is simply to use the cut furnished by the distributors and then quit. Advertising of this sort is unconvincing. It usually leaves the impression with us that the exhibitor himself did not know what the picture is about. Then what is the impression that it is apt to leave with the average patron?

We are insistent that the day has come when each picture must have a sales argument to put it over to the biggest business. Admittedly a popular star and a strong title will get lots of people into the theatre, but why not make the appeal of the story itself as an ADDITIONAL argument why people should come to your theatre?

HERE'S a new arrangement of an old idea and one that is sure to get the attention, especially when such a display is used after the actual opening of the picture's run. This display occupies 13½ inches and appeared Tuesday afternoon after the start of "The Westerners" at the Kinema theatre, Los Angeles.

We judge from this that the doorman of this theatre is well known to the patrons of the house, and, so, after a sketch of him we have the reading matter "The old doorman says the critics are tough eggs at their best, but they sure came out of their shell this time. He quotes—"And then follow excerpts from the criticisms of four of the Los Angeles papers. Below follows a plain announcement of the picture and then just a line giving some idea of its character. The remainder of the program is carried in the small box to the left of the scene picture.

The doorman's sayings are becoming a regular portion of the Kinema's advertising, and we feel sure that they will be watched.

A smile for your patrons sometimes brings you a laugh over your competitors.

PUBLICITY manager of the Strand theatre, Lexington, Ky., writes us so many nice things about this department that we hate to say anything uncomplimentary about this fourteen inch four column display, though we know that the designer wants to know what we think is wrong. And the main thing the matter is the lack of white space. There has been sufficient space taken, but the selling matter is considerably larger than necessary and we believe that it would have been read by many more had it been set in 8 pt. instead of 12 pt. and then have allowed for indentions of three or four ems at each side. After you get the eye attention you don't have to make the selling matter startling in its prominence unless you are using some brief catch line. This condensation would have allowed the name of the star and the title to stand out more and a Ben Day rule similar to the border of the cut instead of the heavy black line would have improved things.

Neither do we see the reason for "Today—Now—Today" unless that were meant to get some certain effect.

The fellow with too many irons in the fire is likely to find himself forgetting the fuel.

WE'VE had quite a lot to say from time to time about W. S. McLaren out in Jackson, Mich. He is one exhibitor who is not afraid to hit things hard when he thinks he has the goods and this is evidenced by the way he went to "The Red Lantern." He got the first page of the second section of the Sunday newspaper and then proceeded to give nine tenths of it up to smashing cuts. Of course this was the right thing to do. Aside from the art of Nazimova the next big selling punch is the lavishness of the production and the Oriental atmosphere. The cuts certainly bring these out and with the exception of the big fete scene in the center the pictures all show the star in such different and startling poses as are sure to arouse the curiosity of everyone.

Nazimova's name is made the puller by the way that it is placed and then the matter under the larger layout talks about the quality of the picture. The two boxes below are explaining the Hawaiian orchestra and the scenic pictures.

Courtesy is the password across the motion picture front.

AS we have repeated here many times, it is always a good thing for a theatre to couple up with local events, especially if it has the satisfaction of performance in the past. So Manager Harry Redmon, manager of the Majestic theatre, East St. Louis, Ill., has done with the Peace Edition of the East St. Louis Journal in welcoming home the returning troops.

A full page was used in this display, the text of which was devoted to telling the boys how glad the management of the theatre was to see them

Most fellows who "can't afford" to advertise won't be able to pay the tax collector, either.

HERE is a simple advertisement, and at the same time a good one. It is an eight inch five column display of the Franklin theatre, Saginaw, Mich. One of the few things that we see wrong with it, taking into consideration the mechanical possibilities in Saginaw, is the fact that it failed to mention that this production was made from the great stage success. There are a lot of people in Saginaw to whom that would have appealed.

The two cuts have the appeal of the little orphan girl and then the selling argument is based on that angle with this:

She never had known a mother or a father—she was an orphan named after a name on a tombstone and a name in the telephone book. She thought that happiness and a real home were never to be hers—but she found them both in "Daddy Long Legs."

NO one is a stronger believer than we in making your theatre THE thing, but that doesn't mean that you should ignore the feature entirely. Now here is a case of the Avon theatre, Decatur, Ill., where three fourths of the space is taken up in talking about the theatre, the music and the prices—things that probably everyone in the town knows. The result is that there is not space left in this six inch double column display to say anything real about the picture.

All of these things could have been told in much less space. The theatre should have a distinctive name plate with the sentence "The playhouse of preferred pictures" lettered in. Then the other matter should have been used in very small type. You don't have to display the prices large unless you are working on the bargain sale principle.

Again the cut is meaningless. That is probably not the fault of the theatre, but all the more reason why there sshould have been a more adequate selling talk used and why the display should have been adequate on the title and the star.

It's not what you have, but what you use that counts.

YES, it pays. Manager Guy Bennett of the Isis theatre, Lynchburg, Va., pursues the policy of using big space whenever he believes that the production warrants and it is no rare thing for him to go to full page space as he has done with "The Knickerbocker Buckaroo." This is largely an enlargement of one of the advertisements prepared by Famous Players-Lasky. There has never been a more appealing illustration than that head of Fairbanks and the "laughing" horse and it is mighty close to impossible for any one to pass it by.

We believe that it pays once in a while to put the greater portion of selling argument on the length of time required to make a picture and the cost—that is, unless you have been in the habit of exaggerating in the past. And that's just the bad thing of superlatives and ill-advised statements. When the time comes where they can legitimately be used you have already worn them out in talking about mediocre stuff.

USE of so many caps largely spoils this twelve inch four column display of the Washington theatre, Detroit. The result is that there is not enough contrast and the eye distinctly tires before one has read far and the temptation is strong to get relief with some lower case advertisement alongside. We have never seen it fail that the all cap advertisement is bad unless it consists of a few words.

This cut is a striking one and it pictures the tortured souls of the Armenian girls. We would rather have used a strong selling argument, along the lines just below the name of Miss Mardgiganian and have placed these right below the cut so that the connection would have been all the more apparent.

Chicago Shows How to Put It Over for the First Run House

THERE are two sides to the question, of course. The downtown theatres who have to pay an increased price for the first run of pictures naturally want to get people from all portions of the city to their house—they have to get a large share of them to make the ends meet. And the neighborhood theatres are just as anxious to persuade their patrons to hold off with announcements on the screen that such and such a picture being advertised by the downtown houses will be shown at their theatre at a certain date—and probably at a lower price.

So from the point of view of the first run house there has been an excellent campaign carried out by Jones, Linick and Shaeffer for the showing of the third of the new Chaplin pictures, "Sunnyside." All of this advertising carried the lines, the three houses of this company, the Randolph, McVicker's and Rialto were the only houses in Chicago where the picture could be seen—though the picture would be seen at other houses later was, of course, not mentioned.

The ethics of the inference that these would be the only theatres in the Windy City wherein "Sunnyside" would be shown is argued by the theory that an exhibitor is within his moral rights to protect his business by any measure which does not delude the public financially or which does not tend to arouse adverse criticism from patrons. The exact wording used to convey this impression reads: "The above are the only theatres where you can see Charlie Chaplin's newest comedy."

This leaves a wide open path to satisfactory explanations, if any are justified. It can properly be construed as an expression depending upon the element of time for its truthfulness. This would be true, because the Jones, Linick and Schaefer theatres were playing "Sunnyside" as a pre-release attraction, thereby having it exclusively for their trio of houses during the time it was being shown in them.

Half-tone effect and black type in five and one half inch double

This three column, thirteen and one-half inch is unusual space for a Chicago theatre

Unusually large newspaper space was used. "Sunnyside" was featured to the exclusion of any mention of the accompanying vaudeville bills, with the exception of a single phrase in small type.

The size of the space in proportion to the usual number of lines purchased for a single attraction was in itself a recommendation for public attention.

The campaign was decidedly successful. "Sunnyside" did a record business in each of the three theatres, and the ads neutralized the efforts of managers of neighborhood houses to capitalize the downtown exploitation by encouraging residents of outlying communities to wait for later showings at smaller prices.

EVEN MORE SERVICE FOR YOU

Your Idea and Ours Increases in Size with the New Book

WITH the increase in the size of the page we are able to give you this week even more criticism of advertising, under the heading of "Your Idea and Ours," than we have ever been able to give before. If you have missed it, turn back to this matter now, for you will find much of value there.

With this increase we will be able to give even prompter attention than in the past to specimens of advertising sent in by the exhibitor. These should reach this office not later than Friday if they are to appear in the issue that comes from the press the following Friday, as it is necessary to make the cuts in advance.

Again we want to caution exhibitors against marking the face of the advertisements and clipping off portions of the border. It often mars the appearance of an otherwise good display.

Numerous Stunts Used With "Heart of Humanity"

Stunts were used to the heart's content with the exploitation of "The Heart of Humanity," recently at the Lyric Theatre, Cincinnati, as the result of the co-operation of the local Universal office and Oscar Doob, publicity manager for the theatre.

Ten thousand small hearts bearing the title of the picture were attached to automobiles, awnings, telephone poles, etc., throughout the city, and several thousand of them were used in the lobby of the Lyric. Window displays of the song of the same name were obtained from department, music and five and ten cent stores, and all of these wrapped small cutouts with every package that went out.

At an advance showing, Father Francis J. Finn, of St. Xavier's College, himself a writer of national reputation, saw the picture, and his letter indorsing it was used in fac simile and distributed by the thousand.

Still another stunt was the hunt for a double of Dorothy Phillips. A large number of girls sent in their pictures and they were featured by the Cincinnati Post in a way that attracted a lot of attention.

Franklin Proves Content of Ads Is the Main Thing That Counts

MANAGER Harold B. Franklin of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, last week succeeded admirably in getting the real "Daddy Long Legs," atmosphere into his advertising, which was the most striking used in a long while by this house. Mr. Franklin started on Sunday with a 15-inch display, five columns three inches, a most attractive piece of advertising being worked out.

As usual there was plenty of white space as the illustration shows, while in the upper left and in the lower right corners Mr. Franklin gave patrons an inkling of what to expect in the picture. At the extreme right, just outside the ad, Mr. Franklin used his cool weather man, which is being reproduced in all Hippodrome publicity.

During the week, Mr. Franklin used a different ad each day, which while small (necessitated by the unusually high advertising rates in the Buffalo papers) nevertheless stood out like a house afire. The opening ad Monday was supplemented by a reproduction in a two-column cut of the check for $40,000 paid by Miss Pickford for the screen rights to the story. This, of course, caught the eye at once, while the smaller ad also seemed to jump from the sheet. The publicity plan was somewhat enlarged upon, because the picture was shown for the entire week, a departure from the usual Hippodrome policy.

Mr. Franklin also got a lot of publicity by inviting the orphans of all the local institutions to special morning shows, especially for the children. Two hundred little tots, deaf mutes and orphans crowded into the Hippodrome at the first special show Monday morning and settled down in the big leather chairs for the time of ther lives. The youngsters enjoyed the picture immensely, the great "prune strike," one of the many laughable incidents in the story making a distinct hit. The only time the tots expressed dissatisfaction was when the srceen announced the entertainment was over. This same scene was repeated every morning during the week, and Mr. Franklin is the most popular man in Buffalo according to anyone of the children of Buffalo's various orphan asylums.

The lobby display was interesting, Mr. Franklin again using his new illuminated panel posters with striking effect. A new program was also introduced this week, with the front page showing a new photo of Anita Stewart, who came to the Hippodrome this week in her new picture. The inside of the program is attractively arranged and quite the best thing ever produced of its kind.

The showing of "Daddy Long Legs," for a week was a sort of experiment, Mr. Franklin wanting to see just how such a policy would work in Buffalo this fall, when it is understood, weekly showings will be the thing.

Chicago Manager Features Single Event in News Weekly

It is not an unusual thing to feature news reals, but it is out of the ordinary to take out a special event and devote a considerable portion of the lobby and the advertising to it, but this is just what Manager Aaron G. Gollis, of the Pershing Theatre, Chicago, did with pictures of Lieut. Lockhart in a series of daring aeroplane feats which were included in a recent number of International News. Mr. Gollis had a number of special signs prepared and then heralds issued bearing on this event alone. He based this exploitation on the belief that people want thrills.

70 Special Service Sections Printed Up to Date for Your Aid

UP to the present issue no less than seventy Special Service Sections have been printed by the MOTION PICTURE NEWS for the benefit of exhibitors who were going to show these pictures. We advise that these sections be carefully filed away so that they may be at hand when you start in to exploit any of these offerings, or that you pretserve the full copy and the index.

First publication of the index brought so many letters that we are now republishing it and adding the Special Service Sections that have been printed since that time. And we want to repeat here the invitation to exhibitors to send us in accounts of the way that they employed any of the ideas outlined in these sections, or any of their original ideas that were used, since such accounts are a further and great aid to the exhibitors generally.

Whole City Helps Manager In Exploiting "Fires of Faith"

ONE of the best instances on record of getting on record of getting a whole city to work for the exploitation of a picture has just been supplied by Manager L. G. Dobbs of the Stratford theatre, Poughkeepsie, N. Y. Certainly if everyone did not see this photoplay based on the work of the Salvation Army it was no fault of the exploitation the picture had.

For several days before the picture was shown Mr. Dodds advertised heavily in the local newspapers, taking more space than usually. The press book stories were utilized and the whole city was plastered with the one's, three's, six's and twenty-four sheets supplied for the production.

But this was by no means all. When the show opened there appeared simultaneously in many of the book store windows throughout the city a display of Charles Kenmore Ulrich's novelization of "Fires of Faith." They carried signs reading "See and read 'Fires of Faith,'" and also took advertising space in the Pougkeepsie newspapers.

The song which had been written around the picture using the same title and which, by the way, has developed into a highly successful piece of music, was displayed in the windows of all the local stores selling sheet music with signs reading "See and hear 'Fires of Faith.'"

There is also a phonograph record of the song on the market and this was displayed in all local music stores. Moreover dealers in phonographs in the city gladly loaned the bookstores machines on which to play these records. Thus there was added cooperation in exploitation—between the stores themselves.

It is interesting to note that when Manager Dodds approached all these dealers with his proposition they were eager to cooperate with him in every way possible. They immediately recognized that beside being good business for the theatre that it was boosting their own stock considerably.

But the book store and sheet music store window displays have been used in the past and Manager Dodds was not content to stop with them. His next move was to visit a number of the bakeries in Poughkeepsie and broach a proposition to them. The result was that these bakeries arranged special window displays of doughnuts with a sign reading "Salvation Army doughnuts, made according to the recipe of Catherine Calvert, who stars in "Fires of Faith." Special prices on these doughnuts were offered for the days of the showing of the picture. A picture of one of the bakery tie-ups is included here, but it was mighty hard to get. The doughnuts sold as fast as they were made.

The Liggett drug store in Poughkeepsie was induced to serve up a special "Fires of Faith" sundae with a doughnut. This combination sold for fifteen cents. Subsequently the opposition drug stores got busy with a "Catherine Calvert Combination."

In presenting "Fires of Faith" at his theatre Dodds received more cooperation from the church authorities. Several church entertainments were going on at the time and the services of the church singers were offered free to assist in putting the song over. One local singer, very popular in Poughkeepsie, rendered several songs at each showing of the picture always including "Fires of Faith." The ministers also cooperated to the extent of placing the dates of the exhibition of the picture on the church calendars.

All this cooperation was received due to the efforts of Dodds and his aides in putting the content and message of the picture fairly and squarely up to the various local dealers.

It was due to the fact that the exhibition of the picture came in at the tail end of the Salvation Army drive in Poughkeepsie that even members of the community assisting in exploiting the picture. Owners of automobiles carried signs advertising the picture while the taxicab companies fell into line and also carried this advertising. Even the local hotel keepers put "Fires of Faith" doughnuts on their bills during the days of the showing.

The ministers and women's clubs throughout the city were canvassed and endorsements of the picture solicited and readily given. The papers devoted considerable space to these endorsements. A contest for school children submitting the best essay on the picture was announced with prizes of Mr. Ulrich's book autographed by Miss Calvert, and copies of the song. The mayor of Poughkeepsie agreed to act as judge of the contest!

Poughkeepsie has only 30,000 people and its Main Street isn't as big as lots of other Main Streets. But all Poughkeepsie's Main Street, between the six-sheets and the various tie-ups, was placarded from one end of the town to the other.

As a result of this advertising and the fine cooperation rendered by the newspapers every one of Poughkeepsie's thirty thousand knew that the film was playing. And most of Poughkeepsie, from the youngster who was going to write an essay to the mayor who was going to judge it, took a vital interest in the picture.

All of which tells why the Stratford played to S. R. O. throughout the run of the picture.

"Sis Hopkins" on the Streets Brings Big Business

Charles C. Perry, manager of the Strand Theatre, Minneapolis, got all sorts of attention during the showing of the Mabel Normand picture, "Sis Hopkins," by using a girl attired as "Sis" on the principal streets. She wore her hair plaited and a short skirt, displaying the coarse white stockings and the inturned toe effect for which the character is notable. She carried a parasol on the top of which was a sign bearing the legend: "See me at the Strand, Sis Hopkins."

During the noon hour especially did the girl attract much attention, and the news from Milwaukee is that scores were late in reporting back at the office after lunch hour.

Tropical Setting Gets Attention in a Tropical City

It looks like a hard thing to put over a tropical display in a city where the tropics are right at home, but this is just what was done at the Casino theatre, Jacksonville, Fla., for the showing of Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas." The management got the palm trees and the moss very easily, but it figured that this was not enough, because Floridians can see palm trees and moss every time they open their eyes. So he included the "mysterioso" effect. Only dim lights were used in the lobby and from behind every tree and mass of foliage there was just the suggestion of the head of a cannibal, made from the cutouts.

Atlanta Manager Uses Protest Of Bishop to Boost "Red Lantern"

WHEN Manager Willard C. Patterson, of the Criterion Theatre, Atlanta, Ga., got his chance to show Nazimova in "The Red Lantern," he decided that he was going to make the Southern city sit and take notice, and he certainly did.

Criterion's lobby is not deep, and that rather handicaps displays, but still a wonderful Oriental effect was obtained by the use of several large parasols, a huge lantern at the top of the lobby and then cut outs, wisteria and smaller lanterns, while a huge Chinese inscription in front of the theatre got attention.

Special posters were designed for the engagement. Except in the frames that are used when the theatre proper is closed, the Criterion does not use the ordinary paper furnished by the exchanges, but has started in to design its own matter in a style in keeping with the character of the house. Regular posters were, however, used above the balcony effect in the lobby, three sheets being employed.

Two specially designed frames were used on either side of the lobby. One of these carried a full length picture of the star in her somewhat scanty garb as the Goddess of the Red Lantern, and the other was illustrated with a large picture of Mahlee, the Euasian girl. The reading matter consisted merely of the name of the star, the title, the author of the story and the name of the director. Vivid colors were used to bring out the pictures. The photos herewith show this display.

Criterion theatre is known through the columns of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS as one of the most artistic advertisers, and thework in this case was no exception. Quarter pages and larger space were employed, bringing out the striking figure of Nazimova and with the small amount of reading matter that was used hand lettered. Details of the story and production were left to the generous illustrations and reading notices given by the Atlanta newspapers.

One thing that was not on the schedule came up that helped wonderfully in getting publicity. Now the Candler family is one of the most prominent in Georgia, and everyone knows the name. It has included governors, U. S. senators, the manufacturer of Coco Cola and a bishop of the Methodist Church. Bishop Candler protested to the mayor of Atlanta against the showing of the picture, because, presumably of the line in which it is shown that the missionaries are willing to Christianize the people to a certain point, but that there is a line drawn when it comes to marriage with white blood.

At any rate Manager Patterson saw a splendid chance here. He came out in a fifteen inch four column displays which read:

"Bishop Warren Candler registers complaint with the Mayor of Atlanta that Nazimova in "The Red Lantern," playing this week at the Criterion theatre, should be suppressed and not shown here.

"The Criterion theatre has in the past, and will in the future, present only high class, clean photoplay productions—suitable for any man, woman or child.

"Bishop Candler admits that he has not seen the picture, although the manager of the Criterion theatre invited him to view it.

"The public is the judge."

And then the theatre went ahead to quote the opinion of Clark Howell, owner of the Atlanta Constitution and one of the best known newspaper men in America and of Henry B. Kennedy, one of the leading citizens of Atlanta."

Such publicity as this could not have been "planted." It was a sensible and proper use of a protest of a man who was doubtless sincere in his convictions, but who left the loop-hole that he had never seen the picture for himself. And therefore we'll make a guess that after this advertising appeared the most of the followers of his faith in the Georgia city got right down to the Criterion to see what it was all about.

Protest Only Stirs Up a City to Throng "Auction of Souls"

A LITTLE group of elderly spinsters who were determined to reform something, a longhaired camel—gender male—and a terrific sand storm transplanted from the arid stretches of the Mesopotamian desert to the stage of the New Lyric theatre in Minneapolis combined to give not only that city but the entire state of Minnesota the greatest amount of excitement and gossip that has ever characterized the local presentation of a special feature attraction.

The entire plot, which proved to be one of the most successful works of exhibitor showmanship that the Northwestern city has conceived for the exploitation of a production, grew to such proportions that it involved the Governor of the State, the city officials of Minneapolis, and last, but of equal importance, the star reporter and prize "sob story" writer on every local newspaper.

The "little group of elderly spinisters" touched off the fuse to the big promotion bomb immediately after reading an announcement in the newspapers that "Auction of Souls," the story of Aurora Mardiganian, sole survivor of five hundred thousand Christian Armenian girls, was soon to be presented at the New Lyric theatre as a First National attraction. The spinsters long since had read the serial version of the production which had been published in the newspapers. They knew all about it under the former title of "Ravished Armenia." They decided that the pictured story of the greatest crusade of barbarism against Christians in the world's history should not be shown.

They took the matter up with the Federation of Women's Club. Their initial blocking effort was their greatest mistake. The Federation of Women's Clubs is a big, broad minded organization. A committee listened to the "reformers" and then attended a private showing of the production. Instead of condemning the picture the committee recommended its endorsement by the Federation as a splendid production and wondrful propaganda for the cause of Armenia. The endorsement was given and it immediately started a tremendous "scrap" between the reform and progresive elements.

This was wonderful newspaper copy. The star reporters did themselves proud. Their stories were republished in every city and town in the state. It was great "state news." Of greater importance to the management of the New Lyric, it was unpurchasable publicity.

Satisfied that the opposition was completely overruled, the advertising department of the theatre, in charge of J. L. Johnston, director of publicity for Ruben and Finkelstein, owners of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit franchise for that territory, jumped into action. Billboards, newspapers, store windows and the theatre lobby fairly screamed the coming of "Auction of Souls." The effort was to take full and immediate advantage of the vast amount of newspaper publicity about the "reform agitation."

One thousand special two-sheet posters, one hundred eight-sheets, five hundred street car cards and two hundred and fifty window cards supplemented the usual amount of outdoor matter.

McCormick Links "Mary Regan" With Two Stewart Successes

"THEME" advertising is the latest contribution to ingenious newspaper exploitation for special feature attractions by S. Barrett McCormick of the Circle Theatre at Indianapolis.

He defines it in an explanation of its use and of its value to the box office as "a sort of trade mark style of text and illustration to be used in promoting each release of a series of star productions so that the public mind will, from the similarity of art work and type for each current attraction featuring a given star, immediately associate that picture with previous pictures with the same star."

Its value in getting the last possible dollar of profit from past-and-gone advertising investments on a star during the presentation of a new and current release is exemplified in his campaign on "Mary Regan," third of the series starring Anita Stewart. Mr. McCormick's exploitations of her "Virtuous Wives" and "A Midnight Romance," the two previous First National attractions starting Miss Stewart, have been described in MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Themetic advertising, to be successful, must embrace two things, according to Mr. McCormick. It must be in harmony with the theme of the particular production to which it relates, and treat specifically in its text and illustrations with the title and action of the story. Secondly—and this is the real effort at theme—it must possess a sufficient degree of similarity with previous advertising on earlier releases featuring the same star, and without definitely mentioning any of the preceding attractions, to instantly associate the two extremes, the past and the present offerings, in the thoughts of the readers.

Mr. McCormick analyzed the story of "Mary Regan" as a structure that had been reared on an ultra-modern theme, the society of the underworld and its points of contact with the legitimate aristocracy of big business and "big pleasure." He viewed it not as a "crook play," but as an exposition of that branch of American social life which is both risque and bizarre in its conduct and methods of livelihood.

Accordingly, his illustrations were prepared to carry out that atmosphere from the production. The figure drawings are obviously suggestive, but in a refined and thoroughly permissable way. They typify the representatives of both sexes who always are creatures of interest to the public at large. They are the men and women who, in the poses that the artist gave them under McCormick's

YOU CAN HELP

Have You That Much Interest in Better Advertising

WE have invited exhibitors to help in the compilation of data about the co-operation of newspapers and motion picture theatres. We have told you of the census that we are taking and invited your aid—for the reason that this is really being done in your behalf.

There was a splendid response to the questionnaire sent out, but it remains that some newspapers did not reply. The MOTION PICTURE NEWS is a magazine of strictly exhibitor circulation and is not permitted to go to the general public. Therefore some newspapers may not know its position on advertising.

A second letter has just gone out to the delinquents. Get on the 'phone right now and call up your papers and find out whether they have responded and tell them to do so. Your voice will help.

important result in his campaign for "Mary Regan"—to interest patrons in this particular attraction. Then, without in any way minimizing or detracting from the direct interest that the art work and copy created in the third First National release starring Anita Stewart, he so balanced the layouts and the general arrangement relating the illustrations to text that there was a pronounced similarity between the completed ads for "Mary Regan" and those which he had previously used for "Virtuous Wives" and "A Midnight Romance."

"Young woman," said the father of the man she had tried to save from himself, "How is it that I am introduced to you as Miss Randolph, yet you answer to the call of Mrs. Brown—and I find you in my son's room? What's the game?"
"—I have no game, just the name. Will the world never let me forget that I am a convict's daughter?"

One of the ads during the showing, quoting from the titles

This formed the second factor in what he characterizes as "themetic exploitation for motion pictures." The two previous Anita Stewart attractions have been successful. They had pleased. Undoubtedly, he reasoned, there were hundreds of people in Indianapolis who would remember either one or both of them as good entertainment.

Apparently, he concluded that it would materially weaken the inferred quality of "Mary Regan" to make too specific and direct a reference to the two preceding Stewart releases.

This is just one of fifteen pages of exploitation matter. Do not miss any of them

Singer and Spanish atmosphere at California, Los Angeles

Spanish Atmosphere for Farrar Picture at the Los Angeles California Theatre

DURING the showing of Geraldine Farrar in "The Stronger Vow," the California theatre, Los Angeles, came very near re-creating the character Miss Farrar interprets with the rendition of "The Girls of Seville," by Miss Beatrice Neal, There was a tropical setting used and the singer appeared in a Spanish costume seated with a guitar in hand as she sang.

Fred Miller and Harry Leonhart, managers of the California, are great believers in creating the atmosphere for feature offerings and therefore the presentation was opened with a setting on the stage reproducing one of the scenes from the picture. This was shown during the overture, "La Reja" and "La Zarzuela" from "La Faria."

Of particular significance was Wednesday evening, when Miss Farrar herself made her first public appearance in a motion picture theatre as special courtesy to Presentation Director Harry Leonhardt. Miss Farrar appeared on the stage, following the showing of "The Stronger Vow" and made a pleasing talk.

The California theatre has found it decidedly profitable to feature special numbers on the Robert-Morton orchestral pipe organ installed by the American Photo Player Co., two special numbers are given at each program in addition to the organ being used extensively during the projection of pictures. One of the numbers is that by Jesse Crawford, in which he interprets new songs on the organ while the words are projected upon the screen. Attractive art slides in black and white specially made by the artist staff of the California are used. During the present week Crawford has been playing "Beautiful Girls of Somewhere."

Woman Exhibitor Scores Hit With Special Matinees

Experience of Miss Florence Fenyvessy, manager of the Strand Theatre, Rochester, N. Y., in putting on children's matinees with the co-operation of local societies, proves again that the motion picture theatre can become a recognized power in any community, as well as a place of entertainment. The matinees are held on Saturday mornings and are sponsored by the Better Film League of Rochester.

Its latest drive for better pictures included "The Blue Bird." The matinee was given for all the orphaned children of Rochester. Miss Fenyvessy also had the co-operation of the Rochester Automobile Club, which provided transportation. The club also ran a series of reading notices in the newspapers telling of its work.

The results in the line of publicity were a full column story in the Rochester Times, and a double column picture of Miss Fenyvessy together with a record of her work in entertaining children from various institutions in the city in the Rochester Herald.

Minneapolis Theatre Turns Protest to Boost for "Auction of Souls" daily in each of the three newspapers in St. Paul and Minneapolis. They varied in size from two and three inch single column announcements to half page smashes.

Then came Aurora Mardiganian herself, who was scheduled to make several personal appearances. The "sob writers" interviewed her for columns of copy. State papers reprinted the stories. The local Armenians formed a temporary organization and entertained her. They presented her with a gold locket fashioned, according to newspaper accounts, from metal from the old mines of King Solomon at Tchemesh Gedsack, Armenia, near Mount Ararat. More newspaper stories.

She was invited to appear at a special function arranged by the Young Women's Christian Association. More newspaper publicity independent of the advertising. She collapsed while speaking. Result—first page stories.

The entire exploitation had assumed totally unexpected proportions by this time. An invitation was extended for a meeting between Miss Mardiganian and Governor Burnquist and his staff. Attorney General Clifford Hilton received her. Another newspaper story, with details of the eulogistic speech by the state executive. Strangely, "Auction of Souls" was mentioned several times in all of the stories.

The presentation at the New Lyric received the same careful attention that had marked the advance exploitation. Special stage effects included an extremely realistic desert sandstorm.: A camel, borrowed from the local zoo, was chauffeured by a driver dressed in Armenian costume, who performed the ceremony of the Mohammedan prayers while the orchestra played Oriental music. About the driver, during this atmosphere stunt, were clustered a group of girls in Armenian garb. Night tints were used in the lighting effects. These faded to red and then to pink as the sand storm started. Sand whipped furiously across the stage, and moving clouds gave greater realism to the presentation. It was one of the most unique sensational stage effects that Minneapolis theatre goers had ever seen.

Negro and Whitewash Are Used With Warner Feature

While it may not be very dignified, this stunt of Poli's Bijou Theatre, New Haven, Conn., certainly got the attention. Manager Walter Griffith decided that he would do something more than the newspaper advertising, so he went out to find the genetlman of the darkest hue in New Haven. It wasn't so hard to find him and neither was it hard to persuade the Negro to consent to being arrayed in full dress, including the essential silk hat. But when Mr. Griffith insisted on whitewashing one side of the Negro's face there had to be an extra shekel passed. But at any rate, he went out that way carrying a sign "I'm the Man Who Turned White. See me at Poli's Bijou." He almost created a riot on the Yale campus, but several hundred of the students followed him back to the theatre.

First full page of St. Louis theatre advertising

St. Louis Paper Establishes a New Record With Full Page of Picture Advertising

IT was only a few short months ago that when you looked for advertising of motion picture theatres in St. Louis theatres, you had to be careful to hunt around the corners of the pages for small displays hidden away.

But what a change there has been in St. Louis and most of the other cities since we began discussing newspaper and motion picture cooperation in the principal cities and urging more and better advertising on the part of the theatres.

Now comes along the St. Louis Star with the first solid page of motion picture advertising that has ever been printed in a St. Louis paper. Not alone are the larger theatres represented there, but many of the smaller houses are advertising. It is a good sign and indicates that St. Louis is to soon be up among the leaders in advertising.

The Star announces that it is giving local exhibitors the fullest cooperation and that it is making every effort to develop the sort of advertising that will be mutually profitable and extending aid in the news columns. That is the only way in which to develop exhibitors who do not believe that advertising will pay them. Rates are rather high in St. Louis and there are really too many papers, so that it is hard for an exhibitor to use big space in all the papers and make it pay, and they are wise in selecting a paper like the Star that offers to do the most.

As a matter of fact there has been a considerable shift of policy on all of the St. Louis papers to motion picture matter that is distinctly encouraging.

Cut-Out Two Stories High Used by Brazil Theatre

A record for cut-outs is claimed by the South American branch of the Fox Film Corporation for the Pathe Cinema theatre, Rio de Janiero during the showing of "Jack and the Beanstalk." It reached a height of more than two stories in front of the building, and, of course, got the attention of every one.

Every available form of publicity was made full use of by this enterprising theatre. For instance, a very attractive blotter is issued, on one side of which is a beautifully lithographed portrait of a charming girl with the name of the theatre

How New York Stages the Show

FOR the first time in several weeks the tense features are in the majority at the three big New York motion picture houses, the Strand and the Rivoli both having features without laughs in them. And at both theatres the lack of these is made up with a Mack Sennett comedy, "Hearts and Flowers."

Dorothy Dalton is the star at the Strand in "Other Men's Wives," a modern story of rather swifter high society, but through the music and the remainder of the bill there are laughs and tunefulness. "Merry Wives of Windsor" is the overture and there are two vocal numbers and an Outing-Chester.

Robert Warwick is the star at the Rivoli in "Secret Service," in which William Gillette appeared so successfully on the speaking stage. As a prelude to this "Carry Me Back to Old Verginny" is sung and beside the comedy at the end there is a Mutt and Jeff included in the Pictorial to lighten things up. One of the most brilliant numbers yet staged at the Rivoli is "The White Peacock," a tone poem, danced by a girl.

At the Rialto the feature is largely comedy, Charles Ray in "Hay Foot, Straw Foot." There Dr. Riesenfeld is reviving another one of the old Chaplin comedies and "East Street" is certainly getting a lot of laughs. There is one of the most beautiful Bruce scenics yet in "Sundown" and this is shown to the rendition of a duet from behind the scenes that makes it all the more effective, Grainger's "Colonial Song," which was itself inspired by beautiful scenery.

At the Rialto next week Marguerite Clark will be seen in "Girls," Louise Glaum will come back to Broadway after a long absence in "Sahara" which will be shown at the Strand. Elsie Ferguson will be the star at the Rivoli in "The Avalanche."

Rivoli Theatre

WHILE it is really unnecessary to comment on the quality of the music that always marks the bills at the Rivoli, there is a specially notable one this week in which artistry and melody are rarely combined.

With the feature a tense drama of the Civil War days, a larger part of the remainder of the program is devoted to comedy, which is accentuated by the selections, while the accompaniment of the feature intensifies the heart interest to a considerable degree.

"Rosamond" is the brilliant overture this week and this is played with the lights gold. There is something haunting about the music of this selection, something remindful of the old time airs. Much of it is carried on the strings and the music is wonderfully tuneful though the finish is rather flat and without the usual crashing effects.

Rivoli Pictorial opens with a bar of "How Dry I Am" on the brass and then the oboe finishing the strain as the appropriate introduction for Gaumont pictures of the anti-drys making their demonstration at Washington. After this bar the music swings into "Guiding Star." These pictures get as much applause as the war pictures at the time of the keenest interest. Kinograms shows us some interesting views of bird hunting on a desert island off the west coast of Mexico and there are some fine shots of pelicans, baby gulls and nesting cormorants. International follows with pictures of "a collection of quacks" at East Orleans, Mass. showing scenes on a duck farm and then Gaumont transfers us to the Pacific coast with scenes at Goat-Airy with goats milk being produced for wounded soldier. "Gondolier" is the music through all of these until we have a fight between two goats named Willard and Dempsey and here there is a change to "Bartered Bride" with the drums predominant.

Now note how a little thing like the goat fight has been connected with the animated cartoon that follows, Jeff and Mutt in "A Prize Fight." Effects are used all through this and especially whistles to accentuate the laugh. "When It's Circus Day" is played until the scene where Mutt is seen lifting the weight and then there is a change to "Pierrot and Pierrette" until he starts to whistle and then we have "Whistler and the Dog" with piccolo effects for a few bars and then there follows through "Pierrot and Pierrette" and "Down South."

Pathe shows pictures of motor cyclists trying for new records at Atlanta, Ga. and here a polka is used. Kinograms presents pictures of Yale defeating Harvard in the rowing race, to the same accompaniment. Then come Gaumont pictures of hand grenades being turned into savings banks at Washington to aid the War Savings Stamp movement, shown to "Serenade." Pathe presents a cartoon revelation of some of the secrets of the war showing how vessels guarded themselves against torpedos and mines. "March of the Dwarfs" is used here with the trumpets muted. From Pathe comes pictures of the cruiser Milwaukee as she was two years ago when she went ashore off Eureka, Cal. and how she looks today, with an agitato and effects of the pounding sea. Pathe pictures of Mexican government troops guarding Juarez against the rebels get a laugh and then the Americans watching the border a cheer. "Pan-Americana" is used with effects for the machine gun practise. With the pictures of engineers building a bridge in record time a one step is used and then with the title "On the Rio Grande" there is a muted trumpet call and the end of the Magazine.

With the lights all red and only the background of the red curtain James Harrod, tenor, attired as a Southern gentleman of Civil War days, then sings delightfully "Carry Me Back to Old Verginny," a fitting prelude to the feature, Robert Warwick in "Secret Service." The lights dim down after the first verse and there is only a spot on the singer at the end as he disappears behind the curtains and the screen curtain comes down for the feature.

The battle agitato from "San Juan Hill" is played at the screening and then with the scene showing the Richmond ladies at the bazaar for the wounded soldiers "Carry Me Back to Old Verginny" is brought back. With the introduction of young Varney "Passepied" is used and then "In the Shade of the Old Apple Tree" with "Gems from Stephen Foster" coming in as the boy tells his mother that he wants to volunteer. With the scene showing the headquarters of the Sixth army there is a roll of drums, very soft with a couple of numbered selections following. When Henry Dumont volunteers there is a change to "Sons of Liberty" and then for the scenes in the negro quarter of Richmond, "Sunny South," starting with the "Old Black Joe" strain.

Then comes another numbered one with "Uncle Tom's Cabin" for the scene on the hospital boat, and then a numbered one as the wounded officer enters the Varney home two strains of "Longing for You" followed through with Rebikoff's "Song Without Words." With the scene in Libby prison there are extracts from "Pomp and Circumstance" and then when the girl is seen picking flowers the theme is first introduced, Fibich's "Poem." Here the organ takes up the music until the girl whispers to Dumont that the balls have been taken from

Then with the end of the first verse the girl walked over to the steps at the right, the man singer following her up the steps across and then down. The song used was, of course, "Upstairs and Down" the cartridges and then the theme is brought in again. Two numbered selections with the battle effects are then brought in and after the explosion of the shells we have "Pearl Fishers" and then when Dumont reveals his identity to the Yankee officers "Sons of Liberty." With the title "Several years later" "The Vacant Chair" is appropriately played for the decoration day scenes and then at the very end where Dumont kisses the girl's hand the theme is used to the end.

The next number is a fantasy, or tone poem, "The White Peacock," by Charles T. Griffiths, staged by Adolf Bohm of the Metropolitan Opera House with a scenic setting by John Wenger. The lights are all in blue and the orchestra bathed in that color and a few strains of the music are played before the curtains part revealing a sloping hill effect with quaint, slender trees in the background and a blue sky slightly tinted with red. The girl dancer is seen reclining on the top of the hill and gradually she awakens and comes down and executes the peacock dance. She is garbed in tights except for the huge peacock wings and breast effects, and executes the delightful dance and then returns to her first position just as the curtains come together.

"Hearts and Flowers," an unusually mirthful Mack Sennett comedy is the balance for the bill. The first of the picture shows the interior of a theatre and the orchestra is tacet until the screen orchestra is seen tuning up and then we have these effects and as the leader starts his direction "Weiner Blut. No. 1" is played hesitatingly to action. There is another pause as the girl sneezes, and effects, and then when the screen orchestra starts up "And They Called It Dixieland" is used until the orchestra leader declares that he wishes women wouldn't follow him around and here "Can You Tame Wild Women?" is the music until the title "Like the flowers need the sunshine" and here "That's How I Need You" is played. Then with the kidding scenes "Gates of Gladness" is played and with the title "The brighter side" there is a change to "By the Sea." When the orchestra leader tells the girl that it is lucky she has an uncle "Yvette" is used and then for the wedding day "Hearts and Flowers" with a burlesque effect. Then with the title "This is the man" "Sensation" is played and then the last bars of the chorus of "By the Old Mill Stream" as the men are seen singing. After the view of the song is over there is a change to "Cuckoo" and then as the man runs away "Avec Elan" to the end.

Superba theatre, Los Angeles, is located on a street where there are many passers-by and the management finds that the decorations of the lobby count a great deal. For the showing of Dorothy Phillips in "Destiny" the star was used as the main thing in the decorations, a number of large ones bearing the title being swung from the ceiling, and the smaller stars appearing in the frames that bore the star pictures and scenes from the production. All of the cards used were especially prepared for the theatre, cut-puts of scene pictures being used in some of them and others devoted to the personality of the star

Strand Theatre

SINCE the feature, Dorothy Dalton in "Other Men's Wives" is decidedly tense and without a laugh in it, Managing Director Joseph L. Plunkett, of the Strand, has devoted the remainder of the program to comedy and music with a heart interest. It is the sort of music that is in contrast with the society type of the feature.

"Merry Wives of Windsor," which is always an excellent overture when there is needed something especially lively and with the comedy touch, is played with the lights in gold. We like the way the Strand is sending the curtain up these days with the director in his place, instead of the waiting for him to make his appearance. This, however, is not possible at the Rialto or Rivoli with the arrangement of the orchestra pits.

Strand Topical opens with the motor bike races already described played to "Sawdust and Spangles," and then we have International pictures of the old gradutes and the Yale freshies celebrating together and then Ex-President Taft and Admiral Sims as distinguished guests we have "Crimson and Red" used. Pathe pictures of the Milwaukee wreck follow, with the effects reproduced and storm music. International shows pictures of wounded soldiers raising chickens and for this "Moon Glory" is played. International shows some interesting pictures of blowing up a mountain in Mexico, and for the first part of this the same music is continued with crashes or cymbals and drums for the explosion.

"Valse Gracieuse" is played for Topics of the Day, which bring their usual number of laughs, including "A man has just invented an illuminated key hole—Too late" and "Now that Sergeant York is married it will be seen whether he is a finished fighter."

Under the general title of "Interesting Town in Brittany" we have Pathecolor pictures of scenes Quimper with "On the Strand at Parame" played delightfully. International supplies pictures of the British dirigible R-33, which is soon to attempt the flight across the Atlantic, and here "Over the Clouds" is used. From the same source come pictures of the Polish army entering their capital and for this "Austriche Hongroise" is used, played stirringly. Pathe presents pictures of the Pershing stadium at Joinville, France, where the inter-allied soldiers games are to be played, and some views of the Americans in training. For these "Pershing March" is played. The Topical comes to an end with some splendid Pathe pictures of flying over the Atlantic fleet at Hampton Roads. There are some striking views of the battleships in line, and then of some performing aviators. "Anchor and Star March" is the music.

"Piking After Pizarro" is the Outing-Chester showing some scenes in Peru. Tambourines and violins carry the music at the start of this, and then the organ takes it up. There are some scenes where the adventurers are hunting for a gold mine and a striking picture of a hanging bridge that we remember having seen in some other picture several years ago. Llamas are shown and a number of huts of the natives, most of whom are very shy on raiment.

There is an interesting effect with the first vocal number. We hear a voice from off stage, and then the stage curtains part revealing a church window effect, with the lights all in blue. One expects the singer to make his appearance, but we have Walter Pontius singing the entire selection "O Lola Bianca" from "La Cavaleria Rusticana" from back of stage. But with the applause from that number he appears from the side of the main stage and then renders "A Rose A Kiss For You." The audience doesn't want him to quit, but in the nature of things he has to and then we have the feature. ....

At the screening "La Feu aux Perles" is played, introduction only, and then followed through with "Melodie." Then with the introduction of Cynthia Brook we have Barnard's "Admiration," and then with the scene of the arrival of the guests "Air de Ballet" is played. With the scene where Flint goes to talk with the girl "Constance" is used, and as he tells the other man's wife that they will not admit defeat "Drifting Along" is played. With the scenes at Flint's mountain lodge the organ takes up the music. And, by-the-way, we never saw such extensive interiors in any lodge that we ever knew. If all the rooms were as big as the main room and the bedroom shown it must have covered a whole chain of mountains.

With the Hallowe'en party the orchestra comes back with "Tents of the Arabs," and then when Flint and the girl are seen together again "Serenade Romantique" is used. As she leaves him "Minnie, Shimmie For Me" is played very pp and is followed through with "Fluffy Ruffles," which continues until the scene where Cynthia is seen lying on the bed, and here "Adoration" is played once through, following through with Drumm's "Reverie," and then the organ takes up the music again, continuing this time for seventeen minutes, and then coming back with the title "Marching with the passing months" with "Serenade," and then with the scene where Gordon enters the girl's office to "Open Thy Blue Eyes" to the end.

Miss Ann Rutledge, one of the most popular sopranos who has ever been heard at any of the motion picture theatres, then sings a double number, "Who Knows" and "Mighty Lak a Rose."

Then there comes one of the Pathe Analyses of Motion pictures and this is followed by the same Mack Sennett comedy that is being shown at the Rivoli, "Hearts and Flowers." This opens with the organ and includes orchestral renditions of "Oh, How He Can Sing," selections from "The Rainbow Girl," and then the organ again until the title "I'm a Sick Man" when the orchestra returns with "My Chocolate Soldier" and "I Want a Doll" followed through to the end.

MacDowell's "Maestoso" is the final organ selection.

Here is an interesting little novelty prepared to aid in the exploitation of "Lady Windemere's fan. The cut shows the fan spread out and the reading matter on the various pages. The front page has the phrase, "Lady I love your ——," and then there is an oval opening, revealing the word "Face" on the first, "Eyes" on the second, and "Money" on the third.

Rialto Theatre

DR. REISENFELD is reviving another of the old Chaplin comedies at the Rialto this week and "Easy Street" certainly gets as many laughs as if it were being shown for the first time. No little part of the reception of the picture is due to the splendid musical score that is used and the effects at which the Rialto theatre is so good.

"The Bat" is the striking overture. It is played with the lights pink on the proscenium arch and orchestra and the center dome purple. The first part is brilliantly done largely on the strings with the drums coming in often. Most of this is in something of the waltz effect with the militant air coming in at times, and a smashing finish.

Then comes one of the most beautiful of the Robert Bruce scenics yet to be shown, "Sundown." The curtains at the sides part revealing a red effect and during the showing of this Martin Brefel and Mme. Pascova, behind the scenes, sing Percy Grainger's "Colonial Song" which the composer wrote after he was impressed with the wonderful scenery in Australia. It is said to be the first time that it has been rendered in a theatre in this country. The scenic itself consists of splendid shots toward the end of day with mountain and cloud effects that beggar description.

With the house lights all in blue Frank Wolff and Harry Edeson then render "Hawaiian Moonlight" as a marimbaphone solo, this number being well in keeping with the scenic that has just gone before.

Rialto Magazine opens with Gaumont pictures of the Shriners convention in Indianapolis and their parade to the music of "Siamese Patrol." We found ourselves looking closely to see whether S. Barret McCormick's Circle theatre would appear on the screen. International presents some interesting pictures of Chinese kids taking prizes at a baby show in Portland, Ore. and "Chinese Lantern Dance" is used without the introduction. This is followed by the pictures of flying over the American fleet, already described, to the music of "Your Wife" and effects at which Production Manager Joseph LaRose is so good.

Now we get the first comedy touch with Happy Hooligan in "A Wee Bit Scotch." "From the Highlands" is played at the screening and then there follows through "It's Time for Every Boy to be a Soldier" until the Germans are seen firing the cannon and here "Oh, Frenchy" is taken up and continued until he calls for his shock proof uniform and here we get "Dance Oriental" and then we have "Keep Your Head Down, Fritzie Boy" to the end of this. There are all sorts of effects used including whistles and sandpaper for the hairbrush scenes.

International shows pictures of the American boys who are to compete for the championship in France and here "Follow the Girl" is used. Then Gaumont shows us some pictures of Corbett and Jeffries meeting in California with the same music continuing through and then come the Yale graduation pictures with "College Life" played. For "The Sayinks of Topplitsky" "Oasis" is used and then for the final there are the pictures of blowing the Mexican mountain up, with crashing effects used.

Miss Rosa Lesca then sings "Caro Nome" from "Rigoletto" and the feature, Charles Ray in "Hay Foot, Straw Foot" follows. A large amount of the music for this is carried on the organ and the various orchestral renditions are largely of the patriotic character as the picture deals with Civil War veterans and with scenes in training camp in the great war.

"Memories of the War" is played at screening and then when the Union veteran declares that Grant was the greatest soldier ever "Battle Hymn of the Republic" is used. As the two veterans go out doors "Are You From Dixie?" is played and then with the scenes where they are drilling Ray there is march music with the drums dominant. Then with the news that America has entered the war comes "Melancolie" with a quick change to "What Kind of an American Are You?" when Ray announces that he is going to town to enlist.

There is a clever arrangement when the old man takes out the picture of Gen. Grant and here a few bars of "Goodbye Dolly Gray" are used, changing to "Battle Hymn of the Republic" when he hands the picture of the general to the boy. "I'm Going to Follow the Boys" follows through and then with the scene where the two old men and Ray stand at attention there is a pause and then "Yankee Doodle" with piccolo and drum only as the three are seen marching away. As they reach the fence and Ray leaves them the chorus of "Good Bye Little Girl" is used.

Next we have the scenes in the training camp and here "My Dough Boy" is played until the scenes at the camp theatre when the full orchestra swings into "On the Level." There is a pause as the screen curtain drops and then as it comes up again "Amarella" is used with another pause as it comes down the second time. From that point to the final scenes the organ carries the music and then when the old man declares that General Grant would have done the same thing "Yesterthoughts" is played to the end.

There are a few bars of "Chaplin Feet" played with the lights up in gold and then the screening of "Easy Street" starts. With the scene for "the lost sheep" the organ takes the music and then there is a pause as the man starts to preach and then the organ comes up again. When the singing stops "Panama" is used until the title "Easy Street" and we have a change to "Ruspana" and then when Chaplin is seen to "K-K-K-Katy" With the title "Where ignorance is bliss" "Queen of the Movies" is used with the first piccolo and then clarinet effect.

Burlesque music is used where the woman is seen stealing the vegetables and then with the title "A policeman" there is a change to "Sly Boots." With the title "Poverty and Riches" there is a burlesque rendition of "Flower Song" and then when the man wakes up in the police station "Trousseau Ball" is twice played through in very heavy fashion, followed through with "Star Gazer" and one of the numbered selections. With the start of the fight "Chaplin Feet" is played again and with the title "Loved backed by force" "Queen of the Movies" is played slowly to the end.

Chopin's "Nocturne in E Flat" is the final organ solo.

Live News from the Producers

F. G. Hall Announces First Serial

WITH a list of big feature productions, among which are numbered some of the most successful of screen dramas, including the Jess Willard picture, "The Challenge of Chance," J. Stuart Blackton's production, "The House Divided," Samuel L. Rothapfel's Unit Programme, the Warner Bros.' Production of "The Other Man's Wife" and others, Frank G. Hall, who is the guiding spirit behind the acquisition and distribution of these features, has added another feature of the motion picture entertainment to his already varied program. He announces the commencement of his first serial to be shown in fifteen episodes of two reels each, the first three episodes of which will be completed and prints of same will be in New York in three weeks.

"The Trail of the Octopus" is the title of Mr. Hall's first serial release, and in the featured roles appear Ben Wilson and Nava Gerber, both of Universal serial note. Mr. Wilson's long stage and screen career has made him one of the best known players, especially so with the lovers of serial production.

In addition to enacting the featured role in the serial, Mr. Wilson will have complete charge of its direction and in this branch of the picture industry he is conceded to be fully as proficient as a director as he is as an actor. Mr. Wilson is member of the M. P. D. A., and has a number of successful productions to which he can point as director and producer.

The first episodes of "The Trail of the Octopus" are now under way on the Coast under Mr. Wilson's direction. The latest reports from Director Wilson say that he and his company are now on the desert taking exteriors and the same report indicates that the first episodes will be ready for screening within the next three or four weeks.

This will mark Mr. Hall's first venture in the serial branch of the picture business. And with this initial serial release, he promises the exhibitors and public fifteen episodes of the liveliest drama, and a full quota of thrilling stunts.

In announcing his entry into this branch of motion pictures, Mr. Hall said: "According to reports from our exhange managers, the serial picture is in great demand. The public likes serial productions with the result that the exhibitors demand them. I have tried to give the best in feature production and the same sincere efforts will be put forth in connection with my serials. The one now under production under the direction of Ben Wilson, and with Mr. Wilson in the featured role, is one that I am sure will give every satisfaction. I expect to place one before the exhibitors of the country, that is all that a serial should be."

Two Ford Educationals Through Goldwyn

Two Ford Educational Weeklies are announced for release by Goldwyn, "Pure Havana," a story of the land made famous by cigars and the Spanish-American war, for distribution on June 22, and on June 29, "The Fable of the Olive and the Orange," dealing with the growth and nurture of those fruits.

In "Pure Havana," the camera first views the entrance to Havana Harbor, where the old forts of Morro Castle offered their puny resistance to the fleets of Rear Admirals Sampson and Schley during the Spanish-American war. Then a flash of the approximate position of the old battleship Maine before she was blown up, is shown. Now the camera enters the city where ox-carts rumble through the narrow thoroughfares, and trolley cars squeeze their clanking way through one-sided streets. Finally, the beautiful surrounding country is brought into focus, and the aromatic product of Havana, her world-famed tobacco, is brought to life on the screen.

Film Historic Drama

An historic drama based on the Whitman Massacre of 1847 is being filmed in Portland, Oregon, by Raymond Wells, the author, for the Multnomah Film Company. One scene filmed recently shows the Lewis and Clark banquet at St. Lewis. J. Barney Sherry is playing the part of an Indian war chief. Raymond Wells is directing. The drama is titled "Martyrs of Yesterday."

Change Picture's Title

Dr. Daniel Carson Goodman, who is associated with Alma Rubens in her forthcoming independent production, to be released by Pathe, announces that the first picture now in course of making and originally called "Annie Marnet," will bear the title of "Paradise Annie."

Hammons Back from Trip Abroad

Trip Consumes Six Weeks and Sees Closing of Deals

WITH the satisfaction that results from a business transaction well completed, Vice-President E. W. Hammons, of the Educational Films Corporation of America, has returned from a six weeks' trip through Europe, the results of which he terms not only successful, but sufficient to warrant real enthusiasm. The important arrangements which he has been able to accomplish will work a decided change in the activities of the "Educational" organization in the future, although the major details of these new plans will not be ready for publication for some weeks.

Mr. Hammons aimed to buy as much material as could be secured on the European market for use in this country, and the original idea was to establish a regular release of English-French-and-Italian-made film, through the Educational exchanges, as a feature of the short-subject market this fall. The fact remains that there was not sufficient material of the kind desired, measuring up to the Educational ideal of quality, that could be purchased, and therefore this effort did not result in the large amount of film that had been anticipated. "The peculiar condition in England, for instance," says Mr. Hammons, "is not unlike the situation that existed many years ago in the coal fields of Pennsylvania. The British film producers are literally walking right over boundless opportunities without knowing or realizing what they are missing.

"English country scenery is glorious—and American audiences would take as great an interest in scenery along the Thames and in the Lake district, as British audiences do in our pictures of the Rockies and the Far West. But the knack of making really attractive scenic pictures is lacking—there is no skill displayed in editing or providing active story-interest, and therefore the few scenic pictures available are merely "fillers."

Never has such a peculiar combination of circumstances existed as has been created by the late war. The demand for scenic film from the European countries offers the greatest opportunity for single-reel material that has ever been recorded in motion picture history. Three and a half million American boys have had a taste of Europe—some of them will tell you they are "fed-up" on the subject. But it must be remembered that each one of these boys represents a group of four or five relatives and friends who have lived long anxious months with none too frequent or too descriptive letters from "over there." Fifteen millions in this country have a keen desire to see and know what Europe looks like. And in months to come, when the boys are settled at home again, they will welcome the opportunity to show the family the sights they have seen, in the only possible way, on the moving picture screen.

Our experience with scenic pictures has proved to us that interest in people and places increases in direct proportion to the inaccessibility of the country filmed. The war has enabled millions to see Europe, where only thousands did before, and now that it is all over, the demand is created, with no satisfactory means of satisfying that demand except through motion picture representation. We have completed arrangements that will insure us a regular supply of English, French and Italian scenic subjects, made under the direction of our own men.

Carmichael with Pathe

Field Carmichael, one of the best known salesmen in the film industry, has joined the Pathe organization, having been appointed manager of the Los Angeles, Cal., branch.

For the last five years Mr. Carmichael has been with Fox, holding important positions, and has just returned from an extensive European tour for that concern.

Gaumont Cameraman Is Hurt Filming Blast

Blaine Walker, the Los Angeles representative of the Gaumont News Service, was wounded and narrowly escaped with his life while photographing the greatest dynamite blast ever set off on the American continent.

For the protection of the levees along the lower Colorado River, 100,000 pounds of dynamite were used to shatter a granite mountain a few miles south of Yuma Arizona, to provide the 200,000 yards of crushed rock needed for strengthening the levees. Arrangements for the explosion were made a week in advance, and the only persons permitted within the danger zone were news cameramen. Mr. Walker was stationed within 300 feet of the dynamite when the switch was thrown. As a result, he was quite painfully wounded, and nearly lost his life.

Mr. Walker turned his camera crank until the last ,although several other camera men had their machines injured and is said to have secured an excellent picture.

Will Rogers as Viewed by W. R. Lighton

W. R. Lighton, author of a series of stories which are to be screened by Goldwyn, with Will Rogers, of "Follies" fame, as the star, and Peggy Wood, late star of "Maytime," playing leading lady to him, has met the lariat-thrower and humorist, and just what he thinks of him is summed up in an interesting letter he sends to a friend in the East:

"Since I wrote you last I have met Rogers upon his arrival in Los Angeles, and have had several good talks with him. I love that man, heart, boots and breeches. He looks the part we are building for him—that's one thing. Then, besides the looks, he has the heart, the brain and the—well, the "guts."

Give New York a Treat

Sol Lesser has received a wire from Mack Sennett, saying that seven of his most famous beauties are en route to New York from his California studios, to be present before the opening here, at the Broadway theatre, about June 27, of "Yankee Doodle in Berlin." Mr. Sennett's latest five-reel production is said to be a most elaborate affair.

Masters Has Deals Pending

Picture with Doraldina, the Dancer, in Preparation; Later Announcements

E. LANNING MASTERS, Inc., who brought about the negotiations of the deal whereby the Jess Willard picture, "The Challenge of Chance," was taken over by the Frank G. Hall interests announce that they have in preparation for showing a new picture featuring Doraldina, the dancing girl. The picture was produced by The Pyramid Picture Corporation and carries the title "The Cave Woman." It is in six reels and will be released as a special.

E. Lanning Masters, President of the company which bears his name, is authority for the statement that the picture will create a sensation all over the country. He declined to say anything about the story except that Doraldina is presented as a South Sea Isle girl.

This is the newest of several big propositions which the Masters organization has negotiated recently, the Willard deal being perhaps the most important.

The Willard deal calls attention to the fact that the Masters organization is going forward rapidly in introducing a new thought into business. The Masters' organization annouces that it is in a position to handle meritorious picture propositions in all their stages, including financing, production, marketing and exploitation. As outlined by Mr. Masters, his organization is divided into departments each of which has a specific purpose, such as advertising, financing, publicity, authors and marketing.

It is understood that the firm has several other important projects under way, announcement of which will be made later.

Booking Record to Aim At

Exhibitors Mutual Puts "Man Who Turned White" Into Eight Close-By Houses

EIGHT of the foremost neighborhood houses on Broadway, New York, all within a stretch of but thirty three blocks, have booked the first Robertson-Cole Superior Picture, "The Man Who Turned White," starring H. B. Warner, which is being distributed by Exhibitors Mutual.

Within a period of three weeks, each one of these theatres will offer "The Man Who Turned White" as its feature attraction.

This is a record which is offered to dispute the heretofore rigid theory that it is impossible to put the same picture in all the principal neighborhood houses of the central Broadway territory.

The Standard theatre, one of the biggest in New York devoted to the silent drama and the Symphony, another one of the largest photoplay theatres in Manhattan, which are separated by a meagre five blocks, have each booked "The Man Who Turned White." The Adelphi, only one block away from the Standard will offer the Warner picture as its feature within the next few days.

This record established by the New York exchange of Exhibitors is said to be merely indicative of the manner in which "The Man Who Turned White" is being received the country over.

In Chicago Exhibitors Mutual has outstripped itself in putting the special across. As in New York, bookings virtually poured in after the run enjoyed by the desert drama at the Ziegfeld theatre.

In Toronto, the Regent management advertised the feature as they have handled no other picture in many months. An extra advertising appropriation was made for "The Man Who Turned White."

Buster Keaton Back in Arbuckle's Company

Work has been started by "Fatty" Arbuckle's company at the temporary studio in Glendale on the next Paramount-Arbuckle comedy, which bears the working title, "Back Stage." "Fatty's" supporting cast is again headed by Al St. John, Mollie Malone and Buster Keaton. The latter arrived a few days ago from New York, after spending two months in a hospital there under treatment for an unusual ailment which he contracted in the Flanders trenches.

"I was deaf as a post," says Buster, "not from the racket of bursting shells, as you might suppose, but due solely to the climate. The army doctors said they had never seen a case like mine, and I guess they were telling the truth, for none of them were able to do anything for me.

"An operation was finally performed that gave me back my hearing."

Give the Author More Credit, Says Ince

And now it is no less a person than Thomas H. Ince who expresses his belief that "the play's the thing" and the author is deserving of more credit than is being sent his way. Commenting on this subject, the director recently said:

"I believe theatre managers throughout the country should give conspicuous credit to photoplay authors in their newspaper advertisements, for it is certain these writers contribute very much to the success of the picture.

"Writing for the screen is a distinctive art and many of these writers have developed among picture lovers a large following."

Franklyn Farnum, recently signed to a long term contract with Canyon Pictures Corporation, Jack Weinberg, President, and Joseph M. Goldstein, Treasurer, has left for Los Angeles, where he will start work at the Selig studios on a series of twenty-six two reel Western pictures.

The first story will be from the pen of B. M. Bowers, known to magazine readers as a writer of the old West.

The productions will be exploited through the State Right exchanges.

War Relief Series Due to Spitz's Efforts

Though the "power behind the throne" is usually in reality hidden from sight and credit, Eugene Spitz, who is responsible for the production of the Stage Women's War Relief series of pictures, in his quiet way is known to many in the industry, and credited with his work on these productions.

Mr. Spitz gave the use of his studios for this work and his word that he would see the pictures were produced. He is confident now that the productions are among the best screen dramas made.

Mr. Spitz has been in the production end of motion pictures for a period of ten years and at one time produced a series of exceptional pictures for the United States Government.

Foreign Rights Disposed of at Big Price

Herbert M. Dawley's picture, "The Ghost of Slumber Mountain" is said to be eclipsing all records for prices for foreign rights. The Inter-Ocean Film Company, who are handling the foreign rights to this novelty have informed World Pictures, who are distributing it throughout the United States, that they have sold the United Kingdom, France, Holland, Switzerland and Belgium, "The Ghost of Slumber Mountain" for the highest price ever paid for a one-reel feature. Negotiations are now under way which, if completed, will dispose of the rights for the rest of the world.

Fox Plans for Pearl White

Strong Stories Secured as Vehicles for Star; to Have Wide Exploitation

THE announcement that Pearl White had signed a long-term contract with William Fox came as a complete surprise to exhibitors—although it now appears that negotiations were successfully closed many weeks ago by Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation.

The Exhibitors' Service Bureau of this corporation states that Miss White is already assured of a number of pictures based on great stage successes and novels by noted authors; that exhibitors are going to get the benefit of the finest story material obtainable.

The Bureau says further, in explanation of the contract, that in signing Pearl White, Mr. Fox was influenced by her world-wide popularity; that he believed she would fit admirably into his plans of extended activity not only in the United States, but in Europe, Asia, South Africa, South America, Australia and New Zealand; that Pearl White to him represented the ideal world attraction in films; that he found his judgment, arrived at in the United States, fully vindicated when he arrived in Europe this spring—exhibitors everywhere being enthusiastic over her and her pictures which were drawing crowded houses both in England and on the continent. This discovery further strengthened his conviction that Pearl White was destined to increase vastly her screen following in the United States.

Step to Better Photography

Universal to Uphold Slogan of Better Pictures Signs Expert Cameramen

GOING even further than the phrase of the day "better pictures, better stories and better stars," as regards their output, or rather, trying for that and with an eye to every detail, Universal has acquired a staff of cinema photographers which they announce are above the average in their trade skill.

With the arrival at the Universal studios of Phillip E. Rosen, president of the American Society of Cinematographers and one of the most experienced photographers of the silver-sheet, Carl Laemmle, Universal's president, announces the acquisition of several high-class cameramen and the launching of plans which it is hoped will make the camera work and lighting effects of Universal productions the last word in cinematic achievement.

P. E. Rosen has been associated with prominent stars, directors and exhibitors. The photography of "The Eternal Magdalene" is among his best examples of excellent work. After arriving at the Universal studios he was assigned as the photographer for "A Little Brother of the Rich," which was directed by Lynn Reynolds.

William Fildew who was associated with William Bitzer in the photographing of many of D. W. Griffith's masterpieces has been obtained by Universal. He has just finished photographing the latest Mary MacLaren vehicle, "The Petal On the Current," a Fannie Hurst story. Other first-class cinema men who have been engaged for work with the Universal are: Harry Harris, who formerly photographed Olga Petrova and Nazimova; Alfred Gosden, a color specialist, and B. F. Reynolds.

The fact that Universal has obtained the services of so many capable cameramen is a step forward.

Morey Again Signs to Star with Vitagraph

Harry Morey, one of Vitagraph's mainstays, has renewed his contract with that company. Whatever hesitancy the company might have had was offset by seeing "The Gamblers," Charles Klein's famous play, which was run off at the studio projection rooms Friday.

This may be counted as one of the best things this star has ever done, and coupled with the excellent cast and superb direction of Paul Scardon should prove a box-office bonanza.

Paul Scardon, who has directed nearly all of Mr. Morey's best pictures will continue in this capacity, as will Tenny Wright, the assistant director.

Before commencing his next production Mr. Morey will take a short rest at his country home.

Mr. Morey has been with Vitagraph since 1909, and will be remembered for the big productions, in which he was co-starred with Alice Joyce which are "Within the Law," "Womanhood, The Glory of the Nation," and others.

"White Heather" Is Released by Paramount

Pennsylvania Censors Still Sensitive

Sensitiveness on the part of the Pennsylvania Board of Censors, regarding the indecency of a heroine remaining in the home of the villain for ten days without a chaperone, necessitated a change in "The Price of Innocence" offered by the Buffalo Motion Picture Corporation. Miss Stella Talbot and Edward Grayson are the stars.

In its original version, "The Price of Innocence" related how Miss Talbott accepted Grayson's ultimatum to be his guest for ten days as the premium for the liberty of her island people. She went through the ordeal unscathed, although the villain's motives at the start of the bargain were not above suspicion.

To pass the censors, George Hamilton, sales manager for the Buffalo concern had to marry the heroine to the villain before she went to his home as the price he demanded for repatriating her kinsmen.

Many Sales on "Yankee Doodle in Berlin"

"Yankee Doodle in Berlin" has been sold for the following territories according to Sol. L. Lesser, President of the State Right Distributors, and Yankee Doodle in Berlin Co.: Western Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Ohio, Texas, Arkansas, Oklahoma, California, Nevada, Arizona, Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, New Mexico, Michigan, Indiana, Upper New York State, Iowa and Nebraska.

Negotiations are on for the foreign rights, but no deal has yet been consummated.

Returns from France—Rejoins Vitagraph

Wesley Ruggles, who has been serving with the A. E. F. in France as a lieutenant in the Photographic Division of the Signal Corps, has been honorably discharged and returned to his home here.

Mr. Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, promptly restored him to his former position as one of the directors of Vitagraph features and he is now busy on a new picture with Alice Joyce. Before he went to the front, Mr. Ruggles directed Miss Joyce in one of her best pictures.

Cooling Moments In Morey Film

"Beauty Proof," Harry Morey's Latest, a Strong Subject

THE summer season would appear to be the psychological time for Vitagraph to present "Beauty Proof," Harry Morey's new play of the Northwest Mounted Police, inasmuch as the observers for several hours will be transported to the atmosphere of snow and furs in the cold wastes of Canada.

The critics were agreed that Paul Scardon had put over another winner for Vitagraph in this new feature, particularly as he had free rein to work up the melodramatic action. Mr. Morey is said to be exceptionally good in the picture, which is declared to be even more forceful than his recent offerings, "Silent Strength," "Beating the Odds" and "Fighting Destiny."

As for the general story of "Beauty Proof," Corporal Steele is assigned to arrest Thorpe, a young laborer in a nearby construction camp, who has been charged with attempting to kill Hodge, superintendent of the camp. Steele is warned that Carol Thorpe, sister of the accused man, will make every effort to see that her brother is not caught. Steele is attracted by the young girl when he arrives at the camp, and is curious to learn by what method she will attempt to outwit him and save her brother. He follows her, seeking to learn her plans, but only to find that she has lured him into a trap. Her brother and his companions drop on Steele from a tree, and carry him to their hut. There he is bound and gagged, secured in a box and delivered back to Hodge as a box of tools.

The box is placed in Hodge's cabin and Carol comes there to confront Hodge. She makes him admit that her brother attacked him because of his insults to her, and that she is the price of her brother's freedom. While registering Hodge's further advances she shoots him. Meantime Steele has managed to extricate himself from the box and recognizes Hodge as the man who had stolen his wife years before, and lured her to death in Canada. Finding that Hodge still lives, Steele nurses him back to life in order that he might carry out his own scheme of punishment. Many exciting scenes follow, and, although Steele's plans go askew, Hodge meets his just end in an unexpected manner. The love interest, of course, is maintained throughout.

Mr. Morey has an excellent supporting company for "Beauty Proof," Betty Blythe, in the role of the girl, looks well in the picturesque garments of the snow country, and George Majeroni offers one of his usual characterizations as Hodge. Denton Vane makes much of the less prominent role of young Thorpe. Tenny Wright and Bernard Siegel are excellent as the two half-breeds. Robert Gaillard is seen as the Inspector.

Those who have seen the new feature are agreed that the picture is practically perfect technically. The snow scenes have been well filmed, all locations being in keeping with the locale of the story.

Original Scenic Settings

Zane Grey Leads Company to Desert Locations in Filming "Westerners"

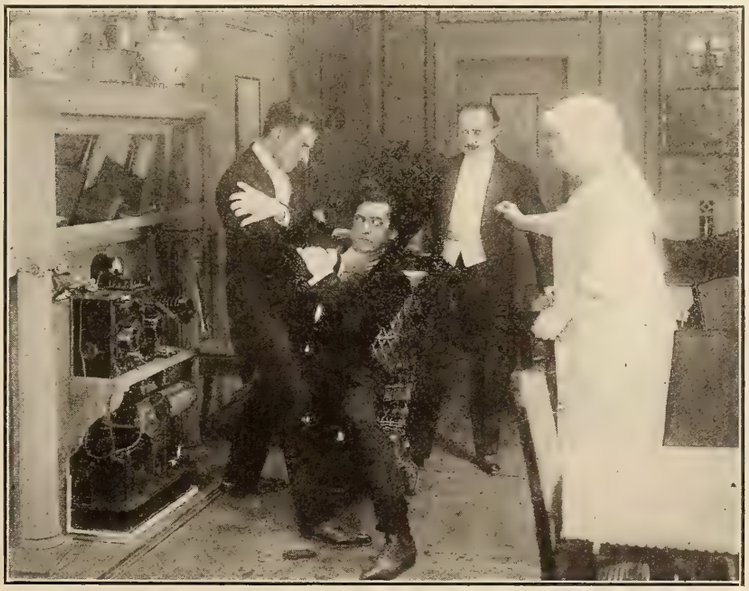
A COMPANY of eighty people, twenty-two horses, including eight milk white Arabian steeds obtained from a breeder in Northern California, and several automobiles, comprised the "Desert Gold" Company that journeyed to the Colorado Desert and spent six weeks there making scenes for Zane Grey's novel, "Desert Gold," a W. W. Hodkinson release, produced by Benjamin B. Hampton for Zane Grey Pictures, Inc.

The Colorado Desert has served as a background for many Western stories, but it is claimed never before has a film company ventured so far into the desert as the Zane Grey Company. Having the author's knowledge of the desert, they were led by Mr. Grey to the very location described in his widely read and popular book.

The headquarters of the company was at the little village of Palm Springs. The Coachella Indian Reservation embraces a large portion of the desert and mountain of the neighborhood.

The breath of the desert has found its way into the picturization of "Desert Gold" as indeed it should have with its advantage of remarkable scenic location and the expert knowledge and guidance of Zane Grey.

When Zane Grey saw the finished production of "Desert Gold" he was so pleased with the way in which Mr. Hampton had conveyed to the screen the spirit and the truth of his novel, that he stamped it with the seal of his personal approval.



Dramatic moments are promised in profusion in "The Man Who Stayed at Home," a Metro Screen Classics, Inc.

Selznick to Picturize Two Stage Successes

Two stage successes have been secured by Selznick Pictures Corporation. The picture rights to "Blind Youth" were purchased for Eugene O'Brien's second Selznick production to follow "The Perfect Lover," just completed.

The rights to "The Country Cousins" were bought for the first of the Selznick Pictures starring Elaine Hammerstein and work will begin very shortly.

"The Country Cousin" is a comedy-drama by Booth Tarkington and Julian Street, and ran on Broadway to crowded houses for the entire season. Curiously enough, it was in "The Country Cousin" that Eugene O'Brien made his last stage success, but the play is considered more suitable for a woman star and, therefore, will be utilized to introduce Miss Elaine Hammerstein to the Selznick Picture series.

"Blind Youth" was Lou Tellegen's biggest stage success in America. It was written by Willard Mack in collaboration with Mr. Tellegen.

"Shoulder Arms" Booked Ten Times

"Shoulder Arms" is breaking all return engagement records in the Middle West, according to reports from the A. H. Blank Enterprises offices in Omaha, Neb., from where First National releases are distributed over that section of the country. The Chaplin picture has been re-booked as many as the tenth time in one city—Omaha—and comes near to that in several other places.

Nathan Dax of the Model theatre, Sioux City, Iowa, booked the picture for the fifth run in the downtown section of that city, and ran it to capacity crowds for three days. The picture ran eight times in the uptown district of Des Moines, Iowa.

Finish Robertson-Cole Features

Completed and Await Release by Exhibitors Mutual

COMPLETION of a quartet of features which will comprise part of the schedule of productions to be released by Exhibitors' Mutual during the coming weeks, is announced by Robertson-Cole.

Sessue Hayakawa has put the the finishing touches on "The Man Beneath," a tale of India, Italy and Scotland in which the Japanese star gives a characterization of a famous Hindu surgeon.

William Desmond has completed "Bare-fisted Gallagher," in which, probably for the first time in screen annals the hero goes through five reels of fast moving action without once resorting to "artillery" for protection.

The last scene has been shot by the Bessie Barriscale company on her next starring vehicle, "The Woman Michael Married," which, it is predicted, will be the most elaborate production Miss Barriscale has yet appeared in.

"Better Times" second of the Brentwood series of starless features, in which ZaSu Pitts has an important role, is ready for release. King Vidor completed this feature several weeks ago.

"The Man Beneath" was adapted for screening from a novel by Edmund Mitchell, and calls for more pretentious settings than any of Hayakawa's previous features. William Worthington directed the picture. Frank D. Ormstrom, considered one of the most capable technical directors in the country was engaged by Haworth especially to prepare the sets for "The Man Beneath." In the cast are Helen Jerome Eddy, Pauline Curley and Wedgewood Nowell.

William Parker, author of "What Every Woman Wants," wrote "Bare-fisted Gallagher," which was directed by J. J. Franz of the Jesse D. Hampton forces. Scenically, "Bare-fisted Gallagher" is said to be one of the most beautiful works ever turned out of the Hampton studios. It was filmed in the San Gabriel valley.

In every sense, "Bare-fisted Gallagher" is a modern Western comedy drama. No long cabin fire-water mill adorns the screen. In place of this venerable and honored motion picture prop., there is a soft drink parlor—soft in name only, however—where the thirst of any man who drinks his whisky straight and treats his men square, can be satisfied. There is no two-gun, straight shooting hero. In his place is a typical American who counts on two mighty fist-hams, it might be said—to carry him through his trials and tribulations. Desmond is supported by Agnes "Brownie" Vernon, Frank Lanning, and Jeanette Rankin.

"The Woman Michael Married" was written by Du Vernet Rabell, and was directed by Henry Kolker. Miss Barriscale is surrounded by a cast which includes Jack Holt, Marcia Manon, Tom Guise, Charles H. West, Cameron Coffey, Bonnie Hill and Mary Jane Irving. The adaptation was made by Fred Myton.

"The Woman Michael Married" permits of a very "showy" offering. The story begins on Long Island, moves to the Adirondacks, and ends in Rome.

Gertrude Garrison emigrated from the Blue Grass country to Florida—now she's a Sunbeam feature

Many Territories Sold for Arrow Pictures

The Big Feature Rights Corporation, a First National Exchange operating in the states of Kentucky and Tennessee, has bought from the Arrow Film Corporation the Neal Hart five reel Western, "When the Desert Smiled." This exchange is gradually coming to the front as a handler of big features.

The Arrow Film Corporation has also sold the states of Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin to Arthur Hyman Attractions on the big special feature "Fools' Gold," starring Mitchell Lewis and Florence Turner.

Other sales made during the week by Arrow are as follows: For Minnesota, Wisconsin North and South Dakota to the Westcott Film Exchange, "Miss Arizona;" for the Eastern Pennsylvia and Southern New Jersey territory to The Short Reel Exchange, The Arrow Comedies, comprising a series of twelve one reelers, new comedies. For Louisiana and Mississippi to Pierce Film Exchange "The Mysterious Mr. Browning."

Newest Universal Star Makes Bow

First Picture Starring Hedda Nova, Soon to Be Released

COMPLETION of the first picture of Universal's new star, Hedda Nova, the Russian actress and dancer, is announced. According to Universal, Mlle. Nova is one of the finds of the year. This Russian beauty, who recently announced that she wanted an American husband, has been seen in several supporting casts, among them being "The Crimson Gardenia," where she shared honors with Owen Moore in the Goldwyn production, which was shown on Broadway at the Rialto this month. She has been cast in leading parts in "The Bar Sinister" and "The Sign Invisible." Mlle. Nova was at one time seen on Broadway as a dancer, where she is said to have scored a success.

Her career as an actress has been romantic, in that she appeared many times among the most famous court performances given in Russia. It has been said that the Monk Rasputin, now ingloriously famous, cast longing glances at the stage beauty during her court performances. She left Russia at the outbreak of the Bolsheviki movement.

"The Spitfire of Seville" was written by Joseph Franklin Poland, who recently signed a contract to write exclusively for Universal. The production was directed by Waldemar Young, and has one of the strongest supporting casts ever assigned to a Universal production. Thurston Hall is in the leading male role. Hall has been seen in support of Dorothy Phillips and other prominent Universal actresses. Others in the cast who have leading parts are Carl Stockdale, Leo Maloney, Claire Anderson, Marion Skinner, Edgar Allen and Robert Gray.

All the scenes of the production are laid in Spain, near the town of Seville. Mlle. Nova is cast as a fiery Spanish maiden, the daughter of old Don Salvador, the head of a band of political outlaws. The scenery used in the production was selected from among the mountains near Universal City and other parts of California. The locations were selected with great care, and the costumes of the players were designed by the master of Universal's wardrobe with the idea of obtaining the best realism possible.

Thurston Hall is cast as a young American artist, who wins Carmelita, the part played by Mlle. Nova. Carl Stockdale is cast as Don Salvador, Leo Maloney as Pedro, one of the suitors for Carmelita's hand, and Robert Gray as Leonardo, another suitor. Carmelita falls in love with the artist, but this displeases the two suitors. The action is said to be especially dramatic as the two admirers battle to win the beauty. Carmelita displays the temperament of the Spanish girl by swearing to kill the American and later falling in love with him.

Mlle. Nova is capable of handling this sort of a character to the best advantage. Her dark eyes and hair and clean cut features are brought out to advantage in this production. Universal is confident that the new star will win many admirers in her first production, which is scheduled for release in the near future.

Novel Bathing Scene Made

Dinner Party Merrily Swims Through Part of New Bessie Barriscale Film

NEWPORT dinner parties, with fountain bathing as the piece de resistance have never had anything—as the slang phrase goes—on the dinner party given during the filming of "The Woman Michael Married," a Robertson-Cole production with Bessie Barriscale in the leading role. This picture will be distributed through Exhibitors Mutual.

A large swimming pool had been built for the scene, and around this was constructed an Italian background, with hundreds of colored lamps and lanterns. At one end of the pool was a diving tower, brilliant with electric lights, while over the center of the pool hung a big swing, covered with flowers and lights.

In order to get the full artistic value of the beautiful set Director Kolker instructed his assistants to get the most beautiful women they could find for the pool scenes. And, 'tis said, they did. Practically all of them wore bathing suits, and as California has very broad interpretations on the matter of women's bathing suits, the results were as bizarre as they were stunning.

A jazz band started things going in the midst of the dinner. Men and women guests dove into the pool from the springboards, tables, chairs and the tower, others one-stepped along the rim of the pool and slid into the water; several, fully clothed were unexpectedly dumped into the water. Kolker told everyone to have a good time, and every one did while cameras, on different elevations, recorded every incident of the occasion.

Bessie Barriscale entered the scene, demure in an Annette Kellerman bathing suit, swung over the heads of the guests, jumped to the top of the fourteen foot tower, and then dived into the pool.

HARRY CAREY in —the human

—the vigorous
—the delightful

NOT all Western character portrayers are alike. One of them, at least, is an actor—Harry Carey. And because Harry Carey is so much more real and human than other Westerners—so much more subtle—so much finer and keener—he has succeeded in making Western dramas that draw just as big houses in aristocratic neighborhoods as they do in the "cow-counties." We advise you to show Carey in his newest picture no matter what type of patronage you enjoy. In Bret Harte's classic, "The Outcasts of Poker Flat," there is something for everybody. See it at your nearest Universal Exchange.

"The Outcasts of Poker Flat"

The classic story that all America knows and loves

FOR the first time on any screen—the most famous character in American fiction—John Oakhurst, the gentleman-gambler of Poker Flat. A classic that has been read by uncounted millions during the past sixty years. A picture staged in the identical locations of Bret Harte's deathless romance—rich with the flavor of the golden days of the California argonauts. Settings which, for their picturesqueness and quaintness, are a sheer delight. A drama, superbly acted by a big cast, which no one will ever forget for its beauty, sympathy and romantic action. See "The Outcasts of Poker Flat" today and you'll thank us in behalf of your patrons.

A UNIVERSAL SPECIAL ATTRACTION

U
OUR POLICY
IT is now a little over a year since we produced our first Universal Special Attraction. We knew in the beginning that these pictures would be successful both for you and for us because we had the talent, the experience and the means—and it has all come true. In the past fifteen months this company has produced more pictures of a uniformly high character than any other concern in the business. Quite as important to you, we have given you these pictures at prices at which you made a good profit. As to our policy for the coming Fall season, we shall simply say that our Universal Special Attractions will continue to be your best pictures—your most profitable pictures. This old policy is better than any new policy that we can think of—the best entertainment for your patrons—the biggest net for you.

Special Service Section on

Mary MacLaren in "The Weaker Vessel"

THESE Special Service Sections are written with the purpose of suggesting to exhibitors how to get the most out of pictures that they have booked. They are prepared after studying the pictures and the best way of exploiting them. Won't you let us know any use that you made of suggestions printed here and the original ideas that you have used in putting over this picture?

JUDGING from the title alone, a lot of your patrons are likely to get the wrong impression of "The Weaker Vessel," since it is somewhat suggestive of the problem play, and therefore if you are going to show this Mary MacLaren production, the selling talks should be made so that one will get the humor.

While the story is strong and tense, holding the interest to the end, we believe that this might be called a picture in which the humor predominates. Certainly we would make it predominate in the advertising, though not going to the extent of calling this "the funniest ever" or anything of that sort. We would use pictures suggestive of the love element rather than with any troubles of the girl.

Of course you will play the name of the star as the main thing, but there should also be some prominence given Thurston Hall, who appears opposite her. This actor has won much attention recently through his work with Miss MacLaren and Priscilla Dean.

Most of the scenes are laid in New York, but there is none of the "perils of the poor working girl" stuff in this picture, so keep that out and make the appeal to the heart and to humor.

THIS is the story: In the village of Cicero Abby is the eldest daughter of Matthew Hopkins, a business failure, who realizes that he must marry his daughters off as they become old enough. So when the middle aged J. B. Hanks, who six months before had buried his second wife, comes a courting—on the whole family—Hopkins decides she must marry him, though Hanks dyed his hair and drank in secret. There were forty girls in town who would jump at the chance, her father told her, because Hanks had money and the nicest home in the village. Her protests are in vain, and the wedding is arranged.

After the ceremony in the Hanks home the husband reveals his true self by the drinks that he takes from the bottles hidden behind pictures of his "dear departed" and then when he tries to press his attentions on her she flees. New York is her objective, and there we find her at work in one of the Childs restaurants, where she has found a true friend in Ruth Sterner, a struggling playwright who serves as a waitress until she can score her big success.

A regular customer—when he has the price of eating anywhere—is J. Booth Hunter, an actor whose love for drink keeps him out of employment. He is one of those rare types, bombastic in speech, but extreme in courtesy and debonair even in his want. The girl's attention is first attracted to him after she had spilled some water on him, and the friendship is strengthened when another customer substitutes a check on him—when he has only fifteen cents in his pocket—and the girl takes the blame, and then when Hunter knocks down a masher who approached the two girls.

THEN he declares that he must be the girls' protector, for he declares that woman is the weaker vessel and a little later we have him declaring that he is "the sturdy oak." But at least that gives Ruth an idea for a play.

He wins an invitation to call at two in the afternoon, but he accumulates a little money and with a fine jag, and instead of arriving at two in the afternoon he calls at two in the morning with Abby in bed and Ruth plugging away at the typewriter on "The Weaker Vessel."

But Abby's interest in the man is growing, and she pleads with him to quit drinking. He agrees, tries, and fails and then declares that he has nothing to live for. "You have the traditions of your name—J. Booth Hunter," she tells him. "But," he replies, "my real name is John O'Brien."

Then a little later when he begins to tell of his love she stops him with the news that she is married. But just at that moment she picks up a copy of a paper carrying an announcement of the death of J. B. Hanks, with directions for the widow to call at the lawyer's office. There the lawyer secures her address and a moment later the very much alive J. B. Hanks walks in.

SHE tells Hunter, who is waiting outside, what has happened, and then rushes to her home, but Hanks, who has secured the address, is there before her and locking the girl in demands his rights as her husband. She spurns him and then he tries to attack her, but she proves to be the best little two-fisted fighter you ever saw. And in the meantime Hunter has accumulated a fine jag, and armed with a pistol has gone to the lawyer's office and then to Abby's apartments. He breaks in the door with the declaration "Thank God I'm in time to protect you."

"Don't protect her, protect me," screams the floored Hanks under the rain of her blows. And then when he is freed he goes forth declaring that he will have his divorce. Then Abby tells Hunter why she refused to live with her husband, and declares that she will never marry another drunkard—and he promises again.

This time he succeeds. A few months pass and we see a limousine in front of a theatre with the couple in it, and the flashing electric sign—"J. B. Hunter in the Weaker Vessel." Both he and Ruth Sterner, who has written the play based on his own decoration, and Abby himself have made good at last.

WE believe that any lobby display that suggests either the restaurant scenes or drink will tend to cheapen this production, and we would play it on high class lines. We would prefer to make the lobby display a Mary MacLaren one, using all the pictures of her and scenes possible and then using cut outs in profusion.

Instead of spending any money on the usual teasers, we would rather put this in the newspaper advertising and increase the space.

There can be an especial appeal to women's organizations with a letter stating that many men call women "the weaker vessel," but that in this production Mary MacLaren proves they are not—that she bests a husband who was forced on her against her will and then reforms the man that she wants to marry.

There can be an equal appeal made to all working women along the same lines. Don't refer to the fact that you know the recipient of your letter works, but call this a comedy-drama of a business girl's life—and her victories. Tell a little of the plot of the story as we have indicated in the advertising suggestions, and be sure to make it plain that this is not a problem story, but largely comedy.

It will do you far more good to sell the picture as we have outlined in these pages for then you are apt to get the word-of-mouth advertising after the first showing that will pack your houses for the remainder of the run. This is the sort of a picture whose charm will bring you business of itself, if you play it right.

We suggest the picture of the girl and the actor at the right, because there is a suggestion of humor in it. At the left there is a love scene in the part, and center a scene where the girl leaves her first husband

Humor Element Should Be Put Into All Your Advertising

WE have illustrated several of the pictures showing both Miss MacLaren and Thurston Hall and we would suggest to those that design their own advertising that one of these will fit better with the real selling argument of the picture than anything else, because you have to bring the actor into the story to get the idea of humor that is so necessary to your success.

We would feature the name of Mary MacLaren above everything else and then say that she is supported by Thurston Hall. The title should be smaller than the name of the star and this should be followed immediately by the selling argument, sufficiently full to be really suggestive of the story. Here is one that gets it:

"He called her 'the weaker vessel'—because she was a woman. And he called himself 'the sturdy oak'—because he was a man. But he didn't know Abby Hopkins, even if she had come from the city straight from a country town. There was nothing weak about her and the way that she got rid of a husband who was forced on her and how she reformed the man she wanted to marry will please you mightily.

"It takes something in a woman to reform an actor who cares for nothing but drink—and the girl. But she did it in a way that will keep you chuckling with her cleverness and the pomposity of the actor—by-the-way, one of the cleverest creations the screen has seen.

"It's not a story of 'the perils of a great city' or the 'problems of a working girl,' but a big human story with laughs instead of the usual sex problems."

HERE is one that is a little more serious, but at the same time reflects the lighter side:

"This little country girl had a middle aged husband whom she despised forced on her. Ten minutes later he had revealed his true self—a secret drunkard and a coward whose only victims were women.

"So she ran away to the great city—and became a waitress in a restaurant. She fell in love with an actor, but he, too, was a victim of drink, but a different sort of one. He made her only laugh—and pity him. When he called on her and her girl chum at 2 a. m. to keep a 2 p. m. engagement she only smiled at him—while you'll be laughing aloud. But he elected himself her protector, for he was sure that she was 'the weaker vessel' and he the sturdy oak.

"Then her husband from whom she fled tricked her into a room. He tried to attack her. The actor heard the news and pistol in hand burst through the door 'just in time to protect her,' he declared.

"But there he saw the husband floored and the girl raining blows on him. 'Don't protect her, protect me,' the man pleaded, and then was glad enough to flee. She got rid of hubby that time for good—and she got the man she wanted—because she was the stronger and could bring him back to decency and a great success in his profession.

"There's just enough of the heart grip—and lots of laughs."

HERE are some of the shorter ones:

"She was a woman—and you know that woman is 'the weaker vessel.' Oh, yes! And that man is 'the sturdy oak.' Most assuredly! Then when this man who had come to love her heard that she was in the power of the husband from whom she fled, he raced gun in hand to be her protector, only to find hubby himself on the floor pleading for help. She was the best little two fisted fighter you ever saw. She knew how to handle the husband that was forced on her and she knew how to reform the man she wanted. There's just enough heart interest to fill in between the laughs."

"A husband she loathed was forced on her and when he revealed his true character she fled. She tried the peaceful plan, but he would have nothing of it. And then she tried the other and she made him glad to take it on the run when he could escape her fists. And then there was the other man who called himself her protector and her 'the weaker vessel.' He's one of the funniest characters ever shown on the screen. Come and laugh at him and then be delighted in the end when the girl reforms him and finds the happiness for which she had yearned."

"She made the husband who had been forced on her glad to set her free. And she got the man she wanted, though she had to reform him to do it. He was sure that he was 'the sturdy oak'—and of course, the woman was 'the weaker vessel.' But was she? We'll not say so as long as we remember that scene where she—But we can't give it away. We won't rob you of a laugh or a thrill."

WE would put as much of humor as possible in the musical setting of this. There are a few chances to get this spirit into the score and some musicians may think that it might spoil the harmony, but we have found that this spirit always get the audience into the right humor.

Near the start we would use "The Old Town Pump" for the introduction of J. B. Hanks even though the scenes are supposed to be sentimental, just for a few bars and then we'd bring this back with the hack driver declaring that this is the third time he has driven Hanks home after a wedding. Another little touch can be put in with the "Lord Baltimore Apartments" which we are told is conducted by a Southern woman with a bar or two of "Maryland, My Maryland."

For the introduction of J. Booth Hunter for the first time we would use "Oh, You Big Beautiful Doll," played with the cornet burlesque effect.

"Smiles" is suggested as the theme here and it makes a good one with the tunefulness and merriness of it. It should be introduced with the title "He looked into her eyes" and then repeated for the scene in the park and finally at the very end.

For the scene where Hanks is seen on the floor use a few bars, burlesque of "Then You'll Remember Me," "What Are the Wild Waves Saying" or "The End of a Perfect Day" starting this when the husband pleads and continuing until after he says that he will divorce her.

ALMOST any sort of picture will balance with this, but we would prefer to have a comedy, getting one with something of the "girlie" effects in it. Nearly all the scenes here are interiors, so that a scenic will fit in mighty well, preferably at this season, one that gives the snow effects.

One of the old-fashioned love songs should be used as the prelude, in-as-much as Mary MacLaren has the character of an old-fashioned girl as distinguished from the modern "chicken." "An Old-Fashioned Girl" is well suited for this, or "Listen to the Mocking Bird" or "Oh, That We Two Maying." You can use either the rose garden effect of the verenda of a country home with a drop showing the fields and if possible a river in the background. Rising moon effects can be given and the singer should be a girl simply glad in white, or for a man and a girl, with a duet with the "Maying" number.

Use some selections from popular comic operas for the overture if you have an orchestra and by all means bring nothing heavy into your program if you can help it. Although we have said that this picture will stand any sort of setting, and that is true, it is a whole lot more apt to create the talk that you want if you make the entire presentation a happy one.

We wouldn't advise any special uniforming of the girl employes except that they should wear neat and plain white dresses during the run of this picture, not to suggest waitresses but as clean and pure young women, for this is a picture without anything of the vampire of bad woman suggestion in it.

AS A SUMMERTIME INCENTIVE

A Suggestion that May Link You Up with the Merchants of Your Town

INSTEAD of trying to think up freak things for advertising this picture why not follow the same plan worked so successfully by George Fischer, manager of Saxe's Alhambra theatre, Milwaukee, and use the personality of the star.

Get a collection of DIFFERENT pictures of Miss MacLaren from your exchange and arrange them attractively in candy stores and ice cream dispensaries, getting the dealers to arrange Mary MacLaren kisses and Mary MacLaren sundaes for the week preceding your showing. If you will get these displays up attractively enough the merchants will be glad to cooperate for this will bring them business—especially during the summer season.

A WORD TO THE STAR-STEALERS

THIS is to notify all unscrupulous producers and all unscrupulous agents of unscrupulous producers that the Universal company has a perfectly good contract with Miss Priscilla Dean, and that the Universal company intends to protect its rights to the very limit of its ability.

Since you have no sense of honor to which we can appeal, we are forced to appeal to your sense of fear of the law.

Some of you have been making offers of higher salaries to actors and actresses now under contract with the Universal, knowing in your cheap hearts that you would create a keen sense of dissatisfaction in the mind of the star and hoping thereby to cause the star to spoil a picture or two for us and make us glad to give up our contracts. Thank God, you are dealing with the wrong person when you seek to corrupt Miss Dean's sense of honor.

Some of you have gone into meetings of the National Association, prating loudly about a higher standard of honor in the business; only to send secret word to one of your agents to see if such and such a star could not be stolen.

The only standard of honor that is worth a damn in this business or any other business is a standard of action, not of words.

The Universal company, as fast as it obtains legal proof of your guilt in the matter of star stealing or contract violating, will publish your names so that the whole trade will know who is putting the curse of crookedness upon the industry. The Universal will ask exhibitors to establish a real standard of honor in the business by refusing to book pictures made with stolen stars or based on violated contracts.

The whole trade knows that Miss Priscilla Dean, for example, was lifted from obscurity to stardom by the combined orts of the Universal brains, Universal enterprise and Universal money. The exhibitors now recognize her as a star of the first water. We think they will co-operate with us in seeing that the stars are not stolen by any of the vultures of the trade. We think they have had enough sad experience in this line and we think they all know that every time a star is stolen it is the exhibitor, not the crooked producer who foots the higher bill.

We are looking for peace, gentlemen, but if necessary we will fight like hell to get it.

JOE MARTIN SOLILOQUIZES

Ye gods?

What'll they do to me next?

This business of working in the movies just to make human beings laugh is one heluva job, I'll say it is.

The boss of the Universal studio wouldn't have the nerve to treat any other actors the way he treats me.

He blew into my cage like a chunk of TNT this morning and said, "Come on, Joe, you've got to be funny again today. I've got a new stunt for you that will be a regular scream."

Hell!

Do you know what his idea of a scream was?

Well, he dolled me up like an old woman with a nightie and a boodwah cap and everything and then made me squat in front of a table and drink tea!

Sfunny as a crutch. And the rottenest tea I ever inhaled. Studio tea. The boss purposely made it punk so I'd screw up my face and he could get a funny close-up of me.

And the idiotic public sits like a convention of tomfools and laughs and laughs and laughs. Laughs at a monkey because he makes a face! I'd like to see the actor who could make a crowd of monkeys laugh by making a face. He might get away with it with human beings, but not with serious-minded monkeys.

Just because I smashed up the show at the strand theatre in new york, the folks in the Universal studio work me harder than ever. They'll make a fortune out of me because the jassax exhibitors are willing to pay big money for funny stuff.

The universal crowd and the exhibitors get the money. And what do I get?

Tea! That's all I get. And the rottonest tea that ever came out of a Russian teapot or samovar or sampan or whatever you call the damthing!

Hope Loring, continuity writer of "The Thirteenth Hour," new Universal serial

Combine Universal and Jewel Establishments

The Universal and Jewel offices at 1600 Broadway, New York City, have combined offices and Sam Zierler has been made general salesmanager of both the offices. The booking offices and sales force are now one and it is believed that the efficiency of the office will be strengthened by the consolidation.

The new selling plan is in effect in the New York office and there are now two groups of salesmen instead of three groups. Formerly one group sold Jewels, Universal Special Attraction, and shorter subjects. Under the new plan one group will sell the Jewel and the Special attraction brand and the other group will sell the shorter subjects. This will give each of the salesmen a smaller territory to cover in New York City and will shorten the exhibitor's time with Universal salesmen.

Horse Racing Subject

Marshall Neilan, Anita Stewart and Louis B. Mayer will leave California soon for Kentucky, where all exterior scenes and the race track views for "In Old Kentucky," another of the series of pictures starring Anita Stewart to be released through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, will be "shot."

This picture deals with a story from the dramatic classic depicting horse racing at its height in Kentucky.

Hope Loring Goes Abroad

Tom Hamlin Meets Her

RED HAND strides ruthlessly through the bushes and seizes the trembling maiden by the hair. His powerful right arm slowly but relentlessly descends while the gleam from the keen bladed knife he clutches fills her with a chilling and helpless terror. She is alone with the renegade on an uncharted desert. The maiden swoons;—

"The next episode of this thrilling serial can be seen at this theatre next Tuesday."

A knock at the door.

"A guy from Motion Picture News to see Miss Hope Loring," said the bell boy. And the interviewer then met the prolific writer of Universal serials.

Hope Loring is a writer who follows her stories until the chase of the heroine and hero ends happily. She aids and abets the hard-working director through the entire eighteen episodes of a serial.

Now that the Universal is producing a serial which brings Eddie Polo and Peggy O'Dare with the director and principal members of the acting company across the country from Los Angeles to New York City, Miss Loring accompanies them with her typewriter.

And she is going with them to Europe where so many of the episodes of the new serial, "The Broken Idol," will be produced. It was Hope Loring who wrote "The Lure of the Circus," starring Eddie Polo. Another Universal serial, "The Red Glove," starring Marie Walcamp, was adapted by Hope Loring from Douglass Grant's book, "The Fifth Ace." She says that the story by Mr. Grant was excellent but that to make a serial out of it she had to supply a "chase" after something. So she invented the red glove.

Miss Loring also wrote a couple of the Cyclone Smith stories and is responsible for many five-reel feature pictures, among them being "A Society Sensation," starring Carmel Myers, and "The Cabaret Girl," starring Ruth Clifford, both Universal pictures.

She prefers to write the serials. She admits that she was expelled from school when the teacher discovered her writing mystery stories during school hours. Hope Loring is slight of build, real easy to look at, dark hair, and her rather sombre eyes quickly become extremely animated during a discussion.

And she is young and energetic. The interviewer asked her what she considered her biggest bugbear in writing serials.

"The most exasperating problem is to provide the 'stunt' so necessary to end each episode," said Miss Loring.

"Sometimes I just rack my brains and finally work out what I consider will be just a dandy stunt to finish the fifth episode without making a major casualty out of the star. I rush over to the director and explain the 'original' stunt in glowing terms. Then I ask the director breathlessly if he don't think it's exceptionally good.

"And he says that it ought to be very good, as it always has been before.

"I always try to actually live the characters and therefore be able to tell exactly what such and such a character would do in a certain crisis. You know a writer who introduces many varied and unusual characters in her stories must be a regular Protean writer.

"Next to providing some unusual stunt to end each episode of a serial is how to get your hero or heroine out of the terrible predicament you left them in at the end of the previous episode.

"If Red Hand is alone with the girl on an uncharted desert and she swoons as he is about to kill her, how is she to be rescued. You know I have the darndest habit of conjuring up situations of that kind and then have the problem of solving the rescue at the beginning of the next episode.

"And I have to outguess the kids. They are solving the anticipated rescue and betting all their spare marbles on their judgment. When I was at school I was a lonesome little girl and sort of mooned around by myself. But all children have great imagination. And they are keenly interested in solving mysteries.

"My mother was Spanish and my father was Irish. This might account for the streak in me that prompts a consistent study and interest in mysteries and plots and killings. As a child by myself I was so lonely that I materialized imaginary persons and always found I had plenty of ghostly friends.

"As I grew older I developed an unsatiable craving for knowledge. I just haunt the libraries at every opportunity. And the daily newspapers are always closely scanned. My mind has acted as a sort of a wax cylinder such as they use in making records for phonographs. And I try to learn from every person I come in contact, some unusual incident in their lives. These incidents are stored away and invariably come to my rescue, even years afterwards, when I find them essential to a story I may be working on," concluded Miss Loring.

Where there's life there's "Hope." And now with her versatile imagination, her amazing cleverness, and her trusty typewriter, Hope Loring is going to drive Eddie Polo and Peggy O'Dare into all sorts of dangerous difficulties while they are gallivantin' amidst the Lords and Dukes of Europe.—Tom Hamlin.

Fans Cheer Ruth Roland

Attesting the popularity in which she is held by the public, thousands of motion picture fans, exhibitors and exchange men turned out to greet Ruth Roland in five cities where she made personal appearances, on the occasion of her return from New York to Los Angeles.

In Montreal the serial player appeared in ten theatres, and in Buffalo, Cleveland, Chicago and Milwaukee demonstrations marked her appearances.

Lyons and Moran Make Seven New Comedies

Universal announces the titles of seven Lyons-Moran comedies which are being produced at Universal City with the two comedians in the leading roles. Two more writers have been added to the scenario staff, Frederick Bennett, former "Fatty" Arbuckle scenario chief, and Melville Brown being the latest two to join twin-star organization.

The new stories to be issued in screen form, some of which are nearly completed, are: "Ready Made Dudes," "Heart Trouble," "Ten Nights in a Tea Room," a burlesque on prohibition; "Before and After Taking," "By the Dusty Rio Grande," and "Don't Mistrust Your Husband."

Two leading women instead of one are now appearing in support of the fun-makers. They are Mildred Moore the former Follies girl, and Charlotte Merriam.

Apfel on New Subject

Oscar Apfel, having finished "Bringing Up Betty," the second of his productions for World Pictures, with Evelyn Greeley as the star, is now engaged on picturizing "The Oakdale Affair," with Miss Greeley starring. "The Oakdale Affair" was first published in The Blue Book Magazine as a novelette. The author is Edgar Rice Burroughs, and was put into scenario form by Wallace C. Clifton.

Johnnie Walker, juvenile lead in the next Virginia Pearson production, "Impossible Catherine"

Virginia Hammond Contracts with World

World Pictures announces the signing of contracts with Virginia Hammond whereby that actress will be a permanent member of the World artists as a featured player. Miss Hammond was born in Virginia and made her debut on the stage with E. H. Sothern.

So successful was Miss Hammond, gauged by the opinions of the press and the reception accorded her by the audiences, that Mr. Sothern placed her under a long term contract and she remained with him as his leading woman for many years. During this time she was seen in "If I Were King," "Our American Cousin," playing opposite to Mr. Sothern's Lord Dundreary. She also appeared with Mr. Sothern in his Shakespearian repertoire. Recently she played in "What's Your Husband Doing?" George Hobart's farce which had a New York run. Miss Hammond has also appeared as leading woman in many of the most prominent stock companies in this country. She has appeared in pictures, having been seen to advantage in "The Hand Invisible," a World Picture in which Montagu Love was the star.

Miss Hammond will begin work immediately with Mr. Love in a five-reel feature which has been given the working title of "The Mark of the Beast."

Pearson Joins Pathe

Elmer R. Pearson, formerly with the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, has joined Pathe Exchange, Inc., as feature sales manager, having taken up his duties in the Home Office.

Previous to his connection with the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Mr. Pearson was sales manager for Essanay and George Kleine, branch manager for V. L. S. E. and Vitagraph in Kansas City, branch manager for World, Pathe and General in Omaha

"Little Mary's" Latest

Mary Pickford will, it is predicted, score one of her biggest hits in "Behind the Scenes," which has been scheduled by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation as the Success Series release for June 15. This is a story of stage life, said to be most sincere in its depiction of the thrilling successes an dthe miserable failures which mark some theatrical careers.

Tryad Star Famed on Stage

Gareth Hughes Has Scored Successes in Many Big Plays in Legitimate

IN Gareth Hughes, Tryad has acquired a promising star from the stage. With a strong cast, which Tryad Pictures plans to give him in support in each picture, officials of the producing company expect that Hughes will quickly win a big following among the picture goers of the country, as he has done in his stage showings.

In 1915 Mr. Hughes scored his first big success in "Moloch," which was presented at the New Amsterdam Theatre, New York. The Metropolitan critics praised his work in the play, as did up-state papers, when he appeared in other cities. The Boston Globe at that time had this to say:

"Long after the memory of "Moloch" has faded, the brilliant artistry of Gareth Hughes will be recalled. We are indebted to Holbrook Blinn and Miss Dix for bringing this young man to us, and our regret at the loss of the play is more, because we lose, temporarily at least, Mr. Hughes as well."

In 1916 Mr. Hughes appeared with Elsie Ferguson in Margaret Schiller in New York, and again scored by his character work. He then appeared in "Everyman," having the star position in this play presented at the Burbank Theatre, Los Angeles, and received enconiums of praise from the critics.

With Leo Dietrichstein in "The Judge of Zalamea" in 1917, he continued his success. The critic of the Milwaukee Press wrote:

"Ditrichstein is a great actor, but with him in the "Judge of Zalamea" is another who rivals him for honors. This youthful star who will help keep this play on its feet is Gareth Hughes who splendidly takes the part of Juan. His role is one that usually is found to be weak, but Gareth Hughes' acting is far above the ordinary. He portrays in a beautifully natural manner, all the fervor and sensitiveness of youth. His reception equalled that of even Dietrichstein himself."

Mr. Hughes has also appeared with success in "The New World," "Salome," "The Guilty Man," "Easter," and other plays.

To Screen "The Copperhead"

Lionel Barrymore Will Appear in Picturized Version of His Stage Success

LIONEL BARRYMORE will be seen on the screen in "The Copperhead." Arrangements to that end have been completed by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and the production will be released under the Paramount-Artcraft trademark during the coming year.

Dramatized by Augustus Thomas from the story by Frederick Landis, "The Copperhead" was presented by John D. Williams at the Shubert Theatre, New York, February 18, 1918, and was acclaimed one of the most notable dramatic performances of a generation. At the opening a precedent was established when the big audience remained for ten minutes after the final curtain to pay tribute with cheers and bravos for the star, producer and author. After a long run at the Shubert Mr. Barrymore duplicated his success in a number of other large cities of the country, continuing until he came to New York this spring to appear with his brother, John Barrymore, in "The Jest."

Lionel Barrymore, although he has appeared in motion pictures, is best known for his work on the legitimate stage, his career dating from 1893 when he was seen in "The Rivals," in which his grandmother, the late Mrs. John Drew, was appearing as Mrs. Malaprop.

Governor Smith Plays in "Volcano" Scenes

Sensing long before the armistice was signed last November that revolutionists and radicals, momentarily cowed by the imposition of war-time protective measures, would break loose with varying degrees of fury once peace approached or was officially signed, Mr. Thomas wrote what is likely to be considered one of the most forceful dramas, aptly titled "The Volcano," as indicative of the seething, boiling conditions being created in America. This picture has just been completed at the Biograph studios in New York by Harry Raver, Mr. Thomas' producer associate, under the direction of George Irving, and will in a week be released nationally by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

One of the novelties consists in the personal appearance in it of Governor Alfred E. Smith, long a close friend of the dramatist, and fellow member of Tammany Hall. Governor Smith does not appear in any brief photographic flash taken from some previously released news reel, but is an actual player in several conspicuous scenes of "The Volcano." One of these scenes shows the Governor of the Empire State in the Governor's Room of the New York City Hall.

Young Tyrad Player to Co-Star with Hughes

Irma Harrison has been cast with Ruth Stonehouse to play opposite Gareth Hughes in Tyrad's forthcoming production, "The Red Viper."

Miss Harrison, a relative of the late President Harrison, is, like Ruth Stonehouse, a dancer of a high order, and has appeared in the ballet in the Metropolitan Opera Company. She also is a graduate of the Academy of Dramatic Art.

Both stage and screen experience covering several years has fitted Miss Harrison for the role she will have in "The Red Viper."

"Yes or No" for Jose

Edward Jose announces that the script of "Mothers of Men," his first independent production has been completed, and that work has already been started on the second, which is "Yes or No," the Broadway play presented by Anderson and Weber.

It has been decided to use the Talmadge Studio for the first picture.

In the center she is greeting her stern old Quaker father, who is making a visit to the young girls' school. Billy West Comedies Retain Favor Reports to Bulls Eye Film Corporation from exchanges throughout the United States handling the Billy West Comedies, indicate that exchangemen and exhibitors everywhere are more than satisfied with the series of comedies being produced in the Bulls Eye Studios in Hollywood by Nat C. Spitzer, director-general.

The Bulls Eye series began with "He's In Again," and then in rapid-fire order as per schedule came "A Rolling Stone," "Ship-Ahoy," "The Chauffeur," "Lured," "Flirts," and "Coppers and Scents."

Charles Pathe Tribute

Statements of personal appreciation of Charles Pathe as a film pioneer, and in recognition of the work he has done for motion pictures, are in the hands of the Pathe office from the governors of thirty-four states. These have been received during and since the recent visit of Charles Pathe to this country, and the Pathe organization has caused them to be printed and distributed, together with a story of the early life of Charles Pathe, the visions he had of motion pictures, and his accomplishment, written by Alden Sedgwick.

F. P.-Lasky New Season Releases

Two Features Announced for Distribution on New Plan

WALTER E. GREENE, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of distribution, has announced the Paramount-Artcraft subjects for the first week in September, the initial releases for the year under the recently announced Selective Booking Plan. They are Elsie Ferguson in "The Witness for the Defense" and Wallace Reid in "The Valley of the Giants."

Under the new release plan the Paramount-Artcraft subjects will be scheduled two and three a week, alternately, and it is designed to have the prints in the exchanges, ready for inspection by exhibitors, at least two months in advance of the release date. Anticipating the inauguration of this schedule, prints of "The Witness for the Defense" and "The Valley of the Giants" were in the home office in New York three weeks ago, and the pictures were viewed by the members of the Exploitation Department.

As a result, the country-wide campaign now being worked out by the Exploitation Department according to the general plan which will be followed in exploiting all future Paramount-Artcraft releases will soon be in full operation in all the Famous Players-Lasky exchanges.

"The Witness for the Defense," it is stated by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, is one of the most elaborate as well as one of the most dramatic productions in which Miss Ferguson has yet been starred. George Fitzmaurice, the director, and Ouida Bergere, who wrote the scenario, co-operated to the fullest extent, with the result that the picture is said to be fully worthy of the honor accorded it in being selected to open the new Paramount-Artcraft year.

In Miss Ferguson's support, Vernon Steele, Warner Oland and Wyndham Standing are numbered among the well-known players.

"The Valley of the Giants," in which Wallace Reid is starred, is a picturization of Peter B. Kyne's story which attracted wide attention when published in the Red Book. Marion Fairfax wrote the scenario, and James Cruze directed. The scenes are laid in the great Redwood forest of California, and the natural grandeur of the surroundings, it is said, leaves nothing to be desired in the matter of backgrounds, a situation of which Frank Urson, the cameraman, is declared to have taken the fullest advantage. The story is said to be thrilling in the extreme, and in the cast are seen Grace Darmond, who was specially engaged to play the leading feminine role; Kay Laurel, noted beauty of Ziegfeld's Follies; William Brunton, Charles Ogle, Ralph Lewis, Hart Hoxie, Noah Berry, Guy Oliver, W. H. Brown, Richard Cummings and Ogden Crane.

Second Eminent Authors Picture

Leroy Scott Story Will Follow After "The Cup of Fury"

ALTHOUGH no release date has been announced for the first Eminent Authors Picture, it is evident that production activities of this corporation are far advanced. Following a Rupert Hughes picture "The Cup of Fury," will come a Leroy Scott product, "Partners of the Night," Mr. Scott now working on the adaptation in conjunction with Charles S. Whittaker.

It is said that the first Gertrude Atherton picture has been sent to the Goldwyn studios at Culver City for immediate production. Rupert Hughes is progressing rapidly with the script of his first picture. "The Cup of Fury," for which Eve Unsell is making the adaptation.

What Mary Roberts Rinehart and Gouveneur Morris will fix upon for their first pictures, is now under discussion with prospect of a definite announcement in a week or two. A Basil King picture is now being shown in "The City of Comrades," in which Tom Moore is the Goldwyn star. Jane Cowl and Ethel Barrymore have appeared in two pictures based on Basil King's plays. Even greater success may be expected of King's first photo-drama for Eminent Authors since he has been holding back several novels until the present plan of author-producer co-operator could be put into effect.

"Partners of the Night" will make strong material for the man who has "The Whip," 'Sporting Life," and "The White Heather" to his credit. The title covers a series of seven detective stories that formed one of the most successful magazine features of the kind that the Metropolitan Magazine has ever published. A young lieutenant detective named Clifford finds his every move and ambition in his profession blocked by a superior who is a crook, and whom he ultimately exposes by the aid of a female criminal after a number of scenes that make excellent screen material.

Mr. Whittaker is considered a decided acquisition for the Beach-Goldwyn organization after his record with Famous Players, for whom he was also responsible in initiating the special productions.

An extraordinary amount of comment has appeared in the press throughout the country since the first announcement of the Goldwyn-Beach motion picture project. The event has won the recognition of the great public which each author in the group commands.

Film Specials Reissue Selig Features

Selig negatives are to be reissued to independent exchanges, as a result of an arrangement made with Exclusive Features, Inc., which controls the world's rights, by Film Specials Inc., a new organization in the State Right field.

The series will consist of five and six-reel features, each to be sold on its individual merit. "Brown of Harvard," with Tom Moore, will be the first. It is now ready, and has been re-edited and sub-titled.

Each picture will feature a popular star and a story from a well known book or stage play.

Lew W. Foster, general manager of Fine Arts Film Co., Cincinnati, Ohio, has purchased the re-issue of "Brown of Harvard" for Southern Ohio and Kentucky.

Earl Metcalfe Given An Army Citation

Earl Metcalfe, who is supporting June Elvidge in "A Tangled Romance" has just received from General Pershing a citation for meritorious services rendered in France while he was an officer in the American Expeditionary Forces.

Metcalfe went overseas in October, 1917, as a lieutenant of the 165th Infantry (old 69th New York), and returned to the United States upon a special mission to the War Department a few months ago.

Mid-West Picture Boom

Booming business conditions in the Middle West are reported by Joe Schnitzer, Universal's general sales manager who has returned from an extensive trip.

"Exhibitors tell me screen plays have advanced so much they will easily compete, if not out-do summer vaudeville productions" he said. "All exhibitors agree our new sales plan is bound to assist them too."

Blackton's Cameraman

In addition to the names previously listed, the roster of those associated with Commodore Blackton in the technical departments of his new organization, The J. Stuart Blackton Feature Pictures, Inc., includes W. S. Adams, as photographer, late of the U. S. A. service.

"Consider Needs of the Stars"

World Director Tells Why Producers Fail to Get Results with Big Names

"SO OFTEN have I heard a producer say, 'I don't seem to have any luck with these big legitimate stars.' Somehow or other they don't get over,'" says Frank Crane who is directing Dorothy Green and Arthur Ashley in "The Praise Agent" for World Pictures. "I could have told this producer why he failed to cash in but as my advice was not asked so I kept my own counsel.

"The reason is very simple," continued Mr. Crane. "Here is the usual procedure of the representative producer. He makes overtures to a big name and gets the star under contract. The next step is to look up some stage success that this star appeared in to advantage both artistically and financially. The chances are that this vehicle or as we will term it the 'wagon' was one that flourished ten or twenty years ago. The play still lives but the star has become older and the ravages of time have left indelible marks that the camera does not overlook. Now you take these marks and the screen magnifies them three or four fold. The result to the audiences is in the nature of a disappointment. The star has not the freshness of youth that picture audiences demand and the consequence is the picture does not get over with the flourish expected by all concerned.

"If this same producer had taken this star and fitted her with a vehicle in which her present age would fit into the character she is cast for, the audience would have accepted her and no doubt have been pleased with the offering and given the star all the credit that her undeniable talent deserved. I should say that a million dollars have been squandered through a lack of ordinary intelligence in selecting the right sort of plays for a high priced star.

"The stars, too, have been at fault in many instances. The producer in his endeavor to make his star happy has left the selection of the vehicle to the actor. This artist knowing nothing of the picture end of the game selected a play that might be or was all right on the spoken stage, but absolutely worthless for the screen. The star used an impossible vehicle that contributed both to her failure and loss to the management."

Universal Features Started

Four New Long Productions Are Under Way While Week Sees Many Completed

WITHIN the space of a few days, Universal companies in the West have begun four new productions, all of them long features, while several big pictures have been finished.

Harry Carey, who recently finished "The Outcasts of Poker Flat," started work on the new Texan melodrama, "Jim of the Ranges." Gloria Hope and Claire Anderson have been chosen as the feminine leads for Carey in this production. The picture is being made under the direction of Jack Ford.

"Playing the Game," a Broadway success by Sada Gowan, is to be made into a six-reel production with an all-star cast. Seigman directs the company. Monroe Salisbury has completed "Devils Have Their Friends" and has started work on his new vehicle, "Sundown Trail," the story of "the West that was."

Lynn Reynolds has chosen the cast for the new production, "The Brute Breaker," in which Frank Mayo and Kathryn Adams are to be featured. Mary MacLaren, who is working in "The Petal on the Current."

"The Pinnacle," a melodrama in Kathryn Adams are to be featured. is nearing completion, while "The Right to Happiness," Dorothy Phillips' latest vehicle, is being cut and titled. Marie Walcamp, the serial star, is still out on location.

J. P. McGowan to Stay with Universal

John P. McGowan, one of the best known directors of the screen, who for several years has specialized on serial productions, signed a long term contract with the Universal company on Saturday, June 21, the day he sailed with the Eddie Polo company to England. Mr. McGowan was so busy during his short stay in New York that it was necessary to sign the contract at the docks just before the ship shoved off.

Mr. McGowan directed the Helen Holmes series, "The Lass of the Lumberlands," "The Lure of the Circus," and "The Red Glove." He has been with the Universal company for more than two years and has directed some of that company's most successful serials.

"A Man's Country" Is Drama of Old West

Alma Rubens will make her second appearance in a Robertson-Cole production when Exhibitors' Mutual release "A Man's Country," a Western drama of "men who worked hard and played harder; who lived fast and died faster."

The story is a product of John Lynch of the Ince scenario staff, which was whipped into shape for screening by E. Richard Schayer. Henry Kolker was selected to direct Miss Rubens.

Miss Rubens' supporting cast includes Lon Chaney, Joseph Dowling, Albert Roscoe, Alfred Hollingsworth, Edna May Wilson and Phil Gastrock.

Model Comedies Taken

Report comes from headquarters of the Model Comedy Company in New York, stating that all territory for the exhibiting of Gale Henry comedies has been sold throughout the United States. The announcement further states that foreign rights also have been sold.

Pathe Review Offerings

As a cooling thought Pathe Review No. 12 offers a Novagraph slow motion analysis of ice skating. A Ditmar animal picture, and scenes showing how our wounded soldiers are cared for and rehabilitated, are also offered in this issue.

Daring Anne Luther now appearing in the Western Photoplay's serial, "The Great Gamble"

Tyrad Scenario Author Always Successful

Winifred Dunn, scenario writer for Tyrad Pictures, Inc., and a "free lance" writer known widely throughout the motion picture industry, was born in Rochester, N. Y., the daughter of George Malcolm Dunn, an Englishman of note, who was private secretary to William Ewart Gladstone, and executive secretary to Labouchere.

About six years ago Miss Dunn met with instant success in writing for the screen, and sold many stories to Col. William N. Selig, and other producers in Chicago. She also wrote for Art Dramas, Veritas, and other companies. Her vaudeville sketches, "The Coward," and "Murderin' Bill" were stage successes of a high order. Miss Dunn also contributed special professional articles to the motion picture magazines.

Miss Dunn now will write the series of photoplays decided upon by Tyrad Pictures as starring vehicles for Gareth Hughes.

Many Comics Prepared at Universal City

Work on Century and Rainbow comedies is progressing rapidly at the studio in Universal City. Fred Fishback is directing a new comedy titled "A Baby Doll Bandit," in which Edith Roberts and Jimmie Adams are starring. The comedy varies in action from school day scenes to modern dance halls and holdups.

Mr. and Mrs. Dan Russell, the vaudeville comedians, are busy in "A Horrible Honeymoon." Jans Davis is directing a number of animal scenes in the comedies which will star "Brownie" the dog.

Many Exhibitors Take "Bishop's Emeralds"

Paul Meyer, treasurer of the Virginia Pearson Photoplays, Inc., has returned from a trip through the west, in which he visited many of the Pathe Exchanges, and met many of the leading exhibitors personally. He was enthusiastic about the reports he heard of the reception the first Virginia Pearson production, "The Bishop's Emeralds" had received through the country, and which argues well for the success of those which are to follow.

Fannie Ward on Pathe List

Leads June 29 Program Offerings in "The Profiteers"; Ruth Roland Serial

HEADED by Fannie Ward in "The Profiteers," Pathe offers its usually interesting program for the week of June 29. This is the sixth of Miss Ward's productions released under the Pathe banner. It is described as a story so close to our own lives in its essential workings that it holds a personal interest for all who see it. It has to do with the working of powerful, unscrupulous forces—a cold, heartless ambition that reached for power and gain to the detriment of the forces of right.

"In the Breakers," episode No. 11 of the Pathe serial, "The Tiger's Trail," starring Ruth Roland, opens with Belle Boyd—Miss Roland—being rescued from the branches of a tree in which she had caught when thrown over the precipice by the tiger worshippers. Randolph Gordon has hidden the tiger idol in the safe in the mine office from which it is stolen by Bull Shotwell. Tiger Face is made a prisoner in the Gordon ranch, and Belle and her friends go to the beach for a few days' rest. While out rowing she and Jack Randall (George Larkin), are captured by the Hindus and Jack is bound to a rock that is submerged at high tide. Belle escapes by diving from a high promontory into the sea.

The Harold Lloyd comedy is described as a brisk, clever seasonal satire, called "Spring Fever," as Hal E. Roach, the General Director says, "based on an elemental thesis of human nature and the weather."

"Pen Points of Progress," shows how, in writing, we have come from the far stone age, with its carven hieroglyphics through the quill period, into the steel age and finally into the modern article that is a facile fountain of graphic expression.

Then comes "Topics of the Day," full of timely quips and "smart slams."

Olive Thomas in a Triangle

"Prudence on Broadway," Fourth of a Special Series, Is Released July 6

THE reception accorded the first three productions of the special series of Triangle plays starring Olive Thomas, has convinced that concern that "Prudence on Broadway," the fourth of the series, will prove equally popular. This is a story of contrast, the story of a demure little Quakeress who is introduced to the bright lights of Broadway. But to Miss Thomas, who first won fame atop the Midnight Frolic Roof, and who is a veritable child of the theatre, the role offers no difficulty, and her portrayal of "Prudence" is said to be an especially good bit of characterization.

In order that she may learn to battle with the wicked world, Prudence's father sends her away from her Quaker home to a fashionable New York school, and later to visit her aunt, a wealthy society matron. There her soft "thees" and "thous" win instant favor. She is besieged by suitors, but the most ardent Romeo is John Melbourne, although he has already indulged in matrimony to the limit allowed by law. But shy Prudence matches her Quaker wits against the worldly knowledge of Melbourne, and when the smoke of battle blows over it discloses a deeply chagrined man and a triumphant girl.

Olive Thomas makes the most of a role which is suited to her abilities. "Prudence on Broadway" is from the pen of Catherine Carr, who has contributed many successes to Triangle. The picture, which will be released on July 6th, was directed by Frank Borzage with care and attention to detail, and the photography by Plimy Horn is reported as adhering to the Triangle standard.

Fans' Taste Runs in Cycles

William L. Sherrill Declares Demand for Shorter Subjects Proves Theory

JUST as the history of nations may be written in cycles, and, as we are taught everything on this planet moves in cycles, so may the public taste as gauged by motion pictures be said to follow the same line, according to William L. Sherrill, president of the Frohman Amusement Company. He stated recently:

"Before the day of the five, six and seven reel production the motion picture theatres necessarily exploited the shorter length reels. But with the advent of the feature and the superfeature, the demand for that kind of a subject all but disappeared, and theatres confined their choice on shorter length subjects to travelogues, scenics and split reel comedies.

"Then came the campaign on the part of progressive motion picture journals urging exhibitors to give as much attention to the exploitation and exhibition of worth while one and two-reel subjects as they would to the greater length attractions.

"For some reason or other it was left to the motion picture trade publications to gauge the public's taste, and their summation of the situation was that folks care little or nothing concerning the footage length of the motion picture as long as it is entertaining or worth while, and some progressive exhibitors harken to the suggestion promptly."

Mr. Sherrill continuing, explained he saw the market should be met with a supply, and for that reason determined on producing the Texas Guinan two-reel Westerns.

Sennett Comedy Queens Draw in the Money

From exhibitors throughout the country come reports that Mack Sennett's bathing girls in the latest big comedy "Yankee Doodle in Berlin," which is being handled by Sol Lesser, is making previous records in many houses back marks. Figures are given to prove these claims such as a week's business at the Tivoli theatre, San Francisco, netting $10,300 while a two week engagement at the Kinema theatre, Los Angeles, brought in $20,100. Figures from other cities show substantial receipts.

The Sennett bathing girls appear in divertissements and poses in conjunction with the picture and the featured artist of the production is also appearing in person in a specially arranged mystic dance. This is Bothwell Browne, assisted by the Bathing Girls.

Juvenile Under Neilan's Direction

Wesley Barry, the freckle-faced youngster, whose appearance in "Daddy Long Legs" as the little orphan boy who got a jag on hard cider and in "The Unpardonable Sin," as the Amereican Boy Scout from Kansas but temporarily in Belgium, has been signed by Marshall Neilan, who will direct his forthcoming pictures exclusively for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

In Neilan's next picture, "The Eternal Three," an adaptation from the story, "Bob Hampton of Placer," young Barry will have an important part. It is not unlikely that he will be starred in a future release.

Small Invades Field of the Theatre

Edward Small, one of the largest motion picture managers in the East has decided to open a theatrical department and has associated with him Albert Karten as its manager. Mr. Karten has been identified with all the Palais Royal Productions, since their opening.

The addition of this department makes Mr. Small a most important all-around manager, for at present he has departments devoted to publicity, atmosphere people, scenario and continuity, theatrical, besides his own large department.

S-L-K Has Great Plans for Helen Holmes

In line with their desire to make Helen Holmes the biggest star of serial attractions, the S. L. K. Serial Corporation have secured the services of Donald McKenzie to direct Helen Holmes in her latest and what is claimed will be her most thrilling serial. Donald McKenzie will be remembered by serial fans as the director of numerous Pathe serial successes, among which are, "Perils of Pauline," "Shielding Shadow," and "The Seven Pearls."

The story selected by Mr. McKenzie and the executives of the S. L. K. Serial Corporation, is, in the opinion of those who are conversant with the serial market, one of the most thrilling, and exciting stories ever filmed. It was secured after about one hundred serial stories had been read by the scenario department of the S. L. K. Serial Corp.

Further announcement as to the author and the story will be made when the production is started next week, also an announcement of the method of distribution in this country and abroad will be shortly forthcoming.

"Beauty a Handicap" —Rubye de Remer

When art is placed in the background, so that beauty may be pushed forth, then pulchritude is a handicap to an actress. That is Rubye de Remer's somewhat startling assertion, and being considered very fair to look at, the World Picture star, now appearing in "Dust of Desire," ought to speak with authority.

"The actress that has been blessed with a fair measure of goods looks," says Miss De Remer, "labors under the handicap imposed by the casting director, who insists that she play only such parts that afford her a chance to look her prettiest. The best parts written are those in which character actors are called upon to play. It is true of the spoken drama, and the same holds good in screen productions."

Bessie Love's Newest

Bessie Love has started active work on the picturization of Millicent Evison's story, "Over the Garden Wall," which is being made at the Vitagraph studio at Hollywood. Miss Love will have a new leading man in Allen Forrest. Miss Love will assume the character of Peggy Gordon, "who goes after life with her sleeves roiled up."

Exploiting Briggs' Comics

Tribune News Syndicate of Five Hundred Newspapers Will Aid Exhibitors

A PUBLICITY campaign of wide scope has been prepared for the benefit of exhibitors using the Paramount-Briggs comedies. Through arrangements made by the Famous Players-Lasky corporation, nearly five hundred papers which are using the Briggs cartoons daily will co-operate in giving publicity to aid exhibitors showing those subjects in this country and Canada.

Officials of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation declare that the releasing of the Paramount-Briggs comedies gives exhibitors opportunity for making one of the most profitable tie-ups available in the industry today. Detailed plans, showing exactly how exhibitors can get the greatest possible benefits from this voluntary co-operation of 500 newspapers, already have been worked out by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, it is stated, and will be placed at the disposal of exhibitors at once, so that they will have ample time to make their local arrangements before the release of the first of the comedies September 1.

It is estimated that 20,000,000 persons see the Briggs cartoons every day in the year, in the 500 newspapers using the Tribune service. This tremendous engine of publicity, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation officials point out, is placed at the disposal of exhibitors, so that aside from the demand for the Briggs comedies themselves, there will be a constant advertising campaign that will send people to the motion picture theatres to see Skinny and his pals, acted by real persons, on the screen.

But in addition to this public demand already created by the Briggs cartoons, the 500 newspapers of the Tribune syndicate will further stimulate interest in the Paramount-Briggs Comedies by giving an unusual amount of reading matter to the pictures and the houses that show them.

Distribute the Willard Prints

Wally Van, Frank Hall's Representative on Coast, Takes Fifteen Prints

WALLY VAN, who will act in the capacity of special representative supervisor of productions and director of comedies for Frank G. Hall, in connection with his interests on the Coast, left New York Sunday afternoon for Los Angeles accompanied by four extra-sized trunks, containing prints of the Jess Willard picture, "The Challenge of Chance," which he will drop off at Denver, Seattle, San Francisco and Los Angeles, thereby bringing to the Western and Coast territories prints of this feature more than two weeks in advance of the usual schedule of release. Mr. Van carried with him fifteen prints of the Willard picture.

During the week, Mr. Hall dispatched special representatives from New York to Chicago, Cleveland, Toledo and other points east of the Mississippi, each with prints of the Willard picture and by this method of placing the picture in the important centres from here to the Coast, he believes he has established a record for quick delivery and service. Less than two weeks have elapsed since Mr. Hall closed the deal for the Willard picture and at that time the negative had not reached New York. During this short time, more than 70,000 feet of negative were cut, titled and tinted and prints made ready and placed in cities as far West as Denver.

Mr. Van will also act in the capacity of general supervisor of Frank Hall's interests on the Coast. At the present time, Mr. Hall has a serial "The Trail of the Octopus" in production under the direction of Ben Wilson with Mr. Wilson and Neva Gerber, in the leading roles, and Mr. Van will supervise this and other productions.

America's Unrest Depicted

Augustus Thomas' Special, a Hodkinson Release, Touches on Upheavals

THE work of editing "The Volcano," the Four-Star drama released by W. W. Hodkinson Corporation from the story by Augustus Thomas is completed, and exhibitor inquiries are pouring in for bookings. Mr. Thomas personally has overseen the editing of the film, and films are now being dispatched to the Hodkinson managers in thirty cities. Harry Raver produced the picture.

For months Mr. Thomas has been at work on a play dealing with the manufactured unrest and discontent in America, this story being destined then and now for the dramtic stage in the fall. Mr. Raver, his closest associate in screen affairs, persuaded him to permit the making of "The Volcano" as a picture, and its completion is immediately signalized by alien depredations and outrages throughout America, all of which heighten "The Volcano's" appeal and drawing power.

The events that have occurred in America during the actual making of this production have given a sense of prophecy to the work of the American dramatist.

"The Volcano" besides showing the secret plottings that have brought about outrages in America shows the remedy for the foreign agitator who seeks to plunge the workers of the country into chaos.

The introduction of "The Volcano" to the American public will be co-ordinated with a big publicity and advertising campaign.

Lake Huacachina, in southern Peru, is one of the "points of interest" in a coming Outing-Chester Picture, the film for which has just arrived. This isn't an ordinary body of water. It is a health resort and beauty parlor rolled into one.

For one thing, the water is said by the people to be a marvelous hair tonic, which, if given due trial, will grow an abundant hirsute crop on the baldest of heads. It is no uncommon sight to see several bald heads, perhaps journeyed from afar, down at the lake laving their shining domes. They stay there for long periods, pouring the water over their heads by the hour and the gallon.

At the same time many sufferers from rheumatism may be seen plastering themselves with mud from the bed of the lake, for this is said to effect a sure cure.

Critics Acclaim "The Crimson Gardenia"

That Rex Beach's "The Crimson Gardenia," a Goldwyn picture, will prove one of the biggest money makers of that organization's output, is a conclusion arrived at by Goldywn evecutives which may be of interest to exhibitors throughout the country. Convinced from the beginning that the picture, because of its strongly-sketched story and its colorful background, was bound to be a success, the company feels that its judgment has been more than validated by the reception given it in New York City the past week.

"The Crimson Gardenia" was shown beginning Sunday at the Rialto Theater and the press criticisms, both of the newspapers and trade publications, were most flattering to the picture.

Strong Episode "Elmo the Mighty," Serial

The fourth episode of the Universal serial "Elmo, the Mighty," featuring Elmo Lincoln as the hero and Grace Cunard as the heroine, is said to be another chapter bristling with action. It is entitled "A Fiendish Revenge," and centers about the mad attempts of the villainous Rawden and his desperado gang to capture the lovers, and by systematic torture force from their lips the secret of the hiding place of the wealth of the girl. The episode closes as usual with an exciting finale.

Helen Holmes Working on New S. L. K. Serial

Work on her new serial for the S. L. K. company has been begun by Helen Holmes. The title of the production is being kept a secret. While Miss Holmes has already won a reputation for daring in her picture work, especially in the many railroad stories she has appeared in, it is predicted that in this production she will out-do her previous efforts.

Supporting her will be Lieutenant Jack Lavering of old time Vitagraph note, who has just returned from Europe. Then there will be "Bill" Black, Frank Wunderlee, Nellie Lindrith and Floyd Buckley. Donald Mackenzie, who has directed many serials, will handle this one.

An exploitation campaign of size unusual for an independent serial is being planned, and will shortly be begun. S. S. Krollberg will direct the executive and production end of the company.

Name of Michigan Exchange Is Changed

The name of the Detroit Exchange of First National Exhibitors' Circuit has been changed from the Madison Film Exchange to First National Exhibitors' Circuit of Michigan.

Announcement to this effect has been sent to exhibitors throughout the State by Harry Scott, resident manager.

The change was made in accordance with the decision of the members of the Circuit, at their annual meeting in April, to abandon the names of the exchanges when they were independent releasing agencies, and adopt the title of First National Exhibitors' Circuit for each office in the United States and Canada.

Willard Is Optimistic

Jess Willard was not present at the opening performance at the Park Theatre, New York, of "The Challenge of Chance," in which he is featured, but he sent the following forecasting telegram to Frank Hall:

"Very sorry I cannot be in New York for opening of my picture. Hope your box-office will be as big a knock-out as I am going to hand to Dempsey on July 4."

Comedienne Duo's Releases

Madge Kennedy and Mabel Normand to Please in Two New Light Comedies

MADGE KENNEDY and Mabel Normand, Goldwyn's feminine light funmakers, are said to each have unique opportunities to shine in their latest releases.

Madge Kennedy in "Through the Wrong Door," by Jesse Lynch Williams, is supported by Goldwyn players skilled in high comedy. The star herself, plays a role demanding the utmost of finesse and charm.

John Bowers is again her leading man, essaying a role decidedly different from his work with Mabel Normand in "Sis Hopkins" and "The Pest," and unlike any of his other roles with Madge Kennedy. He shares many intriguing comic scenes with the star, and is responsible for most of the odd complications which result from a mistaken address.

Nowadays almost every Goldwyn cast contains the name of a man who distinguished himself in the Army or Navy, and "Through the Wrong Door" is no exception. Burnell Manly, the American ace with thirteen enemy 'planes to his credit, makes his first appearance in the screen since his return from France, assuming a leading role in the newest Goldwyn picture.

Herbert Standing finds an extremely humorous and unctious role as Haskell Radcliff. This marks his first appearance with a Goldwyn star.

Mabel Normand, in her latest Goldwyn picture, "When Doctors Disagree," unconsciously reveals the sources which aided her in building up her comedy personality.

In one scene, cold creaming her face to become beautiful over night, every facial expression is borrowed from the saw-dust ring, recalling the gestures of Marcelina and "Slivers" Oakley. At other spots she is reminiscent of the Keystone days, expressing confusion, trepidation and the like a la Chaplin.

Gaumont Shows Big Airship

R-34, Which May Cross Ocean, Depicted in Current Graphic; News Pictorials

THE giant R-34, the British last word in dirigibles, which is expected to cross the Atlantic within a few days, is shown in close-up detail in the current issue of the Gaumont Graphic, together with the preparations which are being made for the welcome and safe handling of this monster mechanical bird over here.

This number of the Graphic also shows the honoring of Flag Day throughout the United States; the meeting of two "ex-champs," Jim Corbett and Jim Jeffries, on the latter's ranch; the homage paid to American soldiers buried in France; and many other pictorial news-topics of the day.

The current issue of the Gaumont News shows the rally of the "wets" at the National Capitol, where Labor and Anti-Prohibitionists hold a great demonstration in favor of the repeal of the war-time act prohibiting the manufacture and sale of alcohol liquors.

The many other news items pictured in this number of the News include the American entries in the Henley race, in England; the annaul convention of the Mystic Shriners at Indianapolis; the international sweepstakes at Sheepshead Bay, where Ralph de Palma wins $30,000 prize by driving his car fifty miles in 26 minutes and 23 seconds; the conversion of fifteen million hand grenades into savings banks; "Charlie" and "Doug" being elected honorary Boy Scouts; annual water sports in the Northwest; society at the races, and other news topics.

Several Signing for Capitals

Demand Reported for Short Features Starring Neal Hart and Al Jennings

SINCE the announcement was made several weeks ago that Capital Film Co. had signed Neal Hart, and Al Jennings, each to make a series of twenty-four short features, the various Capital exchanges have been having all they could do to care for those who wish contracts for the pictures.

S. L. Barnhard, general manager of the Capital Film Co., reported that his substantial approval from the exhibitors is exceeding even the fondest expectations to every one in the organization.

"It seems," says Mr. Barnhard, "that the exhibitors have really known Neal Hart to be the Miracle Man of the Movies before we gave him this appellation because of his propensities for doing death defying feats. Neal seems to have long ago won for himself a screen home in the hearts of all motion picture fans."

"And," continued Mr. Barnhard, "has ever a man had a more adventuresome career than Al Jennings, who at one time was known as the most notorious and dangerous outlaw of the United States? This same "Al" is now producing Capital Short Features, based on realism that reads like romance. There will be no pictures on the screen that will come within the scope of comparison with this new type of pictures depicting the deviltry and daring of the actual episoned of Jennings' remarkable life. We guarantee these productions will cause a sensation in film circles."

"In addition to the Hart and Jennings' series, the Capital Film Co. is also offering the exhibitor a high class series of Burly comedies in a single reel form, featurng the top-notch vaudevillians."

Paramount Pictures to Entertain Statesman

When Dr. Pessoa, the president-elect of Brazil, who arrived in New York Thursday from France, concludes his visit to the United States and sets sail for Brazil he will travel aboard an American warship, the Idaho, one of the first line dreadnoughts according to information received by the Foreign Department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. American hospitality will not end there, however, as provisions have been made for the entertainment of the distinguished Brazilian and his official party with American films, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation having offered the use of a number of Paramount and Artcraft pictures for that purpose. This offer was accepted by Captain Vogelsang on behalf of the United States Government.

Old Favorites Seen in New Sennett Comedy

The famed Sennett "bathing beauties," together with Phyllis Haver, Louise Fazenda, Ford Sterling, Billy Armstrong and other favorites will be seen in "Hearts and Flowers," the new Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy released June 22. A football game on the beach gives opportunity for the water sprites to take part.

Sterling is cast in a role from which he well knows how to extract the fun —that of a fortune hunter.

Bushman Enters Denial

Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, who is Mrs. Bushman, have written a denial to the statement appearing in the trade papers, and attributed to the Metro Film Corporation, to the effect that "God's Outlaw" was the last picture made by Bushman and Bayne on their Metro Contract. The players claim this was a picture made two years ago, and never released by Metro.

Big Moments in "The Spite Bride"

WHEN Olive Thomas' forthcoming Selznick Picture, "The Spite Bride" is released, exhibitors and picture fans will, it is promised, see one of the most spectacular night-time water scenes ever filmed for any picture. This production was made just before Miss Thomas left California for New York. Other big scenes which this picture contains were made in the dining room of the Hotel Alexandria, San Francisco, in Grauman's new million dollar theatre, and in the Majestic Theatre.

The water scene which was filmed in San Francisco Bay between midnight and two o'clock in the morning, is declared by those who have seen the production to be the most sensational and realistic shot ever seen on the screen. In the story Miss Thomas is Tessa Doyle, who does a sister act on the vaudeville stage with Trixie Dennis. Through a turn of luck the girls have been engaged by Billy Swayne, played by Robert Ellis, to assist him in turning the tables on his erstwhile fiancee. Tessa is hired to marry Billy, with the promise that she shall be amply rewarded as soon as the ceremony is over. The price isn't big enough to please Tessa's chum, however, so she urges Tessa to hold out for more money. This Billy refuses, so he and his friend, Rodney Dolson, kidnap the girls and carry them off in Billy's yacht. That night, when the yacht is far at sea, it catches fire, and Billy and Rod and the two girls are forced to abandon ship in a small life boat.

This is the scene that was made in San Francisco Bay. The burning yacht is shown by a bit of trick photography, but in order to get realism in the life-boat scene, Director Charles Giblyn arranged to have Miss Thomas, Robert Ellis, Claire DuBrey and Jack Mulhall drift in an open boat in San Francisco Bay at night. The cameras and a battery of searchlights were stationed on a harbor tug boat.

On the night that the scene was made a heavy sea was running and the inky blackness of the water, from the absence of the stars and moon, made the attempt one of extreme danger to the occupants of the small boat. Owing to the heavy traffic in the Bay during the evening it was necessary to wait until after midnight before making the scenes, but at last the Bay was cleared and the little boat was set drift with its precious cargo. For two hours it pitched and tossed about on the choppy sea, and when finally Miss Thomas and her associates were lifted back aboard the tug Miss Thomas declared that she had been close to a real shipwreck as she ever hopes to be. This scene was made early last Spring and the temperature was down to freezing.

Another important scene was made on the stage of the Majestic Theatre after one of the regular performances. A group of lions that were being used in one of the acts was loaned to Director Giblyn for use in this scene. Grauman's million dollar theatre is also shown in the picture, and a wedding breakfast scene shows the interior of the Alexandria Hotel.

Publicity Man to Aid Lasky Exchanges

Al Price who has been in charge of advertising and publicity and the editing of Grauman's magazine since Grauman theatre was opened February 1st, 1918, has been selected by John Flynn as special publicity and presentation co-operation expert to work with the sales force of Los Angeles Famous Players-Lasky exchange through the Southern California and Arizona territory.

This is following out the general scheme of Famous Players-Lasky to add to the staff of each of their exchanges a man thoroughly conversant with matters pertaining to publicity and advertising who can aid the theatre men to properly advertise and present the subjects. Mr. Price's appointment to this business came as a result of recommendation made by Sid Grauman.

Many Big Contracts on "Sahara"

Leading House Chains Book the Hodkinson Special

W. W. HODKINSON Corporation continues to announce the closing of contracts with big first run houses and circuits of the United States for J. Parker Read, Jr.'s special production, "Sahara," starring Louise C. Gardner Sullivan and personally supervised by Allan Dawn.

Contracts for immediate first run showings have been closed during the past few days with Ruben and Finkelstein both for Minneapolis and St. Paul as well as for subsequent showings in the entire chain of theatres operated by this company in the Twin Cities.

In Los Angeles "Sahara" will be presented at Miller's big California theatre, contracts having been closed with Harry Leonhardt the managing director.

The biggest circuit contract of the week was closed by Charles Henschel, the Philadelphia manager for the Hodkinson organization, with the Mastbaum-Stanley Company for one hundred days in the theatres booked or controlled by the Mastbaum interests in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware.

Jules E. Mastbaum, A. R. Boyd and Frank W. Buhler of the Stanley organization personally made this booking and displaced other pictures previously announced for presentation to give "Sahara" quick playing dates throughout the circuit.

Exhibitor showmen have been making unusual plans for their presentations of "Sahara." Both at the New York Strand, the Los Angeles, California, and in Philadelphia and Minneapolis special tableaux prologues have been originated to build the essential atmosphere for this big production.

During the past week trade showings on "Sahara" were held by Hodkinson managers in Milwaukee, and Albany, these following similar trade presentations that have been held within a fortnight in twenty exchange cities and with other showings still to be held in the eight remaining offices of the chain of thirty across the country. In Albany the showing was held at the Clinton Square Theatre and that in Milwaukee at the Toy Theatre, with a special musical score arranged by Arnold Krueger.

J. Parker Read, Jr., and W. O. Edmunds, the San Francisco manager for the Hodkinson Corporation, have arranged a novel publicity link-up for the first run presentation of "Sahara" in San Francisco and Oakland. Louise Glaum is to make an aeroplane flight from Los Angeles arriving in San Francisco for the first matinee presentation of "Sahara" and, of course, remaining in San Francisco for the initial evening performance. On this trip she will take a message of greeting from the Mayor of Los Angeles to the Mayor of San Francisco.

Osso to Visit Europe

The youthful Vice-President and General Manager of the Albert Capellani Productions, Inc., Adolphe Osso, will sail shortly for Europe to actively take charge of his offices in Paris and London, which were established during his last visit abroad.

In the future, Mr. Osso will distribute his time, so that he will spend several months in Paris and London each year.

Strong Impersonation

In Pauline Frederick's latest Goldwyn picture, "The Fear Woman," she is seen in a role similar to those in which she won many of her stage successes.

In this production Miss Frederick portrays the character of a woman whose nearest prototype might be found in her stage impersonations of Delilah in "Samson."

Select Officials Meet in West

Attend Convention in St. Louis and Make a Number of Business Journeys

SAM E. MORRIS, General Manager of Select Pictures Corporation, Charles R. Rogers, Director of Sales, and V. P. Whitaker, Select's new Eastern Representative, who was formerly Branch Manager of the Washington Exchange, were among the motion picture officials from New York who attended the convention of the M. P. E. of America in St. Louis this week.

Immediately after the close of the convention, Mr. Morris will leave St. Louis for Minneapolis where he will confer with H. A. Rathner, Branch Manager of Select's Exchange in that city, on Select's policy for the coming season. Director of Sales Rogers will also set forth on another business trip. Mr. Rogers will go from St. Louis to Indianapolis where he will look over the ground for the establishment of a Select Exchange in that city. As soon as he finds a suitable location he will return to New York, after which he will announce the name of the branch manager, who will take charge of the proposed office.

Several other business trips will be made by the Select officials before they return to the home office in New York. General Manager Morris will go to Cincinnati as soon as he completes his work in Minneapolis, and from the Cincinnati Exchange he will jump to the Cleveland office. Mr. Rogers and Mr. Whitaker will both make stops at Select exchanges before they return.

(14) It would reduce the number of trade journals to NOT MORE than two. THERE ISN'T ROOM OR REASON FOR MORE. I can see the necessity for one which would be representative of exhibitors, individually and as a class, and for one which would, by the equity of its policy and the constructiveness of its program, stand for all branches of the industry, not excluding the writers and directors.

(15) It would eliminate exhibitors' rings run for the benefit of central powers, and discourage the present tendency of a monopoly run by a minority to the detriment of rational industrial progress.

(16) It would destroy star-system evils by making each production stand upon its own merits. Stars are of value only when they ATTRACT AND PLEASE. When they ATTRACT AND DISAPPOINT they are a MENACE. Both stars and producers would learn, through the medium of their pocketbooks, that neither sugar-coated publicity nor big names—AUTHOR, STAR or DIRECTOR—are satisfying substitutes for a GOOD PRODUCTION.

(17) It would leave producers (those who proved competent) to do the producing and enable exhibitors to devote their UNDIVIDED ATTENTION to the selection and PROPER PRESENTATION of good pictures. The time now spent in divided interests could be more profitably spent in mastering the art of good showmanship—a duty which each exhibitor owes to himself and one which, in too many cases, has been sadly neglected.

(18) It would do more than any other factor to insure the permanency of the lead which American pictures now enjoy over those of any other country. To preserve this WE MUST DESERVE IT.

(19) It would not only insure BETTER PICTURES for the exhibitor, it would insure MORE NET PROFIT for the producer and distributor—and it would do this WITHOUT RAISING RENTALS. As a matter of fact, it SHOULD REDUCE RENTALS, or the saving in exchange and useless publicity expense could be profitably DEVOTED TO SPEEDING UP QUALITY OF PRODUCTIONS. In either event the industry as a whole would profit. Under the present wasteful system this great potential saving IS A DEAD LOSS.

(20) It would minimize factional friction and encourage industrial coordination and cooperation. At present there are too many cogs in the industrial machinery working at variance with each other—the interest of one should be the interest of all.

(21) It would materially assist in eliminating censorship problems which, by the force of circumstances, now gravitates to the political hirelings of a thousand communities.

A Governing Board could be elected from among distributors' representatives to manage and conduct the clearing house of each district. Exhibitors could also be given representation. Committees could also be formed whose duty it would be to watch destructive legislation. THE SCREEN HAS AMPLE OPPORTUNITIES AND RESOURCES FOR THE CORRECTION OF DESTRUCTIVE OPPOSING FORCES, IF THE INDUSTRY WILL GET DOWN TO BUSINESS AND ORGANIZE ITS POWER. Under the present system efficient organization is impossible. The two branches of the industry that should be working together are frankly antagonistic. The central clearing house plan would bring all factions together and make for a better understanding.

An intelligent, unbiased survey of the proposed plan will readily suggest an additional number of ways in which the single-exchange idea would prove advantageous to all branches of the industry. AN EXCHANGE SHOULD BE ALL ITS NAME IMPLIES—A GENERAL MARKET PLACE—INSTEAD OF A PRIVATELY OWNED INSTITUTION.

S-L Sells Its Feature In South

"Virtuous Men" Acquired by Edmund K. Fox in South; Many Other Deals

ARRANGEMENTS were consummated in the past week between S-L Pictures and Edmund K. Fox, of Washington, D. C., whereby the latter has acquired "Virtuous Men" for the states of Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia, Virginia and North Carolina. Fox, one of the most prominent amusement men of the South, will exploit "Virtuous Men" with a "direct to the public" campaign on which he plans to spend several thousand dollars.

Mr. Fox has made arrangements for complete distribution of "Virtuous Men" for the states mentioned with the Empire Film Distributing Company of Washington, D. C. This organization is headed by E. H. Doffey, identified in past years with many of the largest film distributing companies of the industry. Coffey's company is also handling the "Law of Nature," another state rights feature which Fox recently acquired.

In order to handle "Virtuous Men" and the "Law of Nature" on a scale justified by the size of these pictures, an exchange has been established in a suite of offices in the Mather Building. Mr. Fox plans to work in close connection with the distribution of the S-L production with the Empire organization, and a special corps of salesmen has already been engaged to cover the principal cities of the South. The owner of "Virtuous Men" will present this picture as a special theatrical attraction in one of the big theaters of Washington in the near future, giving it an extended run prior to its release to the exhibitors in his territory.

In addition to the sale of Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia, Virginia and North Carolina, "Virtuous Men" has already been disposed of for the states of Ohio, West Virginia, Western Pennsylvania, Kentucky, Indiana, Michigan, Illinois, New Jersey, California, Arizona, Nevada and Canada.

Vitagraph's Serial Is Drawing

"Perils of Thunder Mountain" Said by Exhibitors to be Very Popular

"PERILS of Thunder Mountain," Vitagraph's new serial, is claimed to be justifying the conviction of the producers that it would be one of the most popular serials since this particular form of motion pictures came into vogue. The idea of having so many of the scenes laid in the snow covered section of the country so that their release would come during the heated spell has proven a happy inspiration.

The new serial is said to have proven unusually thrilling. Exhibitors in nearly every state in the Union have written, and in some cases telegraphed, that "The Perils of Thunder Mountain" had turned out even a greater attraction than they had anticipated, and extend their congratulations. For instance, Byde, Ford and Rogers, who conduct a chain of theatres in Amarillo, Plainview and Canyon, Texas, telegraphed that they had shown the first two episodes of the new serial and that it would exceed in popularity and drawing power "The Man of Might" which had just completed its run to the biggest business in the history of the theatres.

"Thanks for giving us this type of service for summer use," they telegraphed. "The snow stuff is great. It makes an ideal summer attraction.

In another southern city, New Orleans, the success of "Perils of Thunder Mountain" has been so pronounced that Periz and Yocham, managers of the Fern theatre, telegraphed as follows:

"'Perils of Thunder Mountain' is the greatest serial we have ever run. Standing them up on every episode."

Farnum on Better Photoplays

Dustin Not Only Acts But Thinks of Picture Problems; Tells Opinions

THAT Dustin Farnum does not merely regard the motion picture industry from the exclusively personal angle of a star, but devotes close thought to movie problems, is evident from a recent interview obtained from Mr. Farnum by United Picture Theatres special Coast representative.

"When after much thought, hesitation, and deliberation I was first induced to forego the speaking stage for the screen," Mr. Farnum is reported to say, "it was not without a large degree of misgiving. My colleagues of the stage in many cases predicted my swift return. The movies were only a passing fad, said they. I have since met many of these doubters hard at work in Los Angeles studios, or enjoying the between picture recreation which is a pleasant feature of movie life on the Coast. But the pictures came to stay, have stayed, and will continue to stay, provided that the standard of growth of excellence which the motion picture public surely demands, is maintained. It is a trite thing to say that this means progressively better pictures, better stories and the very best class of portrayers of those stories on the screen.

"Satisfy the intelligent demand, and the growth of the moving picture entertainment will, I believe, not only continue but continue even more rapidly than in the past. Like every other industry that of the motion picture cannot halt. Either it must go forward or it must fall away."

Enormous Set Built for Destruction in Serial

One of the largest interiors used in a serial was filmed last week at the studio of George B. Seitz Production, Inc., for the fiftieth and last episode of the forthcoming Pathe serial, "In Secret," by Robert W. Chambers, starring Pearl White.

The set was a huge tunnel built in five sections, each section of which was so arranged that it could be "shot" twice from different angles. Director George B. Seitz and an enlarged studio force worked five days on its construction.

In its completed form, the tunnel was large enough to permit an automobile, a motor truck, four mounted men and 250 foot soldiers in column of fours to pass through abreast. The action called for the destruction of the tunnel by mine explosion while the men were passing through, and each of the five sections was "destroyed" twice.

Plan Wide Campaign on "Everybody's Business"

An exploitation campaign somewhat out of the ordinary is being prepared by W. H. Productions for "Everybody's Business," the six-reel play, which will shortly be released on the independent market.

It is stated that this photoplay will have an appeal for every man, woman or child. It weaves a story that involves the most vital problems facing the world to-day. These problems must be solved, and this photoplay is believed by the producers destined to become one of the most important factors in their solution.

Aside from this phase, "Everybody's Business" is claimed to be filled with dramatic and sensational punches that will satisfy the most critical of film fans. There is a lot of heart interest in it, is consistent in its story, and the cast is made up of realistic types.

Briggs' Boy Star Hurt

As a result of what at first appeared to be a minor cut on the hand, Stephen Ca rr,who plays the role of Buck in the Paramount-Briggs Comedies, has been seriously ill for the last few days at his home, and specialists for a while feared that tetanus would develop. Two operations were performed to remove the infection.

"Let Film Tell the Story"—Liebler

Takes Part in Prevalent Discussion on Continuity

OFFICIALS of the United Picture Theaters have added their word to the discussion at present active on the question of preservation of continuity, and particularly of the proper length of title at once suitable to the practice of first run, and of subsequent runs.

"United is already pledged to 'natural length' features," said T. A. Liebler, Jr., in an interview, "that is to say, the footage of its releases is dictated by the requirements of the subject, and not by any fancied necessity to approximate a certain number of even thousand feet. There will be neither padding in United features, nor cuts interfering with the flow of action such as are often made with the design to prevent the feature from running over on to another reel.

"Of almost equal importance to the elimination of padding and the preservation of continuity, in the United opinion, is the maintenance of a proper speed in projection. The practice of the double-feature-day houses and those desiring a quick turnover on week-end or holiday nights in running off reels at a twelve minute speed, necessitates the manufacture of pictures that will not suffer when projected at this speed. This is the speed, too, at which the picture is, as a rule, originally shown in the projection room to the reviewer, and to the officials of the company passing on its merits. And in nine cases out of ten the picture gains through the advanced speed of projection.

"The standard rate of projection was fixed in an effort to screen action at about the same tempo in which it was originally enacted. In this way, it was figured, a natural, lifelike representation of that action could be obtained. But it is only in speed that there is not an inevitable exaggeration or "dramatization" of everything that is photographed for dramatic effect. Emotions are dramatized so that they may register more effectively; costumes of a period other than today are dramatized by compromise with the prevailing mode, so that they may not seem uncouth or even comic to eyes accustomed to regard the up-to-the-minute creations of the fashionable modistes as the last word in beauty.

And in the same way, the good director distorts all things in nature so that he may throw his high lights where they belong, so that the attention of the spectators may be fixed on such points as will maintain his interest in the story at concert pitch. For the same reason there should be an exaggeration of speed or pace, an exaggeration that can be more effectively engineered from the projection booth than in the studio, especially since the varying rates of projection make it necessary for the director to preserve a tempo that will not become ridiculously fast when a print is raced.

"It is seldom that a picture is shown to those most interested in its success in any but the advanced rate of speed, and it seems extremely unflattering to the clientele of first class houses, in which the patrons may be credited with the ability to read sub-titles within the normal time, that it should be presumed that they require a longer time to grasp the dramatic significance of scenes than do the film critics and officials.

Mr. Atkinson included James A. Herne's celebrated stage vehicle, "Shore Acres," which Mr. Herne starred in for over thirty years; "The Willow Tree," Cohan and Harris's Japanese story, in which Fay Bainter made such a hit; Major Rupert Hughes' novel, "The Temple of Dawn"; Charles A. Taylor's old melodrama, "Yosemite," which was recently revived by Frank Keenan, on Broadway; George Peyton Gibb's novel, "The Yellow Dove"; Sir Gilbert Parker's best known novel, "The Right of Way"; another Frederic and Fanny Hatton play, produced by Mr. Morosco, "The Walk-Offs," and a list of other stage attractions.

Harry J. Cohen, recently appointed manager of Metro's Foreign Department, addressed the convention on the company's newly perfected plans for exploiting the big super-features, and assured the exchange managers that they would be given every possible advertising and publicity aid to help the exhibitor to obtain long runs for the pictures. Mr. Charles K. Stern, Mr. Robert J. Rubin, Mr. E. M. Saunders, and other officials talked on other phases of the new policy.

Civil War veterans from the Soldiers' Home near Santa Monica, Cal., will figure on the screen in the course of a Tom Mix production for Fox.

Blanche Sweet Begins on Hampton Contract

Immediately following the signing of a contract with Jesse D. Hampton, Blanche Sweet began production of her first picture under the agreement. This is "A Woman of Pleasure," a play by James Willard of the melodramatic type, which has had a long run at the Adelphi Theatre in London. Pathe will release the picture.

Wallace Worsley is directing. In the supporting cast are Wheeler Makman, Wilfred Lucas, and Baby Wesley Barry.

It is understood Pathe is to institute a wide advertising campaign on the features which Miss Sweet will make.

Harding's New Theatre

Samuel Harding, who a year ago took over the Nichlos House in Council Bluffs, changing the name to Liberty theatre, has now taken over the Strand theatre in the same city, which has a seating capacity of twelve hundred. The house will close for alterations.

Contest Arouses Pathe Men

Salesmen Anxious to Win in Sales Contest; June Is Pathe Honor Month

PATHE salesmen in every portion of the United States are working with might and main to win out in the great Sales Contest instituted by Director of Exchanges Fred C. Quimby. June has been named Pathe Honor Month in honor of the recent visit to America of Charles Pathe, head of the house of Pathe, and a slogan adopted as follows: "A Pathe Picture On Every Screen." The five salesmen who bring in the greatest number of contracts during Pathe Honor Month will be awarded as a prize for their efforts a trip to Broadway and a personally conducted excursion into the delights of this famous thoroughfare.

This is probably the best award that could have been offered and is inducing the salesmen to redouble their efforts. The men who carry the gospel of Pathe into the highways and byways of the most remote sections of these United States would much prefer a trip to Broadway to any cash remuneration or any other prize that could be offered.

Sales contests are an important part of the Pathe selling plan and Director of Exchanges Quimby declares that they are in every instance very successful. During March the month marking the first anniversary of Paul Brunet's occupance of the chair of Vice President and General Manager, a contest was held known as Brunet Anniversary Month Contest and cash prizes amounting to $700 were awarded to the winning salesmen. This contest was so successful that every record in the history of Pathe was shattered in March.

Farrar Production to Surprise

Enormity of Production Shown by the Replica of Petrograd Built as a Set

THE well concealed title of the new Geraldine Farrar picture being made by Goldwyn, no hint of which subject has as yet been had, will be announced next week. In advance it is stated the production will be one of the most costly yet made, and will provide unusual opportunities for exploitation.

The first inkling that is given as to the nature of the new Farrar picture is in a communication from Culver City, which says that one of the main settings of the production will be a street scene in Petrograd, and this street is being built at the Goldwyn studios. It is perhaps the most ambitious and extravagent setting yet designed by Hugo Ballin, Goldwyn art director. The approximate cost of making the buildings for the scene is something over $35,000.

Not only from a standpoint of luxury in "properties" are exhibitors promised a super-production in the new Farrar picture. For indeed this photoplay will be the result of co-operation among the minds of the Goldwyn organization. Also it will have an unusual interest because of the first joint appearance of Geraldine Farrar and Lou-Tellegen. Frank Lloyd, the man who has been accustomed to making such screen plays as "Les Miserables" and "The Tale of Two Cities" directed the film.

New Century Policy in the Fall Announced

The next animal Century comedy to be released through the Universal Exchanges, will be entitled: "The Lion Special," and will feature lions, bears and monkeys. The story is centered around a railroad station.

A new policy is announced for the Fall season by Messrs. Julius and Abe Stern. They will not produce any more L-Ko Comedies. At the studio owned by Messrs. Stern, quite a bit of commotion is to be seen. They are producing high class two-reel slapstick comedies, animal comedies with lions, bears, monkeys and snakes, and last but not least a serial is being produced. The high class two-reel slapstick comedies will be released under the brand name of Rainbow, and the animal comedies will come under the Century banner. Director Fred Fishback is now making two-reel feature comedies with Edith Roberts and Jimmy Adams in the leading roles.

Nazimova Very Popular with East Indians

East Indian motion picture audiences are showing by box-office attendance records that Nazimova is one of the most popular stars of the silent drama in that quarter of the globe. All through India, Ceylon and Burmah, in the territory controlled by the firm of Bijou Limited, which distributes Metro productions in the Far East, the demand for Nazimova's super-features is increasing with each successive production, according to C. N. Douetil, who is managing director of Bijou Limited, having main offices in Calcutta, and who recently passed through Hollywood, Cal.

Realart Names Denver Exchange Manager

In pursuance of its plan to have exchanges operating in twenty cities by the middle of July, Realart Pictures Corporation has appointed Mr. Bert R. Latz, manager of its Denver Exchange. For the past few days Mr. Latz has been in consultation with Mr. Arthur S. Kane, president of the corporation, and he left New York Tuesday to assume his new duties in the West.

On his way to Denver he spent Thursday in St. Louis with Mr. J. S. Woody, general sales manager, going over points in the projected sales campaign. Mr. Latz has many friends among exhibitors in Denver territory, who will welcome his return there.

Only One Willard Film Is Now Showing

"The Challenge of Chance," the seven-reel special featuring Jess Willard, which opened for a run at the Park theatre, New York, this week, is the only Willard film which will be shown before the big July 4th battle, according to a statement from the offices of Frank G. Hall, president of the Film Clearing House and Independent Sales Corporation. This is due to the fact that no pictures, for news reels or any other purpose, have been made of the champion in his training.

Applaud "The Westerners"

Hampton's Great Authors Picture Is Liked by Western Critics on Premiere

THE premiere pre-release presentation of a motion picture in Los Angeles means that it has to run the gauntlet of criticism of a group of picture critics who, by virtue of their contracts with the industry at close range, are well fed up on pictures.

For that reason when the critics praised the first presentation of Benjamin B. Hampton's first Great Authors Pictures, Inc., "The Westerners" held at the Kinema theatre, Los Angeles, the producing officials feel they have an exceptional picture in hand. Among the reviews given are:

Los Angeles Examiner: A Western photoplay that fairly smacks of the West from start to finish, but in a "different way," a drama so chock full of whirlwind action that it would seem impossible to wedge in one more gunplay or fist fight; with splendid plot and subtle, virile, fascinating and an all-star cast at its best.

Los Angeles Herald: "The Westerners" throbs with thrills. For sustained interest and action, it is a couple of laps ahead of anything our screen has shown in many months. "The Westerners" stands alone as a tale that grips at the roots of human emotions.

Los Angeles Times: "The Westerners" is a clear-cut transcription of the written word into the visualized episode, and its story flows with impelling smoothness and sweep to the series of exciting scenes of action which make the climax.

Demand for "Land of Free"

Interest in Biographical Film of Gen. Pershing Reported as Growing

THE effect of the news items dealing with General Pershing's early return from France, and the political possibilities that may later be his, is said to be having their effect in the increased number of inquiries which are coming into the Exhibitors Service Bureau of Fox regarding "The Land of the Free." This is the picture-biography of the A. E. F. commander.

"This interest will become increasingly stronger," says the statement, "as preparations become more active for welcoming ovations, parades and other demonstrations while the war hero passes on his way from state to state.

"In anticipation of a demand for "The Land of the Free" which even will exceed the interest in the picture at the time of its release, lithographs, banners and other strong publicity aids are being issued for its promotion by exhibitors. The purpose of the Fox organization, it is explained, "is to help the exhibitor link up the Pershing enthusiasm with his own theatre.

"The Land of the Free" is being exploited also as a typical Fourth of July subject—a non-war production dealing with the life of a great patriot. This picture, it is pointed out, was made only after a long period of investigation of the career of General Pershing and contains many facts regarding his early life which had not previously been revealed. The production was made under the direction of Richard Stanton and is said to have strong dramatic interest.

New Christie Feature

"Mary Moves In" is the latest of the Christie feature pictures to be released. This Christie Special features Fay Tincher, with Harry Ham, Eddie Barry, Patricia Palmer and Katherine Lewis. It was directed personally by Al E. Christie from the story by W. Scott Darling.

Three New Depots Open for "Big Four" Films

In addition to its first Canadian Distributing Depot, which United Artist Corporation announces this week that it will open in Toronto, Hiram Abrams stated that the "Big Four" would also open offices in Cleveland, Ohio, and in Atlanta, Georgia.

So heavy has been the business already written on the company's first release, the Douglas Fairbanks picture which will be put out on September first, that it is certain that the original number of Distributing Depots planned will prove inadequate. In order to provide for the handling of the enormous volume of business already assured, and to make for the greater convenience of the exhibitors of the country, United Artists Corporation will establish as a beginning, a minimum of seventeen offices.

These Distributing Depots will be located in New York City, Philadelphia, Washington, D. C., Boston, Pittsburgh, Detroit, Chicago, Minneapolis, Kansas City, Atlanta, Cleveland, Denver, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle, Dallas and Toronto.

General Bustle in the F. P.-Lasky Colony

With the return to the West Coast of Jesse L. Lasky, many actions which had been held up pending his arrival were settled, and a general bustle of activity noted. Mr. Lasky will remain several months.

In the Famous Players-Lasky version of "Everywoman" it is announced Violet Heming will have the title role, and will arrive at the coast film colony in July.

The Lasky companies are all busy. Wallace Reid has finished the opening scenes of "The Lottery Man," and Bryant Washburn is about to begin on "Why Smith Left Home;" while Houdini is still doing fantastic stunts in "The Grim Game."

"The Four-Flusher" Is Begun by Metro

Hale Hamilton has started work at the new Metro studios in Hollywood on "The Four-Flusher," an original comedy drama by Izola Forrester and Mann Pagg, which was adapted for the screen by A. S. Le Vino. "The Four-Flusher" follows "In His Brother's Place," recently completed by Hamilton, who is again directed by Harry L. Franklin, the entire production being under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger, Director General.

Big Risks Taken to Get Strong Flying Scenes

A daring feat of photography was performed by Harry Plimpton, cameraman for Richard Stanton, who is staging "Checkers," the big racing picture for William Fox. Plimpton, in a seaplane, filmed three members of the "Checkers" company who were in another hydroaeroplane over Jamaica Bay, L. I. The scene furnishes one of the thrills in "Checkers." The players in the other plane were Jean Acker, Thomas J. Carrigan and Tammany Young.

Temperament in Picture Writing

Frank Leonard Finds It in Clara Beranger's Case

TEMPERAMENT is not wholly confirmed to motion picture stars, the germ sometimes taking hold of singers, dancers, musicians and various human beings whose duty it is to amuse the public.

It occasionally takes hold of scenario writers as we saw when we met Miss Clara Beranger in her beautiful home on Riverside Drive.

As we approached her home we wondered what she looked like and how we would be received. However, faint heart never won fair lady, to an interview, so we braced up, gave ourselves the once over and bravely entered.

"Miss Beranger," we said to the stalwart attendant in uniform. "Does she expect you," he said with the air of one who knows how valuable the time is of one whose every minute means something to an industry second to none in this world.

Presently a young lady appeared and on being told whom we were she said, "Won't you come into the reception room, Miss Beranger will be in shortly."

During our wait we took occasion to glance around the rooms, and wonder of wonders, what we beheld; beautiful works of art, bric-a-brac and knick nacs from various parts of the world, all arranged in a most artistic manner, showing at once in which direction the tastes of the "lady of the house" ran.

Naturally from this our opinions began to form. How would she look, how would she dress, how would she act. Was she tall, short or stout. Would we be pleased with her manner or disappointed.

As we were glancing around still interested, someone approached with a firm step and said in a clear voice, "I am Miss Beranger, sorry to have kept you waiting."

Were we disappointed? We were not. I think we were rather dazzled or charmed or hypnotized, for she is tall, beautiful, well developed, with large expressive eyes and has the appearance of one who keeps herself in perfect health.

She wore a beautiful dark blue dress. We don't know what the name of the material in it was but from out of the dim past when we used to take our girl to the theatre and hear her talk "clothes," we seem to recall the word "Chiffon" or "Georgette." Could it have been either? Well, whatever it was it showed good taste.

And her temperament. Yes, it is there. She is "chuck full of it," it sticks out all over her every time she moves or speaks. She is known as the "writer with the temperament of a star." Well, we believe it and we're glad she has it, for we have noticed many times that people possessing these qualifications or whatever they may be, generally succeed in what they undertake."

"I am a thorough believer in keeping up to date in mental thoughts and body development, said Miss Beranger. Therefore in order to keep in good condition for my mental work, I take plenty of exercise, such as riding, walking and playing tennis, which is necessary in order to give me the action required for the brain work I do. Body and mind must work in unison and a healthy body means a healthy mind. I have always avoided getting 'just movie.' Madam De Stael says about travel that people take away what they bring and it is true not only of travel. In any creative work you give out what you put in. My theory is, you have got to keep developing. If you don't you have nothing to give."

"Tell me about your contract with the Famous Players," said the interviewer.

"I have signed a contract with that organization for two years," said Miss Beranger, "to do continuity for them exclusively. I have always dodged the contract business before, because I thought it too binding work. This contract calls for one continuity a month. When I freelanced, I worked three times as hard.

"I always felt this was the one firm I cared to work for because they take the trouble to make pictures artistically, buy the best stories, do not spare expenses in any branch of production and are constantly on the move.

"Since the first of January I have sold five original stories written in collaboration with Forrest Halsey. Two of them were sold for Farrar, two to the World Film and one to Fox Film.

"I have also completed since the first of January the continuity to 'Come Out of the Kitchen,' 'The Firing Line,' 'Girls,' 'Sadie Love,' and 'Enter Darcy.'

'What method do you employ in writing your scenarios?" asked the interviewer.

"I prefer to work at home," said Miss Beranger, "because the quiet atmosphere, away from typewriters and telephones, is more conducive to good work.

"In regard to continuity writing, some people think it is simply blocking off scenes, but the real secret of success is not only the ability to create original material but the ability to eliminate what would be deadly on the screen; and finally and most important is the power to create new situations, which is as necessary as the writing of plays or stories.

On his way back to the office the interviewer came to the conclusion that to work hard and to play hard and to have a temperament; yes, you must have a temperament, is the only way to be successful nowadays. Of course, all this must be augmented with a talent with which Miss Beranger is blessed.—Frank Leonard.

Allan Dwan Working on Independent Subject

After giving to the screen many big pictures in the East, Allan Dwan has set aside all his former precedents and is now at the head of his own independent producing organization, which will offer screen adaptations of the foremost literary and stage successes, presented in a manner that is bound to win approval.

His first production under the new arrangement will be a picturization of Richard Harding Davis' "Soldiers of Fortune" which he is now filming at the Brunton Studios.

"I am going to make this the greatest picture I have ever produced," said Mr. Dwan. "In branching out for myself, and putting out my own feature productions, I am doing so solely because I believe I can make much better pictures. I am using such well known players as Pauline Stark, Anna Q. Nilsson, Norman Kerry, Ward Crane, Frank Wally, Wallace Beery, Wilfred Lucas, Herald Lindsay, Fred Kohler, Philo McCullough and Melbourne MacDowell."

Fischer Features are Incorporated

B. A. ROLFE, A. H. Fischer and Charles A. Logue have incorporated a producing firm under the title of A. H. Fischer Features, Inc.

The new firm is to produec a series of big special features, following up one which has just been made by Messrs. Fischer and Rolfe and which will soon be ready for the market. No announcement has yet been made as to the nature of this subject, the sponsors having preferred to work quietly during the production period. It is expected, however, that an announcement will be given out shortly.

In the making of its product the new company will follow a well defined policy of showmanship outlined by Mr. Rolfe. Only subjects that offer the widest possible appeal through the box-office will be picturized.

In this connection, contracts have been signed whereby the new corporation secures a number of stories written by one who it is said is generally conceded to be the most popular novelist of the day. Charles A. Logue will make the screen adaptations from the originals.

B. A. Rolfe, associated with A. H. Fischer in the newly formed A. H. Fischer Feautres, Inc.

By outright purchase from Crawford Livingston and his associated, studio and plant at New Rochelle, Mr. Fischer acquired the Thanhouser N. Y. The amount involved in the deal was not made known.

The acquisition of the Thanhouser property marks another step in the materialization of plans laid to cover the future activities of Mr. Fischer and Mr. Rolfe as the sponsors of the new corporation. According to these plans, they will produce at the Thanhouser studio a series of special features. These specials will be produced on a big scale, with the element of showmanship a prominent factor to give each picture the widest possible box-office appeal. A number of stories have already been acquired.

As soon as certain improvements are completed at the studio, production will begin. It is planned to operate two companies, but as the personnel of these is now being arranged, no announcement in this regard can be made at this time.

The offices of A. H. Fischer Features, Inc., are located at 18 East 41st Street, New York.

Tourneur Will Continue Production in West

The Maurice Tourneur productions will again be found among the Paramount-Artcraft releases, and the director will continue to produce in California. He is at present negotiating for a number of stories and books of a varied nature.

When Maurice Tourneur decided not to be hampered by the set desires of a producing concern and started his own organization, it was in support of his contention that the most important thing in picture making is the combination of director and story, plus a competent cast of course. Any doubts as to his success were short lived.

Wish Mrs. Drew Success

That exhibitors throughout the United States have taken a marked interest in Amedee J. Van Beuren's announcement that Mrs. Sidney Drew would continue to make comedies is shown by many letters received by the V. B. K. Film Corporation.

Simplex Notes

Simplex Employees Make Merry

ON June 20, when the heavens opened and the rain descended, it brought not only dampness to the feet of the hardworking members of the Annual Outing Committee of the Simplex Employees, but it brought with it dampened spirits as well. Saturday morning, however, the day of the long-looked-for outing, broke sharp and clear so with brightened spirits, lead by the Dumbheit Band, the employees of the Simplex Factory at 8:30 sharp marched to the Ferry and proceeded to Stotsky's Belvidere Park, North Beach.

Here, the before mentioned hard working committee had arranged for a program of out-door sports in which competed the athletic champions of the numerous departments of the ever growing Simplex factory.

One of the features of the day was a Base Ball Game in which the married men strove manfully to show that the bonds of matrimony had no effect upon the male in the matter of skill and speed. Every effort in this direction was hotly contested by the single men, who, unhampered by the shackles of domesticity, proceeded to clean up those travelling in tandems or double harness. That their onslaughts were repulsed sufficiently to hold the score at eight to eight at the close of this splendid exhibition of married men's earnestness and bachelors' determination was due in a large measure to the pitching of Miller of the Nickle Plating Department, who was opposed on the mound by Hlubosky of the Turret-Lathe Sec-

The shot-put was won by Curtis, the athletic foreman of the Screw Machine Department while the hundred yard dash was won by Nettle, whose job it is to see that every Simplex gear turned out by the various gear hobbers is perfect.

The one mile race was won by Hlubosky, whose efforts to wrest the honors from the married men in the ball game had no effect whatever upon his speed as a runner. This latter fact possibly might be looked upon as one reason why he is not yet married.

The three-legged race provided much merriment and the honors in this event were carried off by Messrs. Curtis and Eggermann. The result of the shoe-string race involved a lengthy discussion, owing to the fact that Jim Soons, head of the Electrical Department was counted out on a technicality, for his failure to fully tie one of his shoes. His nearest competitor was Wassner, also of the Electrical Department, who was given the prize for this very interesting event.

The Messrs. Frappier and Healey, Superintendent and Purchasing Agent of the Simplex plant respectively were honorary guests. Dancing was enjoyed by all until a late hour Saturday.

Late Bulletin

Monday morning opening at the Simplex factory finds numerous vacant spaces in several departments due no doubt to over exertion indulged in by a corresponding number of insufficiently trained but ambitious athletes.

Robertson-Cole In a Canadian Deal

Entire Product and Trio of Exchanges Are Disposed Of

IN a transaction representing approximately a half million dollars, the Exhibitors Distributing Corporation of Toronto, has just purchased for all of Canada the entire Robertson-Cole output of fifty-two pictures for the coming year; the three exchanges owned by the Mutual Film Corporation, Ltd., Canadian subsidiary of the Exhibitors Mutual Distributing Corporation of the United States; and the Dominion interests in all the productions which up to this time have been issued in Canada by Exhibitors Mutual.

The Mutual exchanges which come into possession of the Exhibitors Distributing Corporation are located in St. Johns, Toronto, and Montreal. The purchase of these exchanges extends the activities of the Canadian organization from one end of the Dominion to the other.

Arthur Cohen, son of Judge Cohen, of Toronto, and president of the Exhibitors Distributing Corporation, represented his company in the deal. He was assisted in his arrangements by Harry Kaufman, who was formerly general manager of distribution of J. J. Allen in Canada. Mr. Cohen and Mr. Kaufman were in New York last week to sign the contract.

The Exhibitors Distributing Corporation is one of the most substantial in the Dominion, but heretofore has devoted its efforts to handling only special features. With the purchase of the Robertson-Cole product, Mr. Cohen looks forward to the day when his firm will become the leader of distribution in Canada.

From the Robertson-Cole viewpoint, the Canadian deal represents the most important transaction completed by its foreign department since the arrangements which allied it with Jury's Imperial Pictures, Ltd., of London, foremost distributors of motion pictures in the British Isles.

It also means that Robertson-Cole features will now be seen in the bigger film theatres of every province in Canada.

To Exhibitors Mutual, the deal means that it can concentrate its entire efforts to selling Robertson-Cole pictures in the United States.

"Tangled Threads," starring Bessie Barriscale, will be the first production to come under the control of the Exhibitors Distributing Corporation. Exploitation of the Robertson-Cole features will not be inaugurated by the Canadian firm until September but meanwhile a vigorous advertising campaign will be conducted on the productions.

William J. Clark, president of Exhibitors Mutual, made this statement, regarding his interest in the contract:

"Ever since the Exhibitors Mueual Distributing Corporation took over and rorganized the exchanges formerly operated by the Mutual Film Corporation, we have been negotiating for the sale of the three exchanges which we had taken over in Canada, offices at Montreal, Toronto and St. John.

"The Mutual Film Corporation had previously closed its exchanges in Winnipeg, Calgary, Regina and Vancouver, and for a year no effort had been made to distribute in western Canada.

"The sale of our Canadian exchanges to Exhibitors Distributing Corporation gives us an opportunity to concentrate more than ever on distribution in the United States."

Fox Building Is a Model In Safety

A MAXIMUM of precaution will be taken to make the new William Fox building in course of construction in New York, the safest edifice of its kind in the world for the protection of the 5,000 employees and the $2,500,000 investment. A wide inclined runway from street to each floor; complete fireproof construction; interior fire walls and fire doors; an elaborate sprinkler system, and exits arranged so that no employee will be more than 100 feet away from one, are a few of the major precautions incorporated in the building plans.

According to William Fried, who has charge of the construction of this new office-studio laboratory building, Mr. Fox has been an ultra-radical in the adoption of safety measures as applying to all of his extensive building enterprises. His record as producer, as operator of a chain of forty theatres, and as director of more than 100 branch offices handling enormous quantities of film, has been one of complete avoidance of fire loss. Never has the life of employee or patron been imperilled—a record due, says Mr. Fried, to insistence by Mr. Fox on the adoption of every practical precaution against danger.

The new Fox building, in which all of the eastern activities of the Fox organization are to be brought under one roof, not only will be of the most approved fire-resisting construction, but in other respects will reduce the fire hazard to a minimum. From the standpoint of construction, it is not so much any one or two safety features that make this Fox building notable—it is rather the combination of precautions.

Protection first is against fire, and then against danger and damage that might result in event of fire precautions unexpectedly proving inadequate.

William G. Fried, who with the firm of Wiseman and Carlson designed the new $2,500,000 William Fox building

On the latter score there is the most public interest; and in this connection it is declared by the construction engineer that the Fox plant can be emptied of employees, from roof to basement, in less than sixty seconds. To this end great ramps, or inclined runways, will contribute chiefly. One of these leads from the street to each floor of the building. These stepless stairways, arranged side by side, average about twenty-five feet in width and will accommodate a large outpouring of persons. Being built of steel and concrete and intended to sustain heavy loads, they afford every element of safety.

The ramps are on the Fifty-sixth street side of the building. Other exits, of course, are available on the Tenth avenue and Fifty-fifth street sides. The floor plans are so worked out, according to the architects, as to come well within the legal prohibition against any employee working more than 125 feet from an exit. The maximum distance from any part of the building to the nearest exit will be 100 feet.

The precautions against fire begin with the materials used in construction. The walls will be of brick and concrete and the floors will be of concrete and steel. Every part of the great plant, which covers a floor space of several acres, will be equipped with a special automatic sprinkler system, Fire apparatus and hand extinguishers will be provided at frequent intervals along the corridors, and it is planned to hold periodical fire drills of all the employees.

Polly Moran Signs as a Fox Comedienne

Hampton Del Ruth has added another link in the chain of Fox Sunshine Comedy talent by annexing Polly Moran to his staff of fun-makers. Miss Moran had just completed a stage tour in the west when the supervising director of Fox Sunshine Comedies heard she was in the vicinity and immediately offered her a proposition to play comedy leads. Miss Moran is considered very clever.

Fine Bal Masque Scene

That the Bal Masque scene in Eugene O'Brien's forthcoming Salznick Picture, "The Perfect Lover," is the best that has ever been made for any motion picture production, is the opinion of Sidney S. Cohen, president of the New York State Exhibitors' League, who visited the Salznick Studio one day last week.

CONSTANCE TALMADGE wishes it understood that the platinum and diamond guard ring that she occasionally wears on the third finger of her left hand is not an engagement ring. She realizes that to the uninitiated it may look somewhat like one, but she prefers wearing it on her left hand to not wearing it at all, and it happens to be too small for the right hand finger for which it was intended, when given her by sister Norma.

Baby Ivy Ward was in the office of one of the producing companies the other day. It was after hours and all the office force had gone home. The president, who was interviewing Ivy, suddenly remembered an important phone call that he should have made some hours before, and there was no one around who could establish the necessary connection with Central. "I can get your number for you," volunteered Ivy, and to the president's amazement, she went to the switchboard and put in the right plugs. We take our hats off to Ivy—we couldn't possibly manipulate a switchboard ourselves.

We were surprised to see Alice Joyce drive up to the Vitagraph studio the other day, accompanied by an elderly gentleman whom we had never seen before and whose face wasn't even familiar to us in the movies. He proved to be Mr. John Joyce from Washington, who seemed to know every member of the Vitagraph company, but who gave us his word of honor that it was his very first visit to any studio and that he had never even been behind the scenes in a theatre. His evident familiarity with the players was the result of intense interest in daughter Alice's pictures.

Harry Morey has purchased a beauteous new twelve cylinder Pathfinder, aided and abetted, it is said, by Gladden James. Mr. James, however, seems not to practise what he preaches, as he has sold his own car while the market quotations on used cars are high, and has resolved not to buy another until the H. C. of motors has considerably lessened.

The latest word in dressing rooms comes from the Norma Talmadge studio on East 48th street. They are fitting up an entire apartment for Norma, including a wardrobe room, a kitchenette, where her luncheons can be prepared, a bath equipped with a most luxurious shower, and the usual dressing rooms. The color scheme is to be rose and gray.

Someone rushed up to May Allison the other day with the exciting news that there was an express box marked for her on the station platform with what looked like a furry little puppy inside. Miss Allison unsuspectingly asked if she might borrow her friend's car so that she could get the puppy at once. At the station no express box was forthcoming, and realizing that the story had been a joke, Miss Allison drove the joker's car directly in front of a city stand-pipe, and let it stand, while from a safe hiding place, she watched a policeman commandeer the car and put a tag on it.

It is said that Stuart Holmes' role in his forthcoming role for Independent Sales Corp. is quite a departure from the sort of parts he has been playing. He, evidently agreeing with Theda Bara that vamping is cold, refuses to play any more he-vamps, and will be seen as the perfect hero when his next picture is released.

Betty Blythe has completed her contract with Vitagraph. Now she feels entitled to a pleasant summer, and she will close her apartment in the Hotel Joyce on West 71st street and take a cottage at Bayside for July and August.

Bert Lytell received word from his Scandinavian foreman that his orders had been fulfilled and his many acres of grapevines entirely disposed of. Surprised at the speed with which the cheerful Swede had accomplished this, Mr. Lytell wrote him asking how he did it. From the ranch at Napa, Calif., came this reply: "With a brush fire and gude wind."

Santschi Turns Down Alaska

HOLDING true to the promise which he made himself when he left the Selig company, Tom Santschi this week turned down what he regards as the most flattering offer ever made him by a film producer.

The offer came from the head of a film company operating in Alaska who had come to Los Angeles in search of players for a number of features now in course of production in the north. The first man upon whom he called after his arrival in Los Angeles was Santschi, whose work in the character of MacNamara in "The Spoilers," indelibly stamped him as typical of the men of the northland who answered the call of adventure during the early days of the gold rush.

The offer consisted of a material increase in salary, all his expenses while away from the city, a flood of advertising and as an evidence of good faith, the producer agreed to sign an iron-clad contract and put in escrow an amount to cover the promised salary.

Alluring as was the offer, however, Santschi, after mature deliberation, turned it down on the grounds that his present income is sufficient and that whatever the increase it could not possibly compensate him for even a temporary absence from a home in which a Mrs. Santschi presides, nor the genuine enjoyment he derives from shifting about among the studios as a free lance actor. Also he objected to tying himself down with a contract.

Since leaving Selig, Santschi has had no idle moments. He first went east to play in a Geraldine Farrar picture and remained to work in three other Goldwyn features. Since returning to the coast he has worked in a number of notable productions. He is at present finishing a leading role with Gladys Brockwell in "Sadie" under Frank Beal's direction.

A Shining Star Without Temperament : : : : : : :

"GOOD morning, Bessie." That is what you would hear, if you were an habitue of the B. B. Features' Studio in Hollywood, from every one in the place when Bessie Barriscale's car drove up promptly at 9 a. m., and the golden haired star's unfailing smile returned the greeting from director and call boys alike. "How can one be dignified and impressive when even the stage hands call one 'Bessie'?" Miss Barriscale laughingly exclaimed. "What do you suppose would happen if I were to turn into a real star some day and give vent to temperament and other such attributes?"

We confess that we can't possibly picture such a situation, so we aren't going to bother our heads trying to imagine what would happen. Temperament is absolutely foreign to Bessie Barriscale's disposition, and it would be just as easy for the Kaiser to vote the Socialistic ticket as for her to snub members of her company.

Her publicity manager showed her the copy for an ad that a new member of his staff had written, not long ago. He rather expected Miss Barriscale to object to it, on the ground that the names of the entire cast were displayed in type almost as large as that used for her own. But he did not know his star.

"Isn't that nice! I like that very much," was her only comment.

"What?" questioned the manager.

"Why, mentioning all the company," she replied, "I think it's only fair to give them all a chance."

Do you wonder that they all love her, and that she passes that infallible test for sincerity and geniality—the kiddies' opinion? For it seems to be the general verdict in Hollywood that in the realm of film celebrities there is no one who can win the affections of the juvenile players so successfully as Miss Barriscale. If her scenario calls for a child part, the star begins getting acquainted at least a week in advance, and by the time the scene is to be played, she can persuade the little one to do what she wants ever so much better than its own mother can. Her special chums are Ben Alexander and Mary Jane Irving, aged seven and four, respectively, and whenever the Robertson-Cole star makes a picture in which there is no part for them, they are distressed for days. The offer of a part with someone else doesn't compensate in the least.

One of her recent productions included a scene in the children's ward in a hospital. An hour beforehand, Miss Barriscale went from one little bed to another, talking and laughing with each occupant, and by the time the director was ready, the children were having the time of their lives, listening to stories and patting the 'pretty lady's hand. There was no faking the fact that they loved the star when she came into the camera's range as a visitor, and when it was over and time for her to go away, there was bitter protest. Only after repeated promises of an early return could Miss Barriscale leave without danger of demoralizing the hospital.

Next to the children, her chief hobby is her home. She always wanted one, a real one, to go to after her day's work was over, and it seems to us that her fondest hopes must certainly be realized. "I've never gotten over experiencing the keenest thrill of pleasure when I say to the chauffeur 'Home' and know that there's no make-believe about it—that it's my home I'm going to and that it's exactly the way I want it and I can do precisely as I please while I'm in it," she declares, and we'll say that if it were our home we'd be proud of it too and enjoy living in it. For it's a gorgeous place and we would tell you more about it, except that it's been told about so much.

We tried in vain to discover some flaw in her apparently ideal existence, but when faced by such a smile as hers, we almost came to the conclusion that there really may be some people in the world with no troubles at all, and that if there are such, there isn't the slightest doubt that Bessie Barriscale heads the list. We did unearth one idiosyncrasy, but we can't call it a fault and we don't blame her in the least, although we sha'n't ever admit her excuse. She positively refuses to make any personal appearances, and when urged to do it for publicity's sake, if no other, she insists: "It wouldn't help matters at all, because if people really saw me, I'd lose whatever friends I have."

MARGARET JONES.

Visiting the Lee Kids Under Handicap : : : : : :

"I SAW Jane! I saw Jane! Honest I did. Say, lady, are you going in there? Is Katherine in there, too? What's the name of the picture? Say, tell us if Katherine—— They won't let you in 'cause they think it's us ringin' the bell—here—I'll bang on the door for you——"

We almost gave up our intention of going to see Jane and Katherine Lee making one of the first scenes for the first production of their own company; the working title of which is "Freaks in Oil," for we didn't think it possible ever to get through the swarm of children that buzzed and hummed around the doors of the Erbograph Studio, or to make ourselves heard above the babble of voices, if we did get through. We're quite sure that every kiddie within three miles of that exciting spot had flocked there just as inevitably as the children of Hamlin Town followed the Pied Piper and his piping. Only these children did their own piping, and they clamored about those alluring doors, and nothing but bolts would keep them out. Some one finally came to our rescue, opened the door just wide enough for us to squeeze through, and we went in to meet the envied little movie stars, who were just about to begin work with Director Tefft Johnson.

He was in the midst of a careful explanation of what was supposed to be happening and what they were to do. Both children listened intently, and with far more interest in the synopsis of the story than we have ever seen any grown-up stars display. At one point Jane clapped her hands delightedly.

"Fine!" she exclaimed. "Do we really give our daddy 32 cents to pay all his debts with?" and she laughed with keen appreciation of the uselessness of 32 cents in such misfortune.

"And we're going to do a Spanish dance in one scene—Katherine, lend me your tambourine so I can show how we're going to do it."

But Katherine wasn't in the humor for lending tambourines. She was more inclined to be serious.

"We're going to make two-reel comedies, you know," she said, "and Mr. Rogers says we'll be able to know how people like them in three months. I hope they like them because we love to make them. We think they're going to be very good, at least, we're trying awfully hard to make them funny."

"We have a new car," interrupted Jane.

"Can you drive it?" we asked.

"Well," hesitatingly, "not yet," with extreme emphasis on the "yet," "but we had our pictures taken in it, and I'll give you whichever one of them you like best."

So somewhere on this page is the picture we liked best, showing Katherine and Jane in their aviation suits, that are exact copies of the kind that real aviators wear, down to the last details of goggles and leggings.

Then Director Johnson called them to begin work, and they went through their rehearsals with a spirit and enthusiasm that should certainly assure their success. They enjoyed every situation just as keenly as children usually enjoy fairy tales, and if their audiences laugh as spontaneously and heartily over the comedy bits as the players do, Mack Sennett will find heavy rivals in his field. We are eagerly waiting for the first showing of "Freaks in Oil."

Demand for Young Directors

THAT there is an ever-increasing demand for young directors among film companies is proven by the recent departure of Lynn Reynolds for McCloud, Cal., with a company of sixty players for the purpose of making exterior scenes in the forests of that locality for use in the production of a six-reel screen version of Johnston McCulley's red-blooded story of the French-Canadian logging camps which appeared in a recent fiction magazine under the title, "The Brute Breaker."

Less than three years ago, Reynolds was unknown to the film world. He had worked for several companies as assistant director, but had never been granted a chance to produce himself. As a reward for long service with the Universal, he was eventually given a chance to co-direct with Sydney Ayres in the production of one reel subjects. He was not long in demonstrating his ability in that capacity, and before long was given a company of his own to make single-reelers. These also were successful and after a few weeks, he was given permission to undertake a feature.

From that point his rise was meteoric. Before he had made half a dozen five-reel offerings he was recognized as one of the most capable producers on the coast. After making a number of successful Universal subjects, he left that company to join the Triangle, where he remained until his consistently good work attracted the attention of the Fox corporation heads, who engaged him to direct the action of no less a star than Tom Mix. He made a number of the best known of that star's pictures and then left Fox to accept a flattering offer made him by the Universal.

The first production given him after his return to the U was a screen version of Joseph Medill Patterson's novel, "A Little Brother of the Rich." He is now making "The Brute Breaker."

Cline Completes a Comedy

EDDIE CLINE, who recently joined the directorial staff of the Fox Film corporation, has completed his first Sunshine Comedy, under the supervision of Hampton Del Ruth.

The cast in this production is a noteworthy one embracing as it does Polly Moran, Sim Somerville, Jack Cooper and others equally well known to screen fans throughout the country. It was photographed by P. H. Whitman, one of the ablest of Fox cameramen, and is regarded about the studio as among the most successful of recent comedy productions of that studio.

Prior to joining Fox, Mr. Cline was for several years associated with Mack Sennett in the old Keystone company, and later with the Sennett-Paramount organization, for which he made many of the most successful comedies ever released under those banners, among them "East Lynne with Variations," "A Bed Room Blunder," "That Night," "The Kitchen Lady," "A Movie Hero," "His Bread and Butter," "Bubbles of Trouble," "His Busted Trust" and others no less enthusiastically received.

Kerrigan Finishes "A Man's Chance"

UNDER the direction of Ernest C. Warde, the Kerrigan Productions company, Inc., has completed "A Man's Chance," the first production to be undertaken since the organization of the company to exploit the work of J. Warren Kerrigan. The picture was taken from a story by Johnston McCulley, which appeared in a recent Frank A. Munsey publication under the title, "A White Man's Chance," and is to be released through the Hodkinson Service.

When the company was formed several weeks ago, from a list of a score of available directors qualified to undertake the establishment of a new brand of films, Mr. Warde, because of his years of theatrical experience and the fact that he had previously produced several of Kerrigan's most successful features, was chosen by the company officials as the most capable man they could engage and judging from this first production, their confidence was more than justified.

Mr. Warde is the son of Frederick Warde, the noted English tragedian, but although born in England, he was educated in this country and it was here that he first took up theatrical work. After a successful career in the realm of the spoken drama, including nine years as Richard Mansfield's director, he turned his attention to the production of motion pictures.

His first work in this line was a series of features for Thanhauser, "The Woman and the Beast," "My Country," "The Woman in White," and "The Man Without a Country" being among the best known of his productions for that concern. Later he joined Pathe, for whom he made "The Bells," "More Trouble," and "Sierra Sixties." It was after he had joined Paralta that he made his first Kerrigan film, "A Burglar for a Night," "One Dollar Bid," "Three X Gordon" and "A Man in the Open," a Farnum production are also among his best known productions.

"Broken Butterfly" Cast

A cast of well known players appear in the newest Maurice Tourneur offering, "The Broken Butterfly." The players include Pauline Starke, Lewis J. Cody, Mary Alden, "Peaches" Jackson and Nina Byron.

Final O. K. on the production by Mr. Tourneur is now awaited, the production having been cut and titled.

Barker Stays With Goldwyn

Well Known Director Renews Contract with Corporation for Term of Years

REGINALD BARKER, one of the best known directors of the industry, has renewed his contract with the Goldwyn Picture Corporation and will direct at the Culver City studios for a number of years.

For two years Barker has been associated with Goldwyn, and the renewal of his contract means that he is to be permanently connected with this company, and will contribute his ideas to the rapid developments being made in the character of photoplays.

The rise of Reginald Barker as a director has been steady. He was born in Scotland and educated there. After a brief stage career as a juvenile he wrote and staged his first play at the age of sixteen. He came to this country and in Kansas City managed his own stock company. Subsequently he became producing director for Henry Miller, Olga Nethersole, Emily Stevens, Robert Hilliard and Walker Whiteside.

With the coming of the motion-pictures Barker turned his talents in that direction. He directed "Stepping Stone," "The Coward," "The Bugle Call," "Shell Forty-Three," "The Thoroughbred," "A Strange Transgressor," and others.

Shortly after the formation of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, Samuel Goldwyn induced Barker to cast his lot with the new and progressive enterprise, and he soon took a hand in the direction of the Geraldine Farrer productions as well as two of the Rex Beach pictures.

Willis and Inglis Buy Rights to Stories

The Los Angeles firm of Willis and Inglis have been quietly buying up the photoplay rights to several well known books and short stories. Both Mr. Willis and Mr. Inglis consider their purchases as a splendid form of investment. Apart from their own purchases, they report an increasing sale of the motion picture rights to books and plays and state that this department of their business has increased enormously.

Frank Howard Clark, author of a number of screen stories and recently editor at the American Company's studios, recently joined Willis and Inglis as manager of their book and play department. Among other innovations Mr. Clark inaugurated a continuity service, enlisting the services of several of the best known continuity writers in the profession.

Walthall Cuts Vacation to Make "Confession"

Henry B. Walthall, who is appearing in a series of six big productions being made by the National for the Pioneer Film Corporation, after leasing a villa at Santa Monica, Cal., for a few weeks' vacation, finds that his vacation will have to be postponed, if not given up entirely.

Mr. Walthall is now engaged in making "Confession." According to original plans, six weeks were allotted to this work, but at a recent meeting of the Pioneer and National heads, it was decided to work without a schedule, so that the element of haste would not be present in the production of "Confession."

Mr. Walthall and his company are now busy on exteriors at Truckee and Lake Tahoe. At the latter place has been erected the Roman Amphitheatre, in which is to be staged the scene showing the martyrdom of early Christians. General Manager I. Bernstein is experiencing difficulty in obtaining the twenty lions necessary for this scene.

Returns to Film Work

W. C. Fields, the comedian, is again going to invade the field of motion pictures. He will make a series of short comedies, to be released by a prominent screen concern.

Mr. Fields' comedies will probably be of the one-reel length. This will not be his first appearance on the screen, since, several years ago, he made a series of short reelers which were popular.

Clark-Cornelius Buys Mutual-Chaplins

Announcement is made that the negative rights to the twelve Mutual-Chaplin comedies have been acquired by the Clark-Cornelius Corporation and that a new edition of the series will be issued in the fall through Exhibitors Mutual.

The principal figures in the deal are William J. Clark, president of Exhibitors Mutual Distributing Corporation, and H. C. Cornelius, vice president of Exhibitors Mutual. The purchase includes foreign as well as American rights.

The series includes: "The Floorwalker," "The Fireman," "Behind the Screen," "One A. M.," "The Pawnshop," "The Count," "The Vagabond," "Easy Street," "The Rink," "The Cure," "The Immigrant," and "The Adventurer."

Sales Managers Named

Two appointments of interest to exhibitors in the respective territories are announced this week by Hiram Abrams in connection with the Chicago and Seattle Distributing Depots of United Artists Corporation.

Cresson E. Smith, in point of service one of the oldest Chicago exchange men, will head the Chicago office of the "Big Four" and Louis W. Thompson who is widely known throughout the Western territory, will be Sales Manager of United Artists' Seattle office.

Pathe News Has Shots of Dempsey Training

Pathe News has secured some exclusive training pictures from the training quarters of Jack Dempsey, who is to battle with Jess Willard for the ring championship of the world. Experts say that they are the best boxing pictures ever taken, considered either from a photographic standpoint or from the fact that here is presented all of the skill and "gruelling" of a real fight.

Fox Branch Manager

Miles F. Gibbons has been appointed branch manager at Detroit for the Fox Film Corporation. Mr. Gibbons has managed offices in Cleveland, Chicago, and Denver.

"Big Four's" Canada Office

United Artists Will Operate Its Own Depot for Distribution in Toronto

PLANS have been perfected whereby United Artists Corporation will distribute its productions of Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks and D. W. Griffith through its own offices in Canada. Hiram Abrams made announcement of the decision.

There has been much speculation regarding the Canadian distribution of the "Big Four" pictures, but up to this time the company has made no statement of its plans. All rumors and reports that have been circulated have been absolutely unofficial and as will be seen from this present statement, entirely without foundation.

United Artists Corporation has selected the city of Toronto for the establishment of its first Canadian Distributing Depot. Pictures will be released in Canada simultaneously with their release in the United States. This means, therefore, that the company's first release, a Douglas Fairbanks Picture, will be made public on September 1 in Canada, just as it will be on this side of the border.

It is pointed out by Mr. Abrams that the handling of United Artists Corporation's releases will be identical both in the States and in Canada. The same strong, central policy making impossible any outside control over the releases of the "Big Four" will be exercised in Canada, too. It has been made clear in previous statements that United Artists Corporation will at all times and in all places handle its own products.

A. C. Berman, well known in New England and New York, has been appointed sales manager of the Toronto Distributing Depot of the "Big Four."

Many Join United Theatres

Sixty-two New Members Announced in Week, Including First Run Theatres

WITH the accession this week to its ranks of the Strand and Orpheum Theatres, Cleveland, Ohio, United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., adds another important increment to its list of first run houses.

Paul Gasdanovic, proprietor of the two theatres in question, has taken a full seven share stock membership in President Berst's organization and will play each successive United release in either the Strand or the Orpheum.

In possession of the maximum number of United shares permissible under its constitution, namely seven, this prominent exhibitor is enabled to present United Productions for the full week's run, the number of days corresponding to the number of shares.

The Strand and Orpheum, among the many representative Cleveland picture theatres, have the distinction of being the biggest advertisers in that city, a fact which will give United a great vogue in Cleveland and do much toward publicizing its productions in the surrounding territory. Many suburban and nearby town theatres, following the lead of the Orpheum and Strand, are expected to align with President Berst's organization, it is reported.

United members reported as increasing their shares last week include: Thomas Saxe, Milwaukee; N. Lapage, Superior, Wis.; Dye, Ford & Rogers, Amarillo, Tex.; S. J. Osika, Burley, Idaho; Reading Amusement Co., Reading, Pa..

Sixty-two new United members are announced by that organization for one week. This Cleveland first run further strengthens United's list which already includes many important exhibitors and theatre chains.

Show "Lost Battalion" Soon

Argonne Spectacle by MacManus Will Have Washington Presentation July 1

INITIAL showing of the MacManus production "The Lost Battalion" will be held July 1 under the auspices of the National Press Club at Washington.

Scores of notables have signified their intention of attending, among them Vice President Marshall, officials of the War Department, members of the Cabinet, Senators, Ambassadors and the legislative correspondents of the three hundred leading newspapers of the country. The showing before the notables of the nation is a challenge to criticism. There is no gloom in the picture and through it runs a story of freshness and charm.

Besides Major General Alexander and Lieut. Col. Whittlesey, Major George McMurtry, Captain William J. Cullen, Lieut. Arthur McKeogh also appear in the production.

The ordnance used was the ordnance the Lost Battalion fought with, and guns, particularly the machine guns with which the Germans kept up an incessant fusilade were captured trophies, brought back by the victorious Whittlesey heroes.

White Likes Film Version of His Novel

Stewart Edward White attended the first showing of the film version of his novel "The Westerners," held in Los Angeles, and on returning to his home near San Francisco, wrote Benjamin B. Hampton, the producer, who will release the picture through W. W. Hodkinson, a letter stating that in every detail "the picture is the book" and is altogether a notable achievement.

Sawyer Discusses S-L Plans with Showmen

Arthur H. Sawyer, of S-L Pictures, has returned to New York, following a three weeks' trip throughout the South in the interests of "Virtuous Men." During his work Mr. Sawyer disposed of several states for the S-L production and made arrangements with several of the leading newspapers of the South for an advertising campaign in behalf of the feature. Aside from the sales made of "Virtuous Men," the S-L executive took the trip to secure opinions from leading exhibitors relative to a new production to be made by S-L Pictures. Carrying out a pre-arranged plan he laid the entire details of story, star, director and exploitation methods to be used before several hundred exhibitors gathered at the meeting and dinner of the Southern Exhibitors' Association at the Ansley Hotel, Atlanta, Ga.

The S-L idea of giving direct aid to the exhibitor by sending special men to co-operate in the exploitation of first run presentations, with the resultant radiation of this exploitation throughout the territory, was enthusiastically received by the assembled showmen.

"Sunnyside's" Quality

The humorously pathetic strain paramount in Charlie Chaplin's latest First National comedy, "Sunnyside," is receiving praiseworthy attention at the hands of critics and public.

Unquestionably, the critics declare, Chaplin has introduced a degree of comedy-pathos capable of holding strong audience interest, funny to the extreme, and decidedly beneficial to a class comedy in that it removes the picture from the slap-stick variety and places it among the humorous events happening in real life.

Distribute Brady Film

"His Bridal Night," Alice Brady's latest Select Picture, which Select officials last week declared to be the best attraction Miss Brady has ever made, is now being distributed by the Select Exchanges. This production is the last of the string of Select Pictures for June, the others having been Constance Talmadge in "Happiness a la Mode," in which she is presented by Lewis J. Selznick, and Thomas in "Upstairs and Down."

Pathe Finishes "Great Gamble," New Serial

With the filming of two big scenes last week, Director Joseph A. Golden completed work on the Western Photoplays serial, "The Great Gamble," co-starring Anne Luther and Charles Hutchison, which is to be released by Pathe on August 3.

In the first of these scenes Mr. Hutchison was required to climb a steep embankment on a motorcycle and race after a speeding train. On catching up with the train, the "stunt" star, at sixty miles an hour, leaped from the saddle to the rear platform, leaving a perfectly good motorcycle to dash out its brains against a boulder beside the roadbed.

The second "stunt" scene showed Mr. Hutchison, as the hero, being pursued across the roof of a five-story building. In his efforts to escape, he swung from a gutter which pulled loose from its fastening along the eaves and left him hanging far out in the air. Some delicate climbing was necessary to enable the star to reach solid ground again.

Great Wind Storm?—By Aeroplane Motors

A scene in "A Man's Fight," the forthcoming vehicle of Dustin Farnum, distributed by United Picture Theatres, Inc., during which a wind storm wreaks havoc almost unbelievable, is described in advance by Mr. Farnum, who has foreseen the inquiries which will follow exhibition.

During the action a "drunk" is blown off his feet, a Chinese laundryman has his wash blown out of his basket, heavy articles apparently take wings, and such incidents rouse curiosity in the minds of the picture goer.

Mr. Farnum has explained that two powerful airplane propellers anchored, with engines and all on wheels just outside of the range of the camera, "raised the wind."

Fox Comics in Demand

Continued heavy bookings are reported on the issue of "The Lucky Thirteen," the Fox Sunsine comedies. Five hundred and eighty bookings are reported to date, with the bigger houses in the forefront of those signing.

Jans Sells Many Territories

Finish Location Work on Lewis' Picture

Select Pictures Corporation announces that Mitchell Lewis, whose current attraction, "Jacques of the Silver North," is now being distributed, has completed the location work on his forthcoming Select Picture, which is announced under the working title of "La Rue of the Strong Heart," and has returned to the Brunton Studio in Los Angeles where the interior scenes will be made. For the last three weeks Mr. Lewis, Director Robert North Bradbury, and Mr. Lewis' company have been stationed at the head of the Columbia River in Washington.

National Board Passes "My Little Sister"

Endorsement by the National Board of Review of "My Little Sister," upholds the impression strongly felt by Fox officials that this picture, in which Evelyn Nesbit is starred, while a vivid exposure of the danger to young girls in a great city, is yet handled with refinement that will win approval from all.

It is believed that its presentation, and the educational lessons taught, will receive the endorsement of women's clubs and reform societies, as well as the ordinary public citizen, in all communities.

Guessing Contest Upon "Virtuous Men"

Since the release of "Virtuous Men" on a state right basis some time ago, Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubink, sponsors for the production, have been in receipt of many letters from exhibitors, querying as to the exact meaning of the title. In order to answer this question and at the same time further exploit the publicity possibilities of the title "Virtuous Men," S-L Pictures has decided to inaugurate a guessing contest among the exhibitors of the country. Special prizes will be given for the best answer defining the meaning of "Virtuous Men" as applied to the S-L production starring E. K. Lincoln.

This contest will be directed by Bert Ennis, Director of Publicity. The prizes will consist of articles useful to the exhibitor in the maintenance of his theatre. The contest will open on the first of July and run for one month.

Book American Comedy for Extended Runs

William Russell's comedy, "Some Liar," picturized from the Green Book story by James Oliver Curwood, is chalking up a number of extended bookings. Among the larger theaters which ran or will run the picture for a solid week are the Tivoli in San Francisco, the Strand in Washington, D. C., Ray's Garden in Los Angeles, the American in Denver, the Gaiety in Cleveland, the Olympia in Boston, the Plaza in San Diego, and the Strand in Newark, N. J.

Four-day runs are recorded for houses like the Columbia in Pittsburg, the Mission and the Class A in Seattle, the Blue Mouse in St. Paul, and the Columbia in Portland, Ore.

First Jose Film Named

Joseph M. Schenck announces that the first picture for the Edward Jose Company will be "Mothers of Men" by Denny William Warner and De Witte Kaplan.

Mr. Jose will start work on June 26 and is now engaging the cast. He is collaborating with Charles Whittaker on the scenario which will be completed shortly.

Marguerite Clark Has a Comedy in "Girls"

Marguerite Clark's new Paramount picturization of "Girls," the light comedy by the famous late American playwright, Clyde Fitch, is released June 29. This is Miss Clark's first Pacific Coast production in four years.

Miss Clark plays the role of Pamela Gordon, a charming little girl who has vowed an everlasting hatred of all men because a certain one whom she thought she loved, had jilted her in her younger days. She and two girl companions form a man-haters' club and put a little sign above the door which reads, "No man shall cross this threshold."

Walter Edwards directed. The leading male role is played by Harrison Ford, and the supporting cast also includes Lee Hill, Thomas D. Persse, Virginia Foltz, Tom Ricketts, Clarisse Selwyn and Arthur Carewe.

Fred Stone Begins on First Independent

Having completed the most successful season in his long stage career, Fred Stone is well into the first screen play of the Fred Stone Productions. It is the picturization of "Billy Jim," a big story of the West by Jackson Gregory that was printed in one of the popular magazines.

The magnitude of the story is indicated by the scope of locations used in the filming—the entire west from Southern California to the heart of the Canadian Rockies. The company is now at Lake Louise, British Columbia,

A company of more than fifty persons accompanied the star on the four day journey by rail and boat and again by rail, from Los Angeles to the mountain location. Manager Andrew Callaghan was in command of the expedition with Director Frank Borzage in charge of the cinema activities of the company.

Lila Lee in Dramatic Role in New Picture

Never before, it is said, has Lila Lee, the young Paramount star, been furnished with such a fine opportunity for the display of her dramatic talent as in "A Daughter of the Wolf," her new Paramount picture, released June 22.

Heretofore the roles enacted by the little star have been more or less of a lighter nature. But in "The Daughter of the Wolf," the role of a little motherless daughter of a rough and wary fur smuggler of the Far North, is one which requires the exercise of the powers of dramatic interpretation.

Raymond Hatton, Roy Diem, Dick Wayne, James Mason, Jack Herbert, James Neill and Clyde Benson are among the players who appear in the cast.

Some of the "boys" in the Robertson-Cole production, "The Good Bad Woman." The youngest is 54 and the oldest is past 91. The wig makers of the West Coast were not consulted for make-up

Change Blackton Film Title

First Release of Newly Formed Company Will Not Have Bryan in Cast

J. STUART BLACKTON, president of the recently organized corporation, the J. Stuart Blackton Feature Pictures, Inc., announces that title of the first release by the new company has been changed from "Moonshine" to "Moonshine and Shadows." This change has been made by the producer not only because of his recollection that the first title had previously be used on the screen but also because on consideration he decided "Moonshine and Shadows" is a more appropriate title for his production.

Incidentally, Commodore Blackton has issued a firm denial of all the rumors, published and verbal, to the effect that William Jennings Bryan appears in "Moonshine and Shadows." As the title indicates, the story and scenario written in collaboration by the producer and Stanley Olmsted, has to do with the timely question with which Mr. Bryan's name is often connected, but it is emphatically stated that Mr. Bryan not only does not appear in the production but also had nothing whatever to do with it. "Moonshine and Shadows" is a fictional feature on a timely theme, made by Commodore Blackton for his new company independently and not under the auspices of any association or interest.

Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon are the featured members of the cast of "Moonshine and Shadows," with important roles played by Eddie Dunn, Lefty Alexander, Violet and Charles Blacton, Fanny Rice, Julia Swayne Gordon, Margaret Barry, Van Dyke Brooke, Louis Dean, Robert Milasch, Jay Strong, Slim Rube, Frank Hilton, Anne Perry and Leo Delaney.

Select Favorites Come in July

Norma Talmadge and Clara K. Young Programmed in Two New Productions

TWO strong attractions are promised by Select for July in the latest photoplays of Clara Kimball Young and Norma Talmadge. Miss Young, appearing once again at the head of her own company, is seen in "The Better Wife," while Miss Talmadge, supported by a strong company of players, is presented by Joseph M. Schenck in "The Way of a Woman."

July being a good month in which to appreciate the charms of feminine beauty, Select avers that never have Miss Young and Miss Talmadge, respectively, appeared upon the screen in such stunning array as in these two midsummer releases.

Miss Young's picture is one of those entertaining affairs concocted of high society, low-cut gowns, misunderstood promises, faithful loves and hearts that break and break but keep on beating. The scenes are laid in England and on the Continent. Those on the "inside" who have seen the picture declare that it goes Miss Young's last production, "Cheating Cheaters," one better.

In "The Way of a Woman," Miss Talmadge has been fitted by Eugene Walter with a vehicle which he has carved from his successful stage play, "Nancy Lee."

Co-Stars Complete Capellani Production

The negative of "The Unknown Dancer," which is the first production just completed by Director George Archainbaud for the Albert Capellani Productions, Inc., under the personal supervision of Albert Capellani, in which June Caprice and Creighton Hale have been co-starred, has been delivered to Pathe and definite date for the release will be announced shortly.

As previously announced, "The Unknown Dancer" is an adaptation from the French play "Le Danseur Inconnu," by Tristan Bernard. In transplanting this piece to the screen, Mr. Capellani, together with Miss Peggy McCall, of the Capellani Scenario Staff, have so molded the story that its French atmosphere and settings have been entirely eliminated and under Mr. Archainbaud's directorial wand, "The Unknown Dancer," as it now appears, is an American society comedy drama.

Universal Animal Comedy Released July 6

The first of the Joe Martin animal comedy series titled, "Monkey Stuff," will be released the week of July 6. Universal promises exhibitors as well as the public a treat in the comedy field of motion pictures. Joe Martin is an orang, assisted by two other capable animal actors, Caesar the Lion and Joe is Charley the elephant. The persons on the supporting cast are: Harry Lorain, Phyllis Allen, Beatrice Lovejoy, Harry Burns, and Lucille Smith.

Further Broadway Run

"Broken Blossoms," the D. W. Griffith production based on the narrative of "The Chink and the Child," from Thomas Burke's "Limehouse Nights," last week entered upon its seventh week at the Geo. M. Cohan Theatre. Because of the success of this offering other productions in the D. W. Griffith repertory season have been postponed, although arrangements now are complete for presentations of "The Fall of Babylon" and "The Mother and the Law."

Bryant Washburn in "A Very Good Young Man"

THIS might be called a farce, but exhibitors who expect to get the most out of Bryant Washburn in "A Very Good Young Man," should know a lot more about the picture than that. The fast-moving stuff should be put over in your exploitation and the happiness angle should be brought out strong.

You are going to take advantage of the popularity of the star and we would advise you to say that this is an even funnier one that "Skinner's Dress Suit," in which Bryant Washburn scored probably his biggest comedy success. It's light and frothy, but still there are so many surprising turns that it holds the interest to the end. You can tell the public that this will remind one of the old Hoyt comedies.

Another point to play strong is the supporting cast. You have here Helen Eddy, Helene Chadwick, Julia Faye and Anna Q. Nilsson, all players with large followings, as the girls of the picture and Noah Beery, Charles West and Edward Burns among the men while among the best known players in roles of elder women are Sylvia Ashton and Jae Wolf. It will certainly be no mistake to list the entire cast of this one in the greater part of your advertising.

This should not prevent your playing the name of Washburn strong. You should use either a picture of him alone or with one of the girls who plays a prominent part. The title should be only secondary and there should be an adequate selling talk, getting over the meat of the picture. It's not enough to tell them that it's funny. Give them some of the reasons why.

THIS is the story: LeRoy Sylvester, assistant at the local library, is such a good young man that there's not even a whisper against him. But that's the trouble, for the mother and sister of Ruth Douglas, LeRoy's sweetheart, are afraid of a man who is too good before marriage and that they point out to her that they always break out afterwards, and then the whole life of the wife is ruined. Against her heart she is convinced that her mother is right and so she tells LeRoy: "All good men break out after marriage. Grandfather flirted, father gambles and uncle drinks. I don't trust you; you are too good."

In contrast with LeRoy is shown Ruth's sister's sweetheart, a typical bully who drinks, lights his match on the back of a chair and rumples up the hair of the good natured LeRoy with impunity. But there enters the scene, unbidden to Ruth's birthday party, Osprey Mandleharper, flirtatious daughter of the lady undertaker just across the street, who, after trying to vamp all the men, takes in the situation, and with Ruth's refusal LeRoy determines that he has to "have a worst." And so, after a swig of whiskey and with the girl consenting to "the worst," he knocks out the bully before the whole party and they leave arm in arm—to the astonishment of all the rest and the great grief of Ruth.

Off to the Commanderbilt, the swell hotel of the rapid set, they go and there is a lot of comedy stuff before LeRoy registers with the undertaker lady as man and wife simply because they cannot get admission to the Babylon Gardens unless they are guests of the hotel.

DETECTIVE BLOOD, in a disguise that fools no one but himself hunting the jewels that have been stolen from one of the rich guests, Mrs. Van Zant and he is also conniving with Viva Bacchus, an actress who is threatening to sue Adrian Love, a rich youth for breach of promise. In the hotel elevator LeRoy's flirtatious activities are aroused and he continues it after Viva meets Love and his mother for the settlement of the case at one of the tables. Then he follows the girl from the room to continue the affair, but suddenly Viva discovers that she has been robbed of the bonds that she has just received in the settlement.

The elevator is jammed and when the detective shouts that they are covered and are going to be searched, Love asks LeRoy to care for a marriage license for him and another girl that Viva may not learn the truth, Johnny Binks, an impecunious guest, presses on him a strange package and even the elevator boy makes him take his pack of cards and dice. LeRoy wants nothing better than to be arrested and especially to have the "goods" found on him, though the other three think that they are using him for an easy mark.

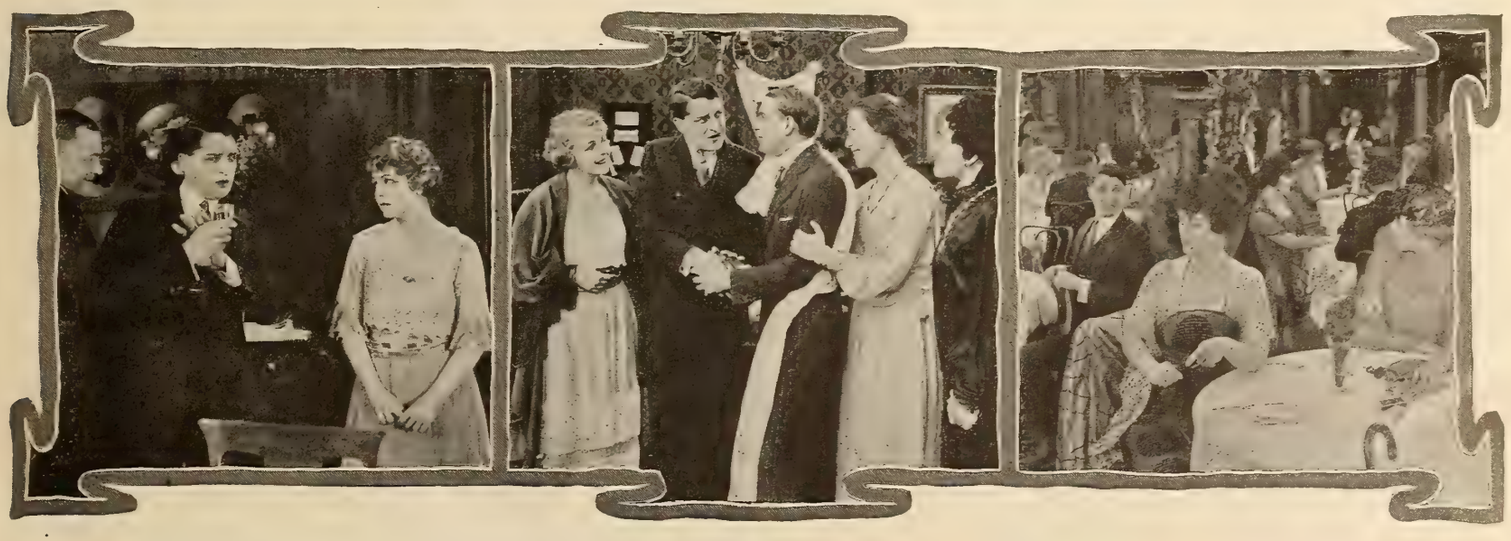
The elevator comes down just as Viva discovers that she hasn't lost the bonds at all so the search and the arrest are off. Then the men demand the return of their belongings, but LeRoy declares that they borrowed his virtues for the moment and that now he intends to borrow their vices until tomorrow.

VIVA is all aroused by the paper which Love doesn't want her to see and pleads with LeRoy to show it to her, but he promises that if she will take him to a gambling house he may show her. Thence they go and LeRoy promptly phones the police hoping that he will be arrested in the raid. In the meantime he wins large sums and the proprietor pays him to leave the place. But before he does he shows Viva the stolen jewels, which Binks had handed him, and the girl writes a note to Mrs. Van Zant telling her where they may be recovered and giving the address of the lady undertaker.

And there all the leading characters go. Osprey has been rescued from the restaurant where she was deserted by LeRoy with the dinner check on her hands, by Binks with whom Osprey has now fallen in love, and who is seeking to recover the jewels he stole. Detective Blood is after the jewels, too, and hopes to get a clue and the pair of them are hidden one by one by Osprey in the disguise of corpses when Viva and LeRoy arrive. There comes, too, the police who only thank LeRoy for tipping them off to the gambling house and when the latter produces the necklace and Blood is about to arrest him when Mrs. Van Zant arrives to claim the jewels and forbids the arrest because LeRoy has recovered them for her where the detective failed. Love is there to thank him for keeping the paper and preventing his marriage to the wrong girl, because he has found that he really loved Viva and Binks is delighted that LeRoy has saved him from his first crime and has shown him true love in Osprey. And then—then Ruth is on hand to claim him back.

THIS is a picture that you can give almost any sort of surrounding, but especially for the summer season we would advise lightness all the way through and never for a moment would we get serious in the exploitation. Rather than use anything of the teaser stuff, we would devote this additional space to the newspapers, increasing the selling arguments and continuing these during the run of the picture.

The title is not likely to suggest in the minds of many that there is anything of the reform stuff about this, but still we wouldn't take any chance on that. And don't go to any offensive opposite in reflecting on good people, because you are likely to make enemies out of a lot of people.



Left, the very good young man spurns liquor; but at the right, he's turned to a flirt; but in the center all is lovely in the end

How to Get Whole City Talking About the Fun in This One

THESE Special Service Sections are written with the purpose of suggesting to exhibitors how to get the most out of pictures that they have booked. They are prepared after studying the pictures and the best way of exploiting them. Won't you let us know any use that you made of suggestions printed here and the original ideas that you have used in putting over this picture?

YOU can get most of the selling argument on "A Very Good Young Man" right from the titles themselves and this is always a mighty conducive thing to word of mouth advertising, for people who have seen that language in your advance advertising and then get it on the screen are more apt to boost the picture along those lines.

Leave the story up in the air. There is a real story here, but after all it is not so much the story itself as the way that it is presented and you can do little more than suggest the comedy possibilities, and at the same time leave a certain element of suspense. If "Skinner's Dress Suit" played either in your theatre or your town we would advise the line:

"Funnier than 'Skinner's Dress Suit.'"

That's better than a ton of adjectives. Then get into the selling argument:

"LeRoy Sylvester was just about the model for all young men. In fact that's what was the matter with him, and his sweethearts, mother and sister kept pointing out to her that the men who are too good before marriage always break out afterwards.

"She was convinced against her will. Even the Ouidja board told her that he had never done anything wicked, and so she told him: 'All good men break out after marriage. Grandfather flirted, father gambles and uncle drinks. I can't trust you—you're TOO good.'"

"But LeRoy sure did love that girl and he determined that if she wouldn't marry him without knowing the worst, there must be a worst for her to know. So an actress, a thief, a hotel detective, drink and gambling houses got all mixed up with him in his efforts to be wicked—but he was balked with every turn. How? If we told you it would only spoil your laughs. Don't laugh too long, each chance you get, or you won't be able to keep up with them."

ANY time you can get the girl element in strong, all the better so long as there is nothing suggestive about it. This picture is entirely clean, but still it has plenty of "pep" and that is the angle to which attention should be given. Then try:

"Ruth dearly loved LeRoy, but she was afraid to marry him, for everyone told her that men who were good before marriage always broke loose afterwards. Ruth, she longed to discover something wicked in his past, but it simply wasn't there.

"So LeRoy determined that he would mass all the wickedness in the world. He took a drink of liquor, that he had always spurned before, knocked out the bully whose insults he had always endured and then fled from the party with another girl, leaving the astonished Ruth behind.

"He flirted with an actress, got possession of another man's papers and a rich women's jewels, gambled—and always won—called the police and tried to get himself arrested—but all he got was thanks. He put on the speed and there was something happening every minute—an avalanche of laughter for you. There's a real story here—a farce comedy that means something."

And this:

"Lots of married men spend the first years of wedded bliss, hiding their pasts, but here is a youth who couldn't get his sweetheart to consent simply because he didn't have a single stain on his career. So he determined to set out to get the most lurid record that the big city could afford. If you and I had done one-tenth of the things that he did we'd find ourselves in jail for life.

"But getting arrested was the thing that he wanted more than anything else, and every time he started out to do anything wrong he ended up by doing just the thing that brought him praise. Even when he summoned the police to arrest himself they merely came with thanks. No use? Lots of it. He won the girl. And for you? Listen, if it were possible to fill our theatre with people who'd never laughed before you'd hear the noise a block away."

THEN here are some short ones:

He was reputed to be the best young man in the city, and when he found it barred him from his sweetheart he tried to be the worst. He drank and he gambled, he flirted in public places and hid stolen jewels—but all he got was thanks, because everything that he did in his mad desire for a 'past' was just the right thing. That's what makes it just the funniest of all films."

"He'd been good all his life—and it only brought him the refusal of the girl he loved and who loved him. She was simply afraid that the 'wild oats' would be sown after the marriage. So he determined to set that right by gathering in a fine young crop. He tried hard enough—but he simply couldn't get away with it and he remained a very good young man—after being just about the funniest character that you've ever seen on the screen."

"Here was this young man whom everyone said was simply too good to be married in a public gambling house with the police on the way. In his pockets reposed a rare stolen necklace. The thing he was hoping for was to get arrested. Did he? He did NOT. For everything that he tried to do in the way of being bad was just the right thing in the end—so the girl had to succumb and marry the very good young man."

"His sweetheart had just refused him. She told him that he was too good to be true. So he set out to be the worst ever. Things began to look black for him, but every time he was just about to succeed and get himself into trouble the wrong things turned right and he only got thanks and blessing. And what you'll get is lots of action and laughs that we haven't been able to count yet."

THIS picture offers unusual possibilities for musical stunts. Most of it should be light and airy or with burlesque effects and the cues are so plain from the title that a musical score is almost unnecessary.

As a prologue you can use one of the lighter love songs or character songs from some of the comic operas, the more popular the selection the better. A stage setting representing a cabaret scene could be well used and then this theme can be carried through the picture as the secondary one for Viva Bacchus. "Rings On Her Fingers, Bells On Her Toes," the Blanche Ring success, sung by a girl in chorus girl garb and dancing would be a hit.

Use a lively selection through the titles and then have the orchestra tacet with the title "Hush-sh-sh, You're about to enter a public library." This should continue through to the place where we are introduced to Washburn and the girl and here the real theme should be introduced and there is none that fits better than "Dearie," "Kiss Me Again," or "A Little Love, a Little Kiss."

Where the bully is used "He Was a Devil in His Home Town," may be used and then with the scene where the undertaker's daughter begins to vamp the bully and through the scenes that follow with her "Oh, Lady, Lady," may be used. Where the music is shown on the screen "The Curse of An Aching Heart," is shown that should be played burlesque with piano and trombone, just a bar or so.

There is a scene where Washburn almost enters the ladies' rest room and here "He Walked Right in and Turned Around and Walked Right Out Again" is appropriate. Of course the Hawaiian effects for the hula hula dance is obvious and for the scenes with the thief and where Washburn tries to get into trouble use the mysterioso accentuated with cornet or trombone, or something like "That Creepy Weepy Feeling."

We have already suggested the theme of Viva which should be started when Washburn tried to flirt with her. The real theme will not come back until the end of the picture.

In and Out of West Coast Studios

By J. C. Jessen

Vitagraph News Bits

THE Vitagraph studios are under process of reconstruction and enlargement. Carpenter shops, new stages and cutting rooms are among the buildings now under way.

The Bessie Love company, under the direction of David Smith, is at work on the production of "Over the Garden Wall," taken from the novel by Milicent Evison. Allan Forrest appears in the role opposite Miss Love with a supporting cast including Ann Shafer, Otto Lederer, Jay Morley, Myrtle Reeves, Willis Marks, James Blackwell, Edward Hearn and Truman Van Dyke.

Larry Semon is at work on one of the biggest pictures of his Vitagraph career. In its production a set has been constructed with stage, orchestra pit, dressing rooms—everything necessary to stage a legitimate production.

Earle Montgomery and Joe Rock are making a tramp comedy of the Nat Wills type.

The Antonio Moreno-Carol Holloway company has finished the last of their "Perils of Thunder Mountain" serial scenes to be made at the studio and have left for Trukee, Cal., where they are to make the concluding episodes of the chapter production.

The William Duncan Serial company is still at Huntington Lake making the first episodes of their current production.

Universal Newsettes

LYNN Reynolds and a company of sixty players this week left the U lot for McCloud, California, where he is to make exterior scenes for "The Brute Breaker," a six-reel story of the French-Canadian logging camps, written by Johnston McCulley. Frank Mayo and Kathryn Adams appear in the leading roles.

Eric Von Stroheim has completed "The Pinnacle" and is cutting and titling it at the U studios.

With Pete Morrison and Magda Lane in the leading roles, George Holt is producing a two-reel western melodrama entitled, "A Desert Wooing." The story was written by Harvey Gates.

The Marie Walcamp company has returned from Sonora, Cal., where they went to make exteriors for the "Tempest Cody" series of western melodramas, and this week began the production of the final of these productions at the U plant.

Under the direction of James W. Horne, James J. Corbett is at work on the sixteenth episode of "The Midnight Man" serial, Kathleen O'Connor appears opposite Corbett.

William Campbell has completed the third of his animal comedies, "Wild Lions and Loose Bandits."

Jack Ford is making the final scenes of his latest Harry Carey western, "Jim of the Rangers." Gloria Hope, Claire Anderson, Joe Harris, Vesta Pegg, Ted Brooks, Jannie Lee and Jack Woods comprise the supporting cast. H. Tipton Steck prepared the scenario from the story by G. B. Lancaster.

The Monroe Salisbury company is at Tobin, Cal., where under the direction of Rollin Sturgeon, they are making exteriors in the production of "Sundown Trail." Alice Elliott, Beatrice Dominguez, Carl Stockdale and Clyde Fillmore are among the supporting cast.

Paul Powell has cast his next production, "Common Property," and is making ready to start shooting. The story was written by Elliott Clawson and will be made with an all-star cast including Colleen Moore, Robert Anderson, Johnnie Cooke, Arthur Maude, Nell Craig, Richard Cummings, Robert Lawler, Frank Lee and Arthur Jasmine.

George Seigmann is producing a screen version of Sada Cowan's play, "Playing the Game," with Fritzi Brunette, George McDaniels, Fontaine La Rue, Sam De Grasse, Harry Springler, and Edward Cecil in the leading roles.

At the Ince Plant

UNDER the direction of Fred Niblo the Enid Bennett company is at work on a story written by Eugene B. Lewis under the title, "The Gay Miss Fortesque." The cast chosen thus far includes Milton Sills, Irving Cummings, William Conklin and Theodore Roberts. Two other principals are yet to be named.

It has been decided that upon the completion of "L'Apache" which the Dorothy Dalton company is at present making in New York, under Joe De Grasse's direction, that unit will be held in the east to make a second production. The script has been written and approved, but thus far it has been given no title.

Seemingly Fay Tincher, now in Christie comedies, has naught to worry her

Douglas MacLean and Doris May are at work on a screen version of Mary Roberts Rinehart's story, "Twenty-Three and One-Half Hours' Leave." The story is founded upon a private's bet that he will eat hot muffins at the captain's table.

Charles Ray is making ready to start work in another Ince production. Margery Wilson, who will be remembered for former work with Ray, William S. Hart and other Ince players, has been cast for the leading role opposite Ray in this offering.

About Metro Players

BERT LYTELL, Viola Dana and May Allison have completed the last of their program pictures and are resting before taking up the work of making the first of their subjects for the "fewer and better pictures" Metro policy.

A. P. (Billy) Younger, recently mustered out of the army, this week joined the Metro scenario department and is at present cutting and titling a recent production. Prior to joining the army, Mr. Younger was with the Universal and Triangle companies.

For screen purposes, the title of Will Irwin's story as it appeared in the Saturday Evening Post, "Free," has been changed to "The Uplifters." May Allison appears in the stellar role of the production which is now being cut and titled.

The final scenes of "The Microbe," the latest Viola Dana production to be completed at the Metro studios, were made in Los Angeles' Chinatown several nights this week. The picture was made under the direction of Henry Otto from June Mathis' adaptation of the story by Henry Altimus.

Under the direction of John Ince, Emmy Wehlen has completed the last of her program pictures for Metro, "A Favor for a Friend." The story was written by Luther A. Reed and staged with Jack Mulhall, Hugh Faye, Joseph Kilgour, Effie Conley and Harry Todd in the cast.

Here and There

PEGGY HYLAND has just completed a picture for Fox entitled, "Cheating Herself."

Tom Mix has finished "High Speed," his latest picture for the Fox corporation.

After completing a Madlaine Traverse production, "Rose of the Wilds," Harry Millarde has left for New York, where he is to spend his vacation. He will return to the western Fox Studios in August to resume production.

Frankie Raymond, known to theatre-goers of a generation ago as the girl who made "The Alabama Coon" famous, as well as for her work in juvenile roles with the American Extravaganza company, has been engaged by the Brentwood company to play the role of Florence Vidor's mother in King Vidor's current production. "The Other Half." Thomas Jefferson, son of the late Joseph Jefferson and an actor well known to the screen, has also been engaged for this production. His is the role of country newspaper publisher who will not sacrifice his love of truth for money.

Upon the completion of his work in Brentwood's "The Other Half," Charles Meredith is to go over to the Marguerite Clark company.

Under the direction of William Seiter, Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven have completed another of their National comedies, entitled, "Close to Nature."

Unable to accommodate their production activities to the studio space at the Gower street studio, President William Parsons and Production Manager Isadore Bernstein have completed negotiations with William Clifford, by which they have secured a lease on the Clifford Santa Monica Boulevard studios for a period of five years.

Eddie Larson has been engaged as cameraman with the Gale Henry company, to succeed Irving Reis.

The Francis Ford serial company spent the past week at Catalina Island making exterior scenes in the production of their current chapter film, "Mystery of 13."

Double Exploitation

The Filmclas Corporation has secured "Bred in Old Kentucky" which will be sent out with a colored band and orchestra. A parade will be given together with band concerts in front of the theatre before each performance.

Dave Butler was a victim of a major operation this week and recovered in thirty seconds; the hospital was at the Brentwood studio.

Richard Willis was invited out to dinner the other evening and carried a hat; he is still Richard the 'atless (yes he's English).

"A Man's Chance" is the first story Bob Brunton slipped to Jack Kerrigan. There are several who are wondering just what Bob meant.

We urge all the high flyers of the film industry and any others with aeronautic instincts to heed that $50,000 note of Tom Ince for someone to fly across the Pacific.

Lois Wilson refused to deny that she's married because she says it is not necessary for her to deny that she's married because it isn't true.

Emmy Wehlen is so gentle and demure she refused to hit a man in a scene the other day until John Ince had three times instructed her to make it "realistic."

Director Dave Smith comes forth with an original statement that he is now making a typical Love love story; one guess to anyone to know what he means.

B. Ziedman is said to have resigned from Doug's publicity staff and is to be the production manager for a $5,000,000 corporation formed by Louis Meyer. Bennie says the story is not ready yet.

June Mathis vacation four days —one for each year she has been with Metro. This is her first vacation since accepting position with this firm (something sounds familiar in that last sentence).

Bob Brunton has added a 500 acre ranch to the facilities of his commercial studio which he may [illegible] to use for the overflow of producing activities from his 22 acre spot in Hollywood.

The co-stars of the Ince lot are not getting along. Doug MacLean said Doris May would have to reduce after he had carried her up a flight of stairs for four takes and congratulated himself they were not in for a long engagement at Sapho.

John Flynn brought a fancy bag of pretty golf sticks to the Coast and since arriving he has been so busy he has not had time to inquire where a course is. John has a reputation of doing nothing but work.

Tom Gibson comes out with a bold statement in pica typewriter type which tells of the arrival of a daughter which has been named Roma Walsh Gibson. The daughter is said to be red headed, and Tom admits that his hair is turning white.

Charley Meredith, who just came off the speaking stage to be leading man in a Brentwood picture, is reported to rise at seven, take a plunge, visit the barber, breakfast at eight, read the paper over his second cup of mocha and be at the studio at nine; such is the life of a film actor.

Hokum has received a letterhead which reads, "Robinson & Cook, Specialty Advertisement Publicity, 1400 Broadway," and above we see in small unassuming type the name of Ralph D. Robinson, the former director of publicity for Metro West Coast Studio. Here is our well wishes.

H. H. Van Loan met Hayes Hunter; the first H. H. said, "You are directing for Zane Grey Company?" The second H. H. replies "yes," whereupon the first H. H. said, "Will you ask Mr. Zane Grey if he wants some good stories? I'm just going home to dash off one now." And thus a peaceable conversation was ended.

Max Karger is a truly democratic supervising directory, for the other day he put on the grease paint, went in and did a bit, and yes, induced Mrs. Karger and Frederick Karger and Baby Mary Ann Karger to serve as part of the atmosphere for a circus picture scene, "One-thing-at-a-time O'Day."

Thos. H. Ince, on being interviewed this week, urged the theatre managers throughout the country to give credit to the authors in their newspaper advertising and publicity and thereby aid in building up another asset for the motion picture theatres all of which sounds reasonable and I am sure will be O. K.'d by every scenario writer of the industry. Tom's right ear should burn continuously from now on.

Hugh Ford came back to the Lasky studio with his hands all cut Monday morning and explained he had landed two tuna at Catalina, one weighed only 76 pounds and the other tipped the beam at 78. Hugh insists that the two hour struggle with Mr. Seventy-Eight required more team and concentration work on his part than "The Woman Thou Gavest Me." "In catching a tuna," he explained, "you write the synopsis, continuity, direct the scene and edit it all at one time and it takes some lightning calculation."

Albert Glassmire, who writes pieces for the screen for Mack Sennett comedians, and diving girls, in association with Ray Griffith who wears a French moustache, calls our attention to a very peculiar condition. Glassmire's statement is that Mack Sennett's two-piece scenario department is ideally democratic in that it is a department without a pencil, pen or the model writing facility, typewriter. Furthermore, Albert adds we have no office or department, just works all over the lot and in the shade of the old apple tree on these hot days.

John Jasper reveals a very sad condition. John is building a four-unit commercial studio, the plans of which require four separate film vaults and of course four film vault doors with combination steel frames, etc. When he went to buy these doors he couldn't find any and then—discovery. Preparations for a wetless U. S. A. has taken up all the surplus stock of vault doors, the vault doors being placed in basements safely locking up valuable wetness. John could get no definite promise on deliveries except some time after the first of July when new shipments are received. This film industry is just harassed, and harassed, and harassed.

Bert Lytell claims members of movie colony could win nine events at the Olympic Games at Antwerp in 1920, and here they are:

One hundred-yard dash for lunch.

Eighty-eight-yard run after the "still" photographer.

Six-man relay, passing the buck.

One twenty-yard high salary hurdles (stars only).

Hop, step and jump (directors on a cloudy day).

Putting the "shot" out of focus (cameramen).

Throwing the custard pie, Greek style.

Standing high prices (open to Hollywood landlords).

Running broad bunk (publicity men).

Will Rogers has come to town.

Marjorie Rambeau is making Hollywood her summer home.

Marjorie Wilson is back at the Ince Studio.

Polly Moran is again in films with Mr. Fox's gang.

Madge Kennedy is giving the eastern Broadway the double O.

J. L. Frothingham is the G. M. of the B. B. features, but really he's mild mannered.

Howard Hickman is a little bit old fashioned; he is just recovering from the flu.

Harry Wulze has taken off the uniform and is now manager of the scenario department for Century comedies.

Bill Russell has not been in town for three weeks; now we learn the reason is he has been at Lake Tahoe.

Somebody wants Marguerite Fisher to cry in a picture and offers to write her a crying story. Don't let 'em walk out.

Bessie Barriscale finds but one thing to complain about in the making of water stuff; that is, that she does not like the water.

Enid Bennet is all fussed up because she is to have Milton Sills, Theodore Roberts, Irving Cummings and a lot more as her supports.

Helen Jerome Eddy has taken pity on the printers and reduced her name to just Helen Eddy. And these days of hurry we must have snappy names.

Gale Henry has been hit by the suffragette movement or at least is playing the part of a politician while hubby takes care of the children—in the present comedy.

Tom Ince made a lot of them swallow their mean sayings when he gave the Venice town dads $50,000 in cold cash for the first aviator who would fly the Pacific.

Bill Taylor is realizing the ambition of his sweet young life—he is making "Huckleberry Finn" with a cast of his own selecting. What could be sweeter.

John Flynn has gone east carrying with him a loving cup from the West Coast exchange boys. And you should hear what they say about John. His ears will burn for months.

Charley Chaplin was told by an English visitor that the Americans are so deucedly clever they can safely keep their trousers up without a single sign of bally braces and Charley agreed with him.

Charley Parrot has again threatened to discard that road louse and buy a regular car, and just then the trusts that be announced an increase of 1 cent on the gallon for gas and he changed the tempo of his check-writing hand.

J. H. Walraven has transferred his affections and press agent abilities to the Mayflower Film Corporation and is pounding out reams of copy regarding "Soldiers of Fortune" which will bear the name of Alan Dwan.

We know a press agent that gets extravagant with his terms. Every time he mentions a favorite character man he says "that star," which is unfair to the real stars and we can prove it by 'em.

L-Ko comedies are not to be laughed at in a few months, for we are told the name is to be changed to Century, but what we started to ask was who suggested the intimation that the comedies are to be one hundred years old.

The Ray family seems to be getting into pictures pretty strongly, Charley, Albert and Actinic Ray have been with us for some time, but now we learn that Marjorie Ray is in Century comedies wearing guns and a smile.

Francis Ford has built settings around his studio that give all the effects of shots taken in the Yosemite and so Hookum plans to send a representative to the Ford studio who will later visit the Yosemite just to see if these press agent yarns are correct.

We clip from a copy dated June 23d of a well known publicity writer, "strange to say this hot weather has not brought a request for beach stories as is usual—but then Vernon is not so far as the beaches," all of which is of the past ages, for this is July.

Now that Select has "Up Stairs and Down" filmed, Vic Schertzinger is making "Up Stairs" with Mabel Normand for Goldwyn, the question arises as to who is to make "Down Stairs," we don't know that there is such a story, but why not have one.

Doug McLean claims the only thing that saved him from tough luck on his second co-star vehicle with Doris May is the fact that the author added a half hour to the title "23½ Hours Leave," whereupon the inquiry arises are actors superstitious?

This life is just one — thing after another, but Clarence Badger is too polite to say so after working thirty-six hours straight he went home to rest and found a surprise party there for him. It was his birthday and Clarence was—but who wants to know the age of a director.

We are led to believe East India soldier costumes are scarce, for Park Frame Hampton director found five uniforms and turned them over to the casting department with the order "five men to fit these uniforms," all of which is said to be a great joke.

Every once in a while some fair being of the screen causes someone to break forth in song and all of which reminds us of what we heard Dick Willis warbling about Elinor Fair; it ran something like this: She is so dark and yet is Fair; She looks like Clara Kimball Young, but is not Young, but yet is young; She dislikes the wolf breed, but is content to be with a Fox; She is a bright little star, and yet likes to be opposite a Ray; She is a paradoxical young person, this Elinor Fair.

An usher told us that he heard a woman say to her husband as they were walking out of the theatre that these titles, referring to domestic bliss or blister such as "Don't Change Your Husband," "Why Change Your Wife" and "What's Your Husband Doin?" are getting entirely too personal. "I don't see why anyone's home life should be aired before a great big audience," she said, and we pass this along that some enterprising producer may secure her to write a new kind of drama that has nothing to do with the threadbare triangle:

CURLEY'S CHATTER

Say, tell me one thing: what is all this fuss about making stereoscopic pictures?—who wants to hold those glasses up to your eyes all the time you are in the theatre?

"Heard the other day the cinema theatres were going to raise their prices after July 1 because people would have no place else to go and it occurred to me that a dry bar on the mezzanine floor would increase the war tax. But why make more money when there is no place to spend it."

"Young America" Series to Be Shown July 1

Bloxbe Film Corporation, 1547 Broadway, announce that the "Young America" series, directed by Mr. Philip Van Loan, who also wrote the scenarios, will have a showing for the benefit of the press and territorial buyers at Wurlitzer Hall on Tuesday afternoon, July 1st, at two o'clock.

The idea, to portray in motion pictures the exploits of those who earned Distinguished Service Crosses and Congressional Medals in the now concluded war was conceived by Mr. Van Loan several weeks ago. The handicap that the leading characters are not professionals was overcome by the special care Mr. Van Loan has taken in the direction. The pictures are depictions of real life with comedy and drama intermingled, and, after all, as the leads had to act as they lived before and after their momentous exploits, as art should be a true portrayal of life.

Deals Consummated on Pioneer Features

One of the deals reported as consummated by the Pioneer special sales force during the past week was the sale of the rights of the "Sins of the Children" in the Louisiana and Mississippi territory to the Saenger Amusement Enterprises of New Orleans.

This sale bears out the statement made recently that none of the Pioneer attractions would be withheld during the summer months.

Another sale reported is that of "The Girl from Nowhere," featuring Cleo Madison and Wilfred Lucas, to the Apex Feature Film Corporation of Pittsburgh, for Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia.

"Bomb" Mormon City in Exploiting "Sahara"

Salt Lake City was "bombed" by three aeroplanes with advertising matter on "Sahara" as the missiles, on the presentation at the American theatre of the Hodkinson release.

This method of attracting attention to the production was taken by George Mayne, manager of the American on the occasion of the arrival in Salt Lake City of three aeroplanes to make test flights. Free tickets were also dropped from the clouds.

Equipment Service

News and Gossip in the Equipment World

We Hear a Report that a new machine to be called the National Drop Head Projector Co., is in process of development and will soon be ready for sale. As soon as it is definitely on the market a complete description of the machine will be printed for the benefit of our readers.

And What is this we hear about the Edison Super-kinetoscope coming back to its own?

If the reported influx of new and renewed machines continues perhaps the manufacturers of present standard projectors will have to look to their laurels. Perhaps!

The New Newman Theatre of Kansas City was officially opened on June 5 with considerable ceremony. Mr. E. M. Porter was present to break the bottle of spirits over the four special Simplex machines.

The Newman Theatre is said to be the best equipped motion picture house in the world—so far.

This can be ascribed to the cooperation between architects and equipment manufacturers. Yes, sir, the architects erred in laying out the Newman Theatre and provided for straight-away projection. Moreover the room was laid out in council with the manufacturers of the projection equipment.

Did You Notice the Ad of the newly developed Recticon of the A. R. Bullock Co.? Bob Burrows thought so well of the device that he left the National Lamp Works and went with the new concern. Bob says of the Rection, "It's a Wonder!"

The Brooklyn Strand is being pushed ahead to final completion. Max Spiegel's newest will be one of the wonders of the New York district.

Last Week We Met—Edwin S. Porter

When a man comes to occupy a position as high in industry as does Edwin S. Porter, he is generally thought to be the traditional type of hard-headed, cold-hearted business man. But not so with the subject of this sketch. Rarely have we met a man so enveloped by his daily stint and yet showing so deep an interest in the affairs of those around and under him.

Mr. Porter arrives at his desk in the morning, removes his coat, lights up a Pittsburg stogie (no twenty-five cent perfecto for him) and plunges into the work before him, consisting preferably of some new principle involving either mechanics, electricity and optics.

In his mode of living he is counterpart of Thomas Edison. Although whenever possible he retires at the stroke of two bells in the evening, he is often up again soon after midnight working enthusiastically on a new idea. Some of the latest developments in the Simplex machine have been the results of his midnight vigils.

There is none of the haughty employer about "E. S." He is more of a brother employee, working with his men and calling them by their first names.

Although his name is usually associated with the design of the Simplex projector, Mr. Porter's career has been most varied. As a director of producing he ranked with the country's greatest. On a pedestal in his home stands a beautiful loving cup and on it are inscribed the names of Adolph Zukor, John Barrymore, Daniel Frohman, Mary Pickford, Hazel Dawn, Hugh Ford, Pauline Fredericks, James Kirkwood and many other prominent actors, actresses and directors whose names are known and recognized everywhere. The cup was given to him at the time of his connection with the Famous Players Company.

We must admit that in a space of this size it is impossible to do justice to a man whose life has been so complete and whose work has been so varied. It can only be said that the name of Edwin S. Porter has been connected in some way with every marked advance in the fifth greatest industry

To which we humbly add, "But may she never flicker."

Will Smith has gone to Europe. The crowd at the dock to see him off included Messrs. Earl, Bell, Uhlemann, Bird and Abrams, all of the Nicholas Power Company. Mr. Smith's trip is to be one of pleasure interspersed with business. He will be away for an undetermined time.

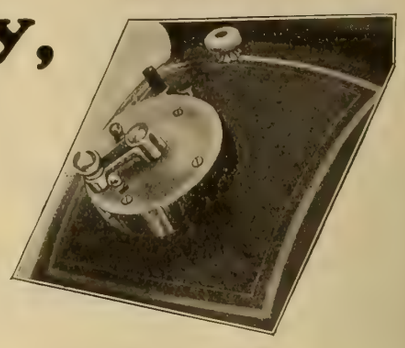
Here are our best wishes for his trip.

The Graphoscope Development Co. has lost one of its officials in the person of Mr. Lane, who recently left that firm to engage in other business. At the present time Mr. Lane is enjoying a vacation in Illinois.

His place with the Graphoscope has been taken by Major White, who before his service in France had been connected with the Graphoscope Co. of Washington for over ten years.

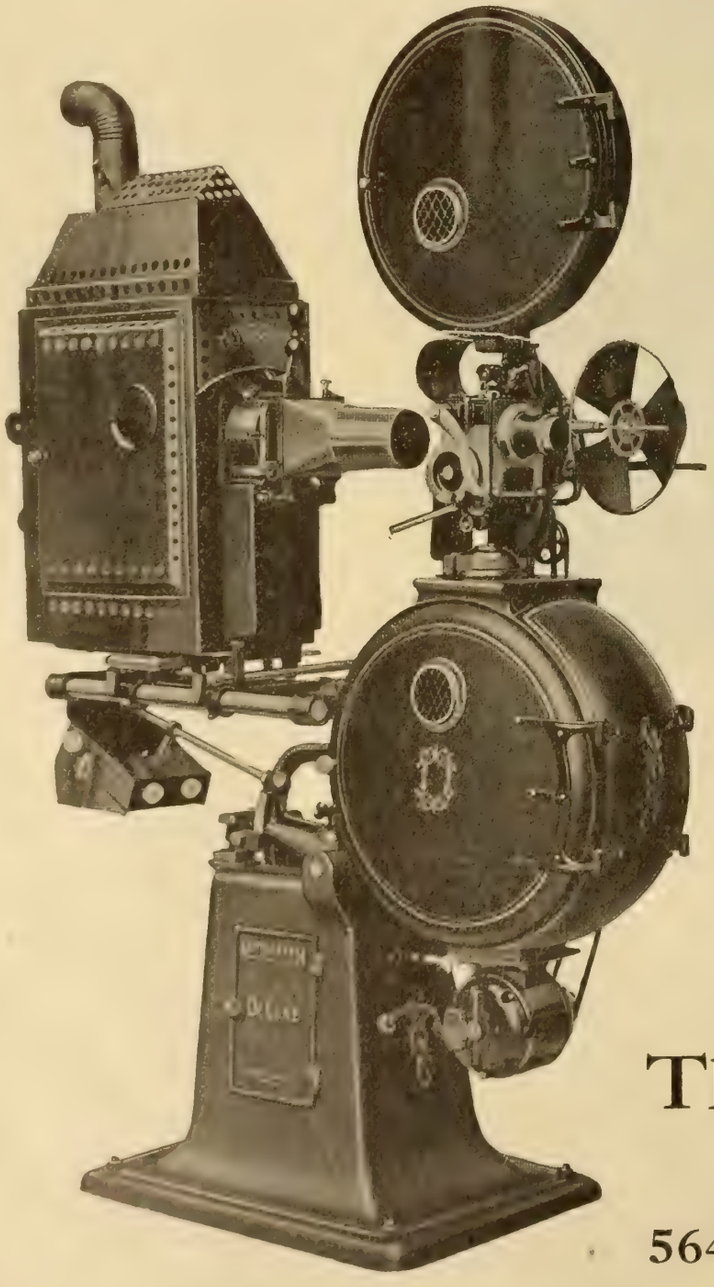
Convenience, Safety, Ease of Control

The De Luxe Instrument Board



One of the prominent advantages of the MOTIOGRAPH De LUXE is

CONVENIENCE, — EASY CONTROL, — READINESS FOR INSTANT USE



YOUR operator doesn't need to start in his booth prepared to continually remove the oil from his speed control to insure uniform speed; nor is it necessary to keep the shelves in his booth full of extra parts, fearful that some part of the Machine will give away without a moment's warning.

These things don't happen with a MOTIOGRAPH de LUXE.

You know the quality of the material used in the manufacture of a Motiograph—not a single die casting is used; the gears and sliding discs have never been known to wear out; speed control fully enclosed; no oil troubles.

Make the picture which you sell to your customers the very best—You can do it with a MOTIOGRAPH de LUXE.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

Requirements to Cover an Operator's Examination

By D. C. Burkholder, Oyen, Alberta, Canada

(Just how much should a Protectionist know about the equipment he is daily handling? Is it right to expect Projectionists everywhere to be equally well posted or should they be classified on the basis of their knowledge—and experience? In Alberta, Canada, they are being classified. Suppose you are now running in a city theatre, pleasing your manager and giving the place a good name because of the quality of picture you are showing. Then suppose you take an examination and are given only a small town license. Would you consider it a fair thing to do? We'll suppose again that the reason you fell down on your "exam" was because you were asked questions on apparatus which you had never had anything to do with.

This article expresses one individual's idea of what an examination should be, based on the present Canadian practice. Other readers will have other opinions. These pages are always open to discussions of this nature. Keep this fact in mind throughout the process of putting down your thoughts on paper: It isn't a question of how little or how much a projectionist should know. It is a question of what method of procedure would be best for the industry. That which is best for the industry will be best for the projectionists. Motion pictures cannot thrive without good men behind the projection machines. Neither can experienced and well versed projectionists arrive at the height of their possibilities without an industry to keep pace with their efforts.

Think it over before you write. There are two sides to the question. Then tell us what you think. Editors.)

PRACTICAL knowledge in PROJECTION is enough to run any picture machine, but does projection stop at this? Supposing you or I were to install a new outfit and were both experts in running a film through the machine, but never had the electrical experience, about all we could do would be to hire an experienced electrician. This would be easy to do in the cities where one would be available, but in a small town where nearly every picture has its own Light Plant to keep up, the projector would be up against it. In this case more than Projection is required.

A practical set of questions covers everything under all conditions.

In hiring an assistant he should have a practical knowledge of his surroundings and be able to take a first class examination at any time after an apprentice term. At no time should an assistant be left alone until he has taken the required examinations as a first class Projectionist. In case of sickness it's up to the management to look for a first class man who has passed as a head operator, which could be easily obtained from their local Operators' Union.

It's hardly necessary to go into detail of the entire optical system, but it would be practical to know something about it, as it belongs to your working outfit. Supposing you were wanting to know why your picture had a keystone effect or couldn't get the color out of your picture or your lenses were poor and the spherical aberration was to be tested to get correct lenses or your manager said: I want you to find out what the E. F. and B. F. of your objective are, not knowing anything more about them. How easy it would be to answer all this when one knows his optical system thoroughly.

A projectionist should be no other than a master of all he has to work with, and know the details of all forces of his electrical apparatus, the principles of his projection system, a general knowledge of motors, dynamos and lighting plants, a thorough knowledge of the machine head, its parts, movements and master of the arc under all kinds of current.

Our examinations in Alberta this year contained 100 questions. We were allowed five hours to complete the same. They were graded in two classes, first and second classes get city licenses and third class get small town licenses. The questions are about the same every year. I am informed that nearly all union operators pass first class.

In closing I will say at least six questions could be asked on public safety, twenty on handling of machine and lamp, thirty on electricity and ten on the optical system.

Wants S. M. P. E. Transactions

JOSEPH E. BLIVEN, of New London, Ct. says: I have been expecting to hear about the Transactions of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers which were to be off the press soon. If they are not all available now please send me some of them so that I can be studying them. I have been a member of the Anti-Misframe League since it first started, being No. 14, and there has been no cause for any film exchange to kick about the condition that they receive it back in. Some of them try to blame you for old prints that are in wretched condition when they leave the exchange, but I spend a lot of time in looking them over so it does not give them any cause for complaint.

I hope you will forgive this typing as it is my first offense.

May I look forward for the Transactions soon? Also send me some more stickers.

Answer: It takes some time to get the material together for one issue of the Transactions. We believe it is the plan of the Society this year to incorporate in the account of the meeting, the impromptu remarks and discussions brought out at the close of each paper. As you can easily see, this will increase considerably the value of the Transactions. As soon as the last issue comes from the press a notice will appear in these columns so that projectionists will know where they may be obtained.

We are sending you a new supply of labels. You have done good work, and some day, if not now, the exchanges will appreciate it. Do you use any form of report blank such as have appeared lately in the Projection Department, for returning to the exchange when films are received in poor condition? A report blank is an added protection for you.

Nothing the trouble with your typing. Come again.

A Small Towner Speaks—

FROM N. A. M. L., No. 858, comes this:

In the MOTION PICTURE NEWS of late issue statements have been made by city operators that the mutilation and destruction of film was due to the experience and carelessness of the small town crank turners.

In this connection I am sending you several clippings of film which was taken from the Mutual picture, "Hearts Asleep." These are in the worst possible condition, and in as much as this picture has only been shown in the large cities of Oregon, I would like to ask these wiseacres how they would explain this destruction.

This for a square deal for everybody.

Answer: The clippings were in the worst possible condition without a doubt. On strips several inches in length the picture was entirely obliterated by a black coating of some sort. Surely the condition of the film could not be blamed on its age, as it was very evidently of recent release.

This letter ought to get a few words from some of the champions of the "large cities of Oregon."

UNION NOTES

This Column for Your Use

SOMEONE a few weeks ago suggested having a column or even a page for news-notes affecting the M. P. M. O. unions, and we thought it a fine idea. The matter was taken up with the secretary of every local in the country in a letter giving our plans and asking for co-operation. Instead of getting an avalanche of items from all over the country the interest displayed was limited to a very few locals. But these few were enthusiastic and welcomed the offer to allot a space for the locals to use as they saw fit.

The apathy on the part of the remaining locals can only be ascribed to a "Can't bother" spirit. As far as the editor is concerned it isn't a question of filling the space as we always have more matter than can be printed. The gain would be on the side of the locals.

If Union Notes come in finally at such a rate that a column is insufficient we will gladly turn over a page for this purpose. When it is considered that there are about 150 motion picture locals in the country, it is easily seen that there should be no shortage of news items.

A good plan is to authorize one man in your local to prepare and send in a batch of news notes each month. In this way we can be sure that no local is being slighted at the expense of others.

This column—and page if necessary—is yours to use.

Los Angeles Isn't Dead

TECHNICAL EDITOR:

This is my first communication to your department, though I am a constant reader.

I would like to write this as an answer in your columns of Projection Department to a letter written by one person, namely, G. A. Goldie, as per his letter, seemingly an authority on conditions prevailing in Los Angeles.

I am a member and have been of Local 150 I. A. T. S. E. for the past seven years and usually when a projection authority arrives at our city he makes himself known and meets our boys here. I don't believe I've had the pleasure of meeting one G. A. Goldie.

As for scrubs working here, there are none in our organization that are not fully competent and reliable operators.

Due to our climate we have to contend with a few so-called floaters who come here for the sights, etc., and who work here (if they can) just to make expenses. These few so-called scrubs never make application in our Local or intend to stay—they call themselves operators—believe so in their own hearts—and take any operating position they can find; if not that studio life enthrills them and they try a whack at that, then they're on their way again.

Now these few men that do this are a detriment to the profession and to their fellow workers as well.

If they would confine themselves to the game and settle in some place himself and others would be better off.

I really think that we have as efficient lot of workers in our local as there are heretofore proven when some of our ablest and most widely known producers—men whose word and authority on projection is not questioned—pick our men to project his or their masterpiece, men whose territory is from the East Coast to the West Coast and whose eyes are always open to learn of or see something new in projection.

Mr. Goldie, how far did you investigate? When you are again in the City of Angels please make yourself known, and don't go away and then tell us how rotten our organization is.

Sincerely yours,

C. C. PIPER,

Local 150 I. A. T. S. E., Los Angeles, Cal.

Letters Tell the Story

SELECT PICTURES CORPORATION,
920 Main Street, Kansas City, Mo.

Gentlemen:

We have installed a new system of film inspection at our theatres. We are inclosing you a copy of inspection card that is given to each operator both at the Grand and Dixie theatres. This card is carefully checked after the day's running; one card is kept here, and one is sent back to the exchange. We are doing this to eliminate poor film inspection by the exchange. Now, we ask you to co-operate with us in this matter, and if at any time your inspectors find any features shipped back by the said theatres, Dixie and Grand, in poor condition, please notify us at once, as we are demanding 100 per cent. perfect projection. We believe that this will not only help our projection, but will do away with the punch hole fiends that are becoming so numerous in the State of Oklahoma.

Trusting that you will give this matter your careful attention, and will have your inspectors check over the features we are using according to our report, we are

Gentlemen:

We are attaching hereto a letter just received from the Grand Theatre, Cushing, Okla., which is self-explanatory.

We believe this idea a very good one, and would suggest your publishing it for the benefit of the entire industry.

Yours very truly,
SELECT PICTURES CORPORATION,
A. H. McLaughlin, Branch Manager.

Mr. A. H. McLaughlin,
Select Pictures Corporation,
920 Main Street, Kansas City, Mo.

Dear Sir:

We were very glad, indeed, to receive your letter of May 26, with the inclosed letter from the Grand Theatre, of Cushing, Okla.

An exact duplicate of this film report was published in issue of the NEWS for May 17, together with commendable comment.

What interests us most in your case is the fact that you, as an exchange manager, have the well-being of the industry so much at heart that you can see the good points in a report of this sort.

As you know, there has been a disagreeable lack of unity between the projectionists and the exchanges from which they get their films. Only too often, it is my opinion, that when a whole exchange is blamed for the condition of a film, the manager of that exchange would be very much pleased to learn the exact condition so that he could put his finger on the employee who is slighting his work. On the other hand, we believe the manager of an exchange should be equally diligent in ferreting out the projectionist who willfully mutilates film in one way or another.

Now, Mr. McLaughlin, it is our opinion that exchange managers have had far too little to say on this subject in the trade press. We believe that projectionists everywhere would be intensely interested in a communication prpared from the standpoint of the exchange men. Can you not find time to accommodate us in this respect?

Yours very truly,
TECHNICAL EDITOR.

"What's Your Occupation?"

SELDOM are these columns favored with the outpourings of a poetical genius. Letters are received in all languages, in all tempers, and especially in all the possible combinations of handwriting, and such letters are perused with pleasure. But a poem is an oddity—and a pleasure to receive as well.

The communication below came in at the tag-end of a sultry day and we felt after reading it, that, as the author-poet says, "The effect was marvelous."

The poet, if we were to name him, would be instantly recognized as one of the best friends of the Projection Department. As he prefers to cloud his name by false (?) initials we have no other way but to respect his wishes.

EDITOR PROJECTION,
MOTION PICTURE NEWS:

DEAR SIR:

With the coming of the Spring and Summer, green grass and flowers come also, and sometimes poetry (?), also the heat, which alters the brain when operating in a small booth. Therefore this wild attempt to tell the "operators" of the Royal Theatre at K. C. how to become "chief operators." First they must get a job where only one "operator" is required and then repeat the following lines ten times every day for one week, or until they really believe it.

"What's your occupation?"
And it hurts to tell the truth.
Just a movie operator
Working in a booth.
I hate to think of this position;
Just twist and turn the crank,
Besides, think of my ambition
To be a man of rank.
A better title—let's see;
Operator or operatorist,
Janitor or amputator,
Projectionator or projectionist,
No, it must sound greater,
Or my thoughts will turn to grief.
Ha! I've found the real solution.
I'm the only guy, "The Chief."

(Apologies to Edgar Allen Poe and Goldberg).

The above must be said with deep feeling and in the solitude of the projection room. The effect is marvelous, especially in the summer months.

The Written Truth

EDMUND McD. BENDHEIM, a projection engineer of New York City, shows that he has a correct grasp of the situation confronting the present-day projectionist. His letter is full of thoughts that have often been in all of our minds, but never so well expressed.

Read it and, whether you agree or not, give us your idea of the conditions and the way to correct them.

TECHNICAL EDITOR, MOTION PICTURE NEWS:

In the past two or three years that I have been reading the NEWS I have noted from time to time comments both in your editorial columns and otherwise on the question "What Ails the Motion Picture Industry?" The answers and advice have come thick and fast and from all sources with the exception of one—and, to my way of thinking, one of the most important, and competent to know and advise—namely, the Projectionist, or plain Operator.

This silence is probably mainly due to three primary causes, which in the final analysis can be traced back to the attitude of the exhibitor end of the industry. They are, first: The inability of the average operator to express himself intelligently; second: the lack of enthusiasm shown for his work; third: the absence of respect for himself, work, or employer.

Of course, how any sane man can expect another to have the above qualities under the conditions which the great majority of exhibitors

A Steady, Noiseless Light Source

Two of the great advantages of WESTINGHOUSE MAZDA LAMPS for motion picture projection are steadiness of light source and the absence of all noise.

There is no flickering, sputtering or sudden change in the light.

When the lamp has once been focused, it requires very little further attention, thus enabling the projectionist to give more time to improving the picture on the screen.

Furthermore, the WESTINGHOUSE MAZDA LAMP does away with all carbon dust and fumes.

There are now on the market motion picture machines especially designed and made for MAZDA Lamp projection, as well as special equipment for adapting carbon arc machines for use with MAZDA Lamps.

have made, are making, and will make, passes my understanding. Why a man is expected to perform miracles after being kept away from his family every day in the year for from ten to twelve hours of the best part of the day, compelled to work under unsanitary, unhealthy surroundings, with poor equipment, little assistance, and less facilities, is beyond my reasoning powers. How a man can be expected to respect, like, or take an interest in an enterprise or its owners with such treatment, and in addition when the employer considers him a combination gorilla, bum, thief, and sometimes Union robber; and how such conditions will lead to a well regulated, smoothly run organization, is also not plain to me.

No matter how poor, or how fine the story, production, players, and all the rest may be 75 per cent of the final results—good or bad—depend upon the operator. And what does the average exhibitor want from an overworked, nervous, discontented, unhealthy, unobliging, surly, ugly, and often underpaid man?

To alter these conditions costs money. Much money, and the general run of gentlemen in the business have the idea of entering with a "shoestring" and leaving in a year or so with about several "millions" at the least. Most of them have been failures in other lines. They know little, and care to know less. Their aim is not to stabilize the business, by giving the public value in return for money spent, and being satisfied with a fair return on the investment, but rather is typified by the following expressions: "Gyp others before they gyp you!" "Get away with murder whenever you can!" "Always put one over on the other fellow!" "Anything will do as long as we get away with it!" "Those suckers who have got wise to our ways, and been taught, will be replaced by others not so wise, and more patient ad infinitum!" It is natural to understand that there are exceptions, but they only prove the rule.

Even considering the foregoing facts, it has always been a riddle to me that steps were not taken to correct conditions. In discussing these matters with others I have never been able to make them understand why one of the most important parts of the exhibiting end of the industry was left to the advice of every one in the business except the operator, and the design, supervision, etc., to some chance busy-body friend of the owner. I am not one who thinks that an operator knows it all. He can take advice from others, even from those outside of his line, and he can make profitable use of it. The fact, however, remains that he should have supervision and final say in these matters. It is a well-known fact that "the proof of the pudding is the eating thereof."

There is no reason at all why a man cannot make above the average brick, if given straw, no matter how poor the clay may be. Given facilities for general and emergency use, an incentive to use ingenuity in preparing and overcoming difficulties, a willingness to make an employee contented, an interest in the health and well-being of the man, and this business will become solid and substantial, and not as it is today in reality, "fly-by-night," despite all the splendor, bull and camouflage.

This letter is due to my coming across a note from my friend, the late Mr. Alfred E. Corey, whom I had the pleasure of knowing very well, and who often urged me to put my ideas into written form.

I remain, yours for a substantial, healthy, and reliable industry, EDMUND MCD. BENDHEIM.

E. J. Lauste, who is known throughout European countries as the real father of the talking motion picture is preparing to place his invention on the market as a commercial reality. Mr. Lauste came from the Continent three years ago in the hopes of interesting Americans in his inventions, on which he has worked cotninually for 25 years. If at had not been for the war it is probable that his remarkable Photocinematophone would have been in actual use in many theatres by this time.

A Self Stopping Rewind

This is another of the Projection Room devices used by William Karzas of the Woodlawn Theatre, Chicago. The action of the machine is well represented in the drawing but a few words may help in describing how it works: It is evident that the spring which furnishes the force required to open the single-pole switch must be adjusted after trials tod be sure that its pull is not great enough to overcome the pull in the other direction after making a few changes in some of the details produced by the friction of the strip of belting riding on the pulley.

To start and set the rewind, the motor switch is thrown and held in until the speed of the rewinder comes to normal. The pulley which rotates with the full reel exerts a greater and still greater friction on the leather belting which in turn tends to stretch and thus relieve the tension on the cord running to the switch.

As soon as the film runs off the right hand reel in the illustration the reel will stop because of the pressure of the belt on the pulley. This in turn will cause the spring to contract, and in doing so the switch will be opened, cutting off the current supplied to the motor.

The NEWS is always glad to receive descriptions of devices which projectionists have developed for their own use. Quite often, perhaps it is not possible for others to use the idea in the exact form submitted.

A Personal Word to My Brother Projectionists—

I have been through the mill and know all about the operating room troubles due to uneven and excessive film tension. You know this, too, and now I want you to know that you can cut out all this trouble by using my Even Tension Reel which I have successfully used in my own operating room for nearly two years before offering it to you. Tell the Boss it will pay for itself two or three times a year in the saving in lower sprockets, besides reducing other wear and tear. I give you my word as a Brother Projectionist that this is true. You will be amazed at the light, even tension. Just try a couple. They're guaranteed.

What Is a "Chief"? Read This and See

My Dear Sir: The letter signed by the "Operators, Royal Theatre," Kansas City, Mo., was a surprise to me and also afforded much amusement, for it showed that very reason why we have so many "operators" and so few "projectionists" in the game.

The modern operating room has at least two projectionists, and in some cases three, and there are at least enough competent men on the job so that the film is known positively to be in as near perfect shape as possible, long before the first show starts.

The members of the N. A. M. L. are NOT working against the Inspectors' UNION, they are working WITH it to secure the best results possible, and the inspector that is infallible does not exist as yet.

The fellow that doesn't take an interest in the condition of his film, is in the same class with the operator that rewinds his film and applies machine oil to it to keep the emulsion from sticking to the tension shoes of the machines, or else uses a tallow candle to remedy the sticking, both of which stunts are a back number idea that never has been worth while, and never can be.

If the Royal boys will admit that they don't know how to beat the emulsion proposition without the use of wax or oil, I will be glad to submit a device to them that I have been using for over three years, and have never known it to fail.

They ask what the "Chief of Projection" is.

I hope that Mr. George Mitchell, one of the oldest projectionists in their city, does not read that question. It would break his heart.

As I am holding down such a position with the H. H. Elliott Enterprises, I think that maybe I can speak with authority on the subject, and if they will look up Mr. Mitchell, he will tell them that we were the pioneers in the operating game in the Oklahoma country, and as we worked together many years ago, and also made good wherever we went, we must know what we are doing.

I joined the Elliott Enterprises over three years ago, and in my capacity as chief, I am required to be posted on where I can locate an operator in a hurry, what it will cost to throw in an emergency line for handling special lighting effects, what it is costing us for carbons, what condition our films are leaving our hands in, how many stops we had at a certain house last month, or maybe three months before, why did we have the stops if any. What condition is such and such a machine or motor in, how many hours has the tube at the "Queen" worked without replacement? How much have we at hand in the supply line, why hasn't the light plant notified us that they were apt to blow us up for current on account of changing up a transformer, instead of just shutting down without notifying us to cut in on the commercial line?

You might say, "Oh, all the operators can keep track of that!" but let me tell you right now that when the projectionist stays on the job for three to five hours at a stretch, he is supposed to REST, not chase over the string chasing trouble that has developed.

We have a few OPERATORS with us that had to be cured of trying to make a right-angle lamp out of a perfectly good Powers lamp, and didn't succeed, but get blamed near enough angle on the carbonholders to accomplish the stunt. The same operator was using a three-wing shutter on alternating current, and had his condensers in wrong side to, and also had corroded lamp leads and loose connections to the extent that he burned out a Lemon Arc Regulator and a Compensarc inside of five months, also burned out two motors in the same length of time. He breaks condensers as fast as he puts them in the lamp-house, and there is a bunch of carbon-stubs in the lamp-house until you cannot pull the lamp back far enough at times.

I once knew an operator in San Antonio, Texas, that tried to take the in-and-out of focus effect out of a film by tightening the tension shoes on the machine, and he also tried to tell me that it was wrong to use brass tubing on the panel-board of the rectifier, in the face of the fact that the Westinghouse Electric Company supplies brass tubes for just such a purpose, leaving it to the common sense operator to know enough to protect the primary side with suitable fuses.

That operator is not working in San Antonio now, and I will say to the credit of the San Antonio bunch, that they have at last got a bunch that are real PROJECTIONISTS, and are all delivering the goods, although I can name some theatres in that city that have to stand the picture machines on their head in order to reach the screen, which is ROTTEN, but that is not the fault of the PROJECTIONISTS. I also know that there are places in that city where they need some decent screens, but again, we can't blame the boys in the projection room.

No, Royal Theatre Bunch, there is nothing superhuman about the "Chief," but he's your best friend. He gets you what you want and assists you with your troubles, and whenever he sees where things can be improved on, he shows you, and he's sometimes busy all night to get a new motor placed or some extra wiring into shape, to make your work easier for you.

An example for you:

Before I joined Mr. Elliott, he would not have a rectifier in his theatre, knew that the tubes burned out in two or three weeks, made a lot of noise, were expensive to keep up, were a big expense at the start, etc.

After an OPERATOR burned out two current controlling devices, he told me to go to San Antonio and buy anything I wished, and so I went over his head and bought a 30 amp. rectifier, and he nearly fainted, but I stood my ground, and now he won't think of using anything but direct current again, and he saves money all the way through, but no one could convince him before. Now, he does not question any thing, but says to attend to it myself.

I could say more, but Brother Smith will probably tell him just how the war broke out, so this will be enough.

In closing, Royal Theatre Operators, how many of you fellows can take and develop and print your own stuff in the movie and slide line? I am sending with this letter, a sample of my work, showing the original negative, and will leave it up to Mr. Bragden to tell you whether or not it classes up with the best of them.

Yours for the best of the game,

PERRY J. SHERMAN.

Chief of Projection, H. H. Elliott Theatres.
P. O. Box No. 547, Corpus Christi, Texas.

Reply: If the letter you have just read isn't as clear a definition of a "chief of projection" as you've read or heard it is the fault of the English language. And Sherman knows what he is talking about, too. He didn't arrive where he is now through "pull" or "luck" but because he knew the game.

There are thousands of projectionists who believe that their present occupation holds out no prospects of advancement. They are quite right but why should they remain at their present occupation when there is an ever increasing demand for well-equipped projectionists to become "chiefs." The reason is plain. A too large percentage of men engaged in this occupation are not hustlers, a condition of affairs which they may have brought on themselves or have been forced into by their working condition.

A writer in a recent magazine gave as one of his maxims:

"Do more than you're paid for, if you want more pay."

In other words, do your work in such a way that your manager will place every faith in you, as Mr. Sherman's manager did. When a man begins to assume responsibility of this kind he commences to become of greater value to his employer. If the latter doesn't recognize his value be sure that some other manager will. The road to a chiefship is through work, industry, and Mr. Sherman's negative strip was a mighty fine piece of work and it surely does "class up with the best of them."

To the few who may not know Mr. Sherman we will say that he is Chief of Projection at the "Amusu" and "Queen" theatres, Corpus Christi, Texas. In his off hours he is a screen reporter for the Bray Studios, Universal and Pathe Weeklies.

What he does in his spare (?) time, we'll have to leave for him to say in another letter.

Pledge

AS a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

Guests Aboard the Idaho

The U. S. Idaho which has been designated as tthe ship to carry Dr. Pessoa, the President-elect of Brazil, to his own country has been equipped with Power's 6B Cameragraph and a plentiful supply of film for the entertainment of the guests during their return journey. Lieut. Cooper, who has charge of projection on the Idaho, entertained Mr. Edward Earl and Mr. E. E. deHart, presidentt and selling representative of the Nicholas Power Company on board ship a few nights ago. During the course of the dinner Lieut. Cooper took advantage of the occasion to speak in the highest terms of the class of projection accomplished by the Cameragraph.

The New Handschiegl Coloring Process Successfully Applies Natural Colors to Film

Some of the Best Coloring Work Seen in Recent Releases, the Result of This Process

FOLLOWERS of features were recently treated to an unusual offering in the presentation of Metro's "Red Lantern" and not the least effective part of this production was the color work used in many of the scenes. This coloring was carried out by means of a process recently patented by Mr. Max Handschiegl of Los Angeles. Besides its use in the aforementioned play this method has been used with equal success in several of the best known releases now appearing before the most critical audiences in the country.

Before describing the process it will be well to say a few words concerning the inventor. Mr. Handschiegl was for many years an expert lithographer and three color printer and it was while pursuing his work in those fields that he conceived the idea of applying the principles there in use to the coloring of motion picture film. Before much could be done it was necessary for him to develop a line of special machinery to accomplish the desired ends. Those who are at all familiar with the machinery required in the lithographic arts will realize the task Mr. Handschiegl took unto himself. But nothing stopped him until the process was fully developed and in commercial working order.

This in brief is the method he uses to convey to the film the natural color of the objects photographed. A pair of negatives is taken simultaneously of the same view by a single operation of a shutter and through a pair of complementary color screens. A positive is then prepared of all the views taken through one of these screens. This positive is then dye-toned with a dye having a color which is complementary to the color of the screen through which the negative corresponding to the negative was taken.

A negative is then prepared of the views taken through the second color screen, to which a transfer dye is applied. This negative will absorb this dye according to the light parts of the negative. The color of this transfer dye is complementary to the dye in which the positive was dye-toned.

The positive is now immersed in a solution to soften its coating of gelatine in order to render the gelatine capable of absorbing the transfer dye which has been applied to the negative.

At this point the transfer of color takes place. The positive which has been dye-toned and gelatine-softened, and the negative with its coating of transfer dye are passed through a special apparatus in perfect and firm contact. Of course it is vitally necessary that the chronological order of both positive and negative be coincident at point of actual contact. The two prints are held under pressure for a length of time dependent on the amount of dye it is wished to have absorbed by the positive. After this time has elapsed the two prints are wound on separate reels, the positive having passed through a drying mechanism meanwhile.

All this sounds extremely complicated and above all else expresses the many obstacles the inventor of the process was up against during its development. However the success of his invention attested by examples now being shown has served to take it out of the developmental stage into commercial reality. Mr. Handschiegl has installed his machines at the Sanborn Laboratories and there he will carry out the coloring of many projected film features. As to the capacity of his equipment he could not say for certain but according to his best belief the transfer method was approximately ten times faster than the stencil process, a feature of decided worth in itself.

Motor Generator Set For Studio Work

A THREE unit, 120-kw. motor generator set was recently purchased by the Robert Brunton Studio, Inc., and installed in the studio power house. The set was christened in true naval style by Bessie Barriscale on January 8, 1919.

This motor generator set is the second Westinghouse set purchased for the Brunton Studio. A third set of 300-kw. capacity is now on order. The action of these sets is simple. The alternating current is taken from the power line at three phase 2,200 volts, to drive the induction motor, which in turn operates the two 125-volt direct current generators. These sets will supply direct current for lighting the entire six stages now in operation. Mr. Walter Strohm, chief electrician for the Brunton Studio, had complete charge of the installation and is satisfied that the three-unit motor generator set solves many of the lighting problems of the studio.

The Title

By Peter Suau.

SOME films seem to be titled to give the idea that it is only done as a necessity and not as a part of the film. In the infancy of feature films when curiosity and not entertainment held the audience in their seats while they were served with 500 feet or so of flicker a slide written in wax pencil served the purpose. Then by degrees the film ribbon came into universal use but the full dignity of well written attractive headings were not even then fully realized.

The well equipped laboratory of today gives the title as much study and attention as the minutest detail of any part of a large production.

Some of the credit must undoubtedly be allotted to the vast improvements made in appartus during the last few years.

A first class camera, rock steady, is the first essential to obtain desired results. The camera returned from field or studio as useless for those purposes will not make first class titles.

While the frame line has about reached a standard there will be found a variance among cameras and often from old films to be reprinted, so that in making one's choice of appartus for titling work a camera with an adjustable frame line is desirable.

An outfit of the first quality—such as a Pathé is always dependable, but where the H. C. of L. steps in and takes command a careful choice of some other type of camera can be made and work turned out equal to any. To insure exactness the camera should be driven by an electric motor, geared down to the desired speed and then any quantity of title can be made without fear of any appreciable difference of exposure.

A camera with inside magazines with the driving mechanism on one side and the magazines and gate, etc., accessible through the other side of the case helps for simplicity of operation as the camera or motor does not have to be disturbed for loading or removing exposed films.

In addition, a focusing device which will prevent focusing with the loss of only one frame, while in itself not vital, yet will save many feet of film during the year and also time, as focusing can be done directly through the film. With this method a continual rearrangement of the film is unnecessary.

A fade-out adds attractiveness to titles and can be had at a wide range of prices. The Photo Cines No. 4 is equipped with an automatic diaphragm dissolve and can be adjected to operate for several different lengths of films and furthermore is supplied as a part of the camera. This apparatus has also an adjustable frame line easily changed to match any film which may come to the hands of the operator.

Static is a phenomenon of film due, it seems, to friction. To eliminate friction the film race should be made of metal, highly polished, a smooth even surface that will not retain dust to cause scratches. With properly adjusted springs at the pressure plate the film moves easily and evenly, free from damage and friction reduced to a minimum.

There are many cameras on the market such as the Pathé, Williamson, Prestwich and Photo Cines that meet the requisites of title making. The Photo Cines No. 4 is a reasonably priced camera, complete with all the refinements that are a necessity to the producer of today.

Big Business in Cameragraphs

The plant of the Nicholas Power Company, Inc., is a busy beehive these days. Everybody is on their toes taking care of the big demand for Cameragraphs. Mr. Lang, export manager, reports a large increase in the business of his department and states that many orders have been received for Cameragraphs for Mexico, Porto Rico, Spain and Latin America.

In the domestic department the demand for Cameragraphs is on the increase and distributors and dealers show great activity.

The various branches of the United Theatre Equipment Corp'n., have, within the last few days, made the following installations; 2 6B Cameragraphs to Charleston Electric & Supply Co., Charleston, W. Va.; 1 6B to Delite Theatre, Albany, Ala.; 1 6B to Bridgewater Woolen Co., Woodstock, Vt.; 1 6B to Town Hall, Edgartown, Mass.; 1 6B to Essex County Hospital, Cedar Grove, N. One Method of Cooling the House

HOT weather, the bane of the exhibitor of an unventilated theatre is coming. In a few localities in the north that are always favored with a cooling breeze the effect of summer heat on the box-office receipts is negligible, but in other places the exhibitor and owner looks forward to the days of July and August as his "slack time" by necessity.

This should not be so. Summer months are the months for restful enjoyment and as such should have no depressing effect on the attendance. The fault of the average house is the lack of ventilation facilities in order to maintain a restful and cooling temperature for the patrons. A theatre that gets a name for being cool even on sultry evenings need have little fear of a drop off in attendance.

There are several different systems of ventilation based on different theories of action. Some require that arrangements be made for the apparatus at the time the theatre is constructed. Moreover, the cost of such sets is practically prohibitive to the owner of a small theatre. Then there are other systems which are readily applicable both to the theatre under construction and the house already in operation. Of this latter class is the Typhoon Cooling System which is described herewith.

The Typhoon Cooling System is based on the same principle that applies to the person riding on a trolley car or in an automobile. By means of a comparatively large, many bladed, but slow moving fan, a large volume of outdoor air is drawn in at the screen end of the house and passed slowly over the entire audience to the exit at the rear. These systems are ordinarily designed with a capacity great enough to permit a complete change of air every minute or one hundred and eighty changes during a three-hour performance. This frequency of renewal will be found ample for conditions far worse than ever met by the average.

The fan or fans of the Typhoon System are placed on the roof of the house and controlled usually by a switch in the projection room. Very little attention other than the periodical oiling of motors and fans is necessary, which makes the system a dependable one and cheap in up-keep. For the usual installation the so-called Twin Set is preferable. This set consists of two fans on the same shaft and driven by the same motor. The air is drawn in between the two fans and discharged in opposite directions. From this point the air enters the theatre directly and being relatively cool, drops to the lower level and travels slowly to the exits provided for it. In some theatres are large but short ducts leading into the theatre while in more pretentious houses the air enters through grill work placed over the proscenium arch. Of course, the freer the openings the more efficient the system.

The fans and motors on the roof are enclosed in a specially designed fabricated pent-house. Although allowing the entrance of all air necessary, rain and light cannot enter. Typhoon Systems are extremely simple to install. The manufacturers ship each part carefully numbered to correspond with detailed instructions and understandable blue prints so that any exhibitor with local help can put in the system without trouble. Each separate procedure from the time the crate of material is received is plainly indicated and it would be difficult even for a beginner in mechanics to go far wrong.

Although as previously stated, the majority of fan installations are on the roof, Typhoon engineers have worked out plans for installing the set at any available place such as in an attic space on a peaked roof, in a vacant room above the auditorium and on the side of an outer wall.

The cost of operation is low, due to the small amount of power required by the slow moving fan. For the average theatre seating 700 to 900 persons, the sysem would not cost more than 40 cents an hour on the warmest and most uncomfortable of nights when the fans would be running at capacity. These figures are based on a power rate of 4c. per kw-hr. As will be readily seen this cost is practically negligible when it is considered that the theatre is thereby converted from a humid almost unendurable place to one of placid comfort and cooling breezes.

For winter time use, when only ventilation is needed the direction of rotation of the fans may be reversed thus removing the used vitiated air from the auditorium. Whether used for this purpose in the winter or as a cooling agent in summer the movement of the air is so slow and constant that there is never trouble from draughts. These are the principal features that have made the Typhoon Systems so popular and widely used in the theatres ranging from those with 150 seats to the largest playhouses in the country.

Theatre Illumination

BY M. J. LEVY

There is one important thing about the auditorium lighting that the architect must bear in mind, and that is emergency lighting. This usually consists of lights on double circuits which are placed on the walls in brackets, having one circuit controlled from the panel board in the box office, and another circuit controlled from the stage switchboard, the particular object being to light the auditorium sufficiently for a dismissal of an audience in case of accident.

Stage lighting today in principal is not very different from what it was years ago when gas was used. There is usually a foot light, a number of borders and certain spots. Formerly all foots and borders were controlled from a gas table which served the purpose a dimmer does today. We can now, of course, get effects that were formerly impossible. The footlight serves to throw light backward and upward and the borders throw light downward and backward on the stage. In addition we have pockets for strips and for spot lights for special effects. The stage equipment will vary depending on the character of the house. However, there are generally certain set principles covering the stage lighting which vary as a rule only in quantity. The cheap vaudeville house might have a footlight of simply white lights, and perhaps one or two borders of white lights only. The better class of vaudeville house will have a footlight of three colors with three or four borders, each of three colors, and in addition incandescent pockets either side of the stage, and from two to a half dozen arc or spot pockets. An equipment such as this will light the average stage.

The legitimate house, which will take any dra-?? dramatic production that comes along, can get along on a stage lighting equipment similar to that described for a good vaudeville house, but should be heavier, and adapted to special demands. Where extravagant productions are given, such as some of the musical comedies, the stage lighting is particularly heavy. A great many shows will require not only incandescent pockets of white only, but incandescent pockets in colors—white, red, blue, or green, or amber—sometimes three colors, sometimes four. They will also require a number of bridge pockets; pockets in the fly gallery, and equipment so that flood lighting can be introduced from the house or auditorium. The concert moving picture house requires a very heavy equipment.

The stage switchboard is practically the heart of the electrical installation. Architects little realize this, and usually provide scant space for it to function in. It seems to be the last consideration, and more is expected from it than from any other single item in the house. The first question usually put to me by an architect is "How much room will you need for the switchboard?" What he really means to say is, "How little room will you take?" When he is told, he usually begins to bargain. "Can it be put into a smaller space?" is his first question. He does not seem to realize that besides moving switches, the electrician has a great deal to do, and even the moving of switches requires room. In locating a switchboard it must be placed where the electrician can watch almost the entire stage. To get proper effects at the right time he must be able to watch for his cues. The slightest mistake in this direction will mar any show. Besides this, the architect must not forget that the electrician is only human, and should have comfortable working conditions.

The switchboard itself should be of the "dead face type," so as to be as safe as possible. It should have a sufficient number of switches so that the control of the lighting throughout both the house and the stage may be divided into units as much as possible. Of course, there is such a thing as going too far in subdividing the units of a house, but with the stage there is hardly any question. A switch should be provided for each color in the footlight, for each color in each of the borders, for each color in each set of pockets, and for the various pockets throughout the stage. It does not pay to skimp on the stage switchboard.

The remarks relative to the switchboard apply to the dimmers. Particular care should be taken to design these of sufficient capacity for the load they are to take care of. Dimmers are rather sensitive, they can do just so much and no more. They cannot be safely overloaded, and if underloaded, they will not properly dim. The dimming equipment should be placed above or below the board if not too large, and where there is plenty of ventilation, so that heat may be taken off as it develops.

No house is now complete, whether it be for legitimate or intimate drama, musical comedy, or any other purpose, without a picture booth. The utility of a room of this sort is fully recognized, and it is now used for spot and flood light purposes in houses that do not show moving pictures. Formerly the spot light operator occupied what was perhaps the most valuable seating room in the house, the front of the first balcony. Now, however, he is put in a booth, and does not disturb the patrons in any way by his presence.

The electrical equipment of the booth for legitimate houses should consist of a sufficient number of pockets of large capacity for spot and flood lights. In addition it should be provided with capacity for one or two picture machines, even though they are not required when the theatre is opened. The value of making provision for these machines is apparent to any manager who is suddenly called upon for excess current.

Of course, in a moving picture house or in a house presenting vaudeville and moving pictures, the booth is the main part of the building, and it should have in its equipment adequate provision for two or three picture machines, spot lights, etc. The architect should also be sure to provide direct current for the picture booth apparatus, and if direct current is not available from the regular lighting company's service, it should be provided by means of a transforming device of some kind.

An Example of Japanese Music for Motion Pictures

MR. MUSICIAN, how much Japanese and Chinese music have you in your library? The customary answer to this question is, "Plenty." I always accepted this answer as a solid fact until the Metro Pictures released "The Red Lantern," a Chinese extravaganza, starring the great Nazimova. Mr. S. M. Berg, the capable music arranger for Metro Pictures Corporation, was honored with the task of preparing the musical suggestions for this picture, and conclusively proved to me that this picture was one of the most difficult ones he ever prepared music for, because he found it to be nearly impossible to hunt up ninety minutes of Japanese and Chinese music. If a man of Mr. Berg's ability, with an experience behind him unrecorded by any other individual, considers it difficult to find ninety minutes of such music, I am prompted to say that Chinese music is really a scarce article on present day music counters.

Several days ago I met Mr. Jos. Samuels, Musical Director of "The Cafe De Paris" of New York, an institution offering dignified and refined entertainment which under the musical guidance of Mr. Samuels has established for itself an international reputation. In the course of the conversation, I related to Mr. Samuels that it would be a great thing if someone would concentrate on the subject of writing Chinese and Japanese music, because it is in demand at present. As an answer to the above statement Mr. Samuels produced a copy of a Japanese Composition, published by Sam Fox, of Cleveland, Ohio, which in my estimation is the best I have ever seen. As music editor of this column, I consider it my duty to acquaint my readers with its musical merits.

"CHU-CHU-SAN," by Jos. Samuels, is an excellent composition, and I earnestly suggest that every musician avail himself of the opportunity of obtaining copies through Belwin, Inc., 701 Seventh avenue, New York City, at specially reduced rates.

Dedicates Song to Alice Brady

JOSEPH W. STERN & Co. announce that they have dedicated "I Cannot Believe I Lost You," one of their leading hits for the coming season, to Percy Marmont and Alice Brady, conjointly. One of the officers of the music publishers' corporation saw recently "In the Hollow of Her Hand," in which Percy Marmont was the leading man to Alice Brady, and in which he has made his greatest screen impression to date, and was so favorably impressed with Marmont's work that he decided to dedicate one of Stern's forthcoming numbers to this sterling actor. When "I Cannot Believe I Lost You" was accepted for publication and marked for special featuring, it was decided that here was a fitting number to be dedicated to Marmont and Miss Brady.

Accordingly, the cover of this song—which will be published at once in a million copies and thus will be seen by approximately three million people—will carry a photograph of Alice Brady and Percy Marmont. In addition, the slides which are thrown on the screen while this song is being sung in the countless picture houses throughout the United States have been selected from various photographs of Marmont with Miss Brady.

This co-operative publicity will undoubtedly serve to increase the popularity of this eminent leading man of the screen, whose performances with Alice Brady, Elsie Ferguson, Geraldine Farrer and Marguerite Clark have already stamped him as a "comer" on the silver sheet.

Review of Latest Musical Compositions

1—"Flirty Flirts," by Sol P. Levy, a melodious intermezzo of exceptional musical charm and tonal beauty. Very practically arranged for orchestra, or as to make it adaptable for the smallest combination of instruments, as well as for grand orchestra. (Belwin, Inc., 701 Seventh Ave., N. Y.).

2—"Roses of Picardy," a melodious waltz arranged on melodies from Haydn Wood's phenomenal song hit. (Chappell & Co., 41 E. 34th St., N. Y.).

3—"Alabama Lullaby"—This beautiful song is a very clever arrangement of the popular melody "Swanee River." (Leo Feist.)

4—T. B. Harms have just published four dance numbers from the most popular musical comedy, "A New Girl," meeting with great success on New York's Broadway.

5—"Me-Ow," by Kaufman, a novelty number which on its own musical merits has become an overnight hit throughout the world. It is published for orchestra, piano and band. (Sam Fox, Cleveland, Ohio.)

6—"Sweet Siamese"—The fact that this number was written by the composer of the famous "Beautiful Ohio" assures its musical merits in every respect. (Shapiro & Bernstein, N. Y.)

7—"Tumble In," a new musical comedy composed by the great Friml, has just been issued by G. Schirmer, N. Y. The famous "Limbo-Land" one-step is an extract from this popular musical show.

Dedicates Song to Miss Talmadge

IRVING BERLIN, the song writer, has dedicated his newest composition to Norma Talmadge. It is called "The New Moon," and both the words and the music were inspired by Miss Talmadge's Russian story of the same name. The cover will bear an autographed photograph of Miss Talmadge, and there will be a display of this song in the windows of all the more important music publishing houses simultaneously with the showing of Miss Talmadge's picture.

"The New Moon" by Irving Berlin, is the fifth popular song to be inspired by Miss Talmadge this season. "Tears" by S. R. Henry and Frank H. Warren, dedicated to Miss Talmadge, is published by Jos. W. Stern & Co.; "San San" by Danny Nirella, was inspired by "The Forbidden City;" "Heart of Wetona," words by Sidney D. Mitchell, and music by Archie Gottler, is published by Leo Feist; and "Norma" by the same authors, is also published by Feist.

Something New Under the Sun

IN MOTION PICTURE NEWS issue of June 7, we distinctly mentioned that in our estimation, S. L. Rothapfel, former manager and director of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres of New York, is the only man who was able to create "Something New Under the Sun." But, June 12, during the annual convention of the Music Dealers of the United States, we were firmly convinced by Ed. P. Little, of the Sherman Clay & Co., music house, of San Francisco, Cal., that there are other things in existence which are "New Under the Sun."

He has drawn our attention to about twenty numbers which the Sherman Clay music house is publishing, and was able to also show the copies of these compositions, and after this short performance was over, we realized that their small catalog consists of a variety of music, which is indispensable to any musician playing for pictures. Their publications are, from a musical standpoint, of exceptionable merits, and we must confess that we have never seen a list of twenty numbers consisting of such a variety and useful possibilities as the Sherman Clay catalog.

We have often said that this column is devoted to the betterment of music for pictures, and its pages are here to render its readers valuable information, and living up to its tradition, we are herewith announcing the list of the musical compositions contained in the above catalog, and I earestly suggest that every musician avail himself of the opportunity of calling himself a possessor of same.

1—"Cairo," by Arthur Freed and Harold Weeks. An Oriental characteristic.

2—"My Waikiki Ukulele Girl," by Glick and Smith, an original novelty.

3—"Let's Start All Over Again," by Howard and Behim, a melodious waltz.

4—"Aloha Land," by Wallie Herzer, a Hawaiian characteristic.

5—"Roses at Twilight," by Herbert Marple, a beautiful waltz.

6—"In Old Japan," by Walter Smith, a Japanese characteristic.

7—"Let the Rest Have Dixieland, I'll Take California for Mine," by Billy Frawley, an original melody.

8—"Good Bye, Daddy Dear," by Ben Black, a fine concert number.

9—"Bring Back a Belgian Baby to Me," by Ben Black, a fine concert number of world renown.

10—"On the Beach at Waikiki," by Henry Kailmai and Sonny Cunha, an international success.

11—"Arabian Rag," By George Gould, a slapstick rag.

12—"While the Incense is Burning," by Walter Smith, a pathetic ballad.

14—"We're Coming Back to California," by Walterstein and Hogan, a fine concert number.

15—"My Oriental Rosebud," by Walter Smith, an Oriental composition.

16—"My Dream Girl," by Jim Schiller, an excellent concert number.

17—"Fair Hawaii," by James F. Kutz, a Hawaiian characteristic.

18—"Im Going to Hang Around Until I Make You Care for Me," by Frawley and Flanders, an original melody.

19—"What Would We Do Without the Girls," by Kohler and Fitzgibbon, a number of international renown.

20—"Lil' Liza Jane," by De Lachau, a number of exceptional musical merit.

21—"Aloha Oe," by George P. Howard, a combination of melodious waltzes.

Slides Illustrating Lisping Song

EXPLOITATION aids of real feature calibre are furnished on the next Paramount-Arbuckle comedy "A Desert Hero" released June 15. Among these is a series of slides illustrating the popular lisping song, "Sipping Cider Thru a Straw," which the music publisher, Joseph W. Stern, has dedicated to Fatty Arbuckle, the famous comedian. There are seven of these slides, each bearing a scene showing Fatty Arbuckle with his leading lady and each illustrative of two lines of the verse which are carried below.

Exhibitors who adhere to the practice of using illustrated songs will find these slides a welcome addition to their programs. The slides are some of the finest issued and are done in attractive colors. The scenes selected are notable for their humorous value and show the comedian in poses typical of his comedies. In addition to the seven slides containing lines from the song there are two others containing the different choruses of the piece and yet another showing Arbuckle holding up a placard announcing the title of the song and drawing attention to his new picture, "A Desert Hero."

The whole scheme is one particularly well fitted to exploit the Paramount-Arbuckle comedy inasmuch as the song itself is unusually humorous in its lisping lines, while he slides tie it up with the picture in neat fashion.

Through an arrangement consummated by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, if the exhibitor so desires he may get in touch with a Joseph Stern representative and secure a singer to render the song while the slides are being changed by the operator. Such artists are supplied free by the music publishers. If this practice is followed considerable publicity will be derived therefrom as the publishers are naturally desirious of securing all advertising available for the song.

" A Wonderful Night "

(Billy Parsons Comedy in Two Reels—National)

BILLY PARSONS has matrimonial troubles again in his newest breeze, "A Wonderful Night." He simply has no use for mothers-in-law, has Billy, and when his bride informs him that "mother" is coming for a visit, he digs up an excuse anent a business trip to 'Frisco. It is only camouflage on Billy's part, for his real reason is to meet a couple of lady buyers who are sportively inclined. And that's where the complications begin.

Wifey must see him off on the boat which gets his "goat," since he knows he is in for a healthy bath in swimming back to town. The bride, in the meantime, is entertained at a shady roadhouse by friendly neighbors, and Billy takes his buyers there to drink at the shrine of Bacchus.

The upshot of it all is, the place is raided, and Billy finds out that his story of the sinking boat is a figment of his imagination. But mother-in-law arrives in time to restore amicable relations. And Billy finds that his prejudice hasn't a leg to stand on for she proves to be his fair companion—the buxom buyer.

The comedy is of a refined character and like all of the Parsons brand it tells a story. It is a comedy of complications rather than character and is amusing every foot of the way. Mr. Parsons succeeds in scoring his points in his easy style, and his principals and ensemble are good funmakers. Wm. Louis Chaudet, who directed the picture, has kept it alive and has also mounted it in good taste. —Laurence Reid.

" The Great Gamble "

(Fifteen Episode Serial Featuring Anne Luther and Charles Hutchinson—Produced by Western Photoplays for Pathe)

A VIEW of the first two episodes demonstrates that "The Great Gamble" has a fascinating story with a real plot as its basis. A good reason is supplied for the fast action and many thrills furnished that should satisfy even the most blase elite audience which as a rule is not credited with liking the general run of serials.

As a "stunt" artist Charles Hutchinson has the nerve and ability combined with a rather agreeable personality and nothing appears too daring for him. Anne Luther is charming in the two roles and portrays the girl brought up in wealthy environments and the sister surrounded by criminals.

The cast is very good, the action fast and furious with the element of keen suspense, and the directing of Joseph A. Golden, who also wrote the story, reveals a thorough knowledge of what constitutes clever producing. The locations have been carefully selected and the "chase" incidents are realistically handled. Released August 3.—Tom Hamlin.

" Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement "

(Number Six for July—One-reel Educational)

RATHER a novelty all through is the Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement for July. This is the sixth of these single reelers distributed by Educational and the motion picture stars at leisure are presented in an entertaining and varied style. Elsie Janis, "honorably discharged doughboy," opens the bill and gives photoplay audiences an intimate glimpse of her Long Island home. And she also gives one of her inimitable impersonations—this time of Mary Pickford. Marguerite Snow and James Cruze, married in 1913, give all a brief glimpse of the big spots in their congenial married career with the third member of the cast added a year later. Then there is Clara Kimball Young trout fishing in California and she makes a charming fisherwoman. The Supplement sends them out with a laugh as it shows wild impromptu antics of Mack Sennett's bathing girl. It's an excellent and pleasing filler with any big featured picture.—Tom Hamlin.

" Pets and Pests "

(Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoon—Fox)

LITTLE JEFF and his tall companion, Mutt, are still unable to agree according to their creator, Bud Fisher. This time the cartoonist has made Jeff, a lover of the animal world, and the little man with the sideburns doesn't care whether the object of his affection is a quadruped, biped, or just plain fowl. He even has a soft spot in his heart for the slimy thing that crawls—namely the alligator.

Well to have so many freaks that squawk and squeal and grunt and crawl and fly and canter about the house makes poor Mutt considerably out of patience with his little "sidekick." The elongated fellow wouldn't mind the pets and pests at all if they stayed on Jeff's side of the house, but when they flock all over his person even to the extent of playing leapfrog on his head and nose, he says it is about time to give them the exit. And little Jeff is sent along too.

A comic cartoon in every sense of the word, with the freaks supplying most of the fun. The frog is the ablest performer, and he knows that Mutt's nose is a safe landing place in his flight through space.—Laurence Reid.

" You Are Fired "—with Wallace Reid

ONE thing people admire in real life is pluck. They like to see a man get what he is after. Their sympathies go to such men, and when he comes out the winner, they heartily applaud. The same thing holds true in pictures, which purport to portray real life. The hero of this one, a young wealthy man, wants the daughter of a railroad magnate; and she wants him, too. But papa will not consent, because the hero is only a young idler; he had never seen him do a day's work. And he is not slow in telling him so to his face. The hero, however, is not to be discouraged —you can't down a live spirit; so he enters into an agreement with the old man whereby he is to get the girl if he can show him he can keep working for thirty days without being fired.

The picture is based on the O. Henry story "The Halberdier." It is good all the way through. The scenes in the Bohemia cafe, in particular, are extremely funny; they also offer some thrills. Released by Paramount June 8. Length, 5 reels. P. S. H.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the current quarter arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of Motion Picture News which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to April 6, 1919.

"MEN, WOMEN AND MONEY"
(PARAMOUNT)

Ethel Clayton Shines in Cosmo Hamilton Story

"MEN, WOMEN AND MONEY" presents Ethel Clayton in another of Cosmo Hamilton's stories of society life. And since he knows his subject perhaps better than any of his contemporaries and writes of it more interestingly, his latest contribution to the screen will be accepted as one of the best things of its kind ever visualized. He is one writer who always strives to point a moral in his tales of the upper strata with the result that they aren't half as artificial as the titles would imply to the casual passerby.

It is a vital theme which is contained in "Men, Women and Money," and the author has embroidered it with well regulated humanities engendered from dramatic situations. He has drawn as his protagonist, a girl whose parents have sacrificed without stint, in order that she may have the things that have been denied them. After she travels the primrose path and suffers for it she is brought to an appreciation of parental sacrifice and love.

Miss Clayton, through her intelligent appreciation of the part, contributes mightily toward the picture's success. And Lew Cody, playing opposite, lends splendid assistance. George Melford deserves mention for his handsome production.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Men, Women and Money" is the title of the picture which comes to the ———— theatre on ———— with charming Ethel Clayton as the star. Written by Cosmo Hamilton and scenarioized by Beulah Marie Dix, it tells the story of a girl who has been reared for a life of social pleasures by parents who have sacrificed their health and wealth so that she may have an easier life than what they have been accustomed to. Which is a weakness in modern America with thousands and thousands of parents.

Marcel Middleton goes to New York and through her beauty and charm she is made the pet of a group of society idlers. For a time she is successful at cards, and when failure comes eventually, there is no way of dismissing her creditors except through the plan of raising checks on false securities. When these are returned marked "No funds," Marcel has to go to work as a model. Her sensitive nature is shocked over certain costumes she is requested to display, but one of her wealthy admirers is awakened to her honesty and character, and rescues her from her sorrowful plight. How she in turn is awakened to a realization of her aimless existence, how she finally responds to the love of her parents and the man who had found faith in her is depicted in a volume of rich and absorbing situations.

SUGGESTIONS

This picture should be advertised as a glimpse of the idle rich society life of a big city. It relates the adventures of a girl from the country who is drawn into the vortex of social gaieties, not through any desire of her own but because she is the victim of environments. Play up the fact that it presents the story of ambitious youth. Here is a girl who has not been denied a single thing to make her happy in the scheme of life. Her parents have sacrificed themselves for her. And she doesn't appreciate them until she has learned a bitter lesson.

Concentrate upon the theme or the situation mentioned above. Cosmo Hamilton's name might be used to good advantage, since he has built up a big reputation as a writer of society life. Your fans will remember him as the author of several Constance Talmadge pieces. The picture carries a rich appeal in its decorative beauty with special emphasis on clothes. Money makes clothes and they are worn here by Ethel Clayton and members of the cast in rich abundance. Tell your feminine patrons that they will have an opportunity to see the latest fashions. Then there is the star. Use photographs of her, especially those which show her bedecked in these lavish gowns.

PROGRAM READER

Marcel Middleton wasn't a vainglorious girl; she was only a victim of circumstances or environment, you might say. Her parents had simply made up their minds to make life a rosier thing for her than what they had experienced. Accordingly they sent her to college where she came in contact with girls of affluence.

A time came when she lost at cards with the result that she had to go to work as a model. By this time Cleveland Buchanan, a wealthy admirer, had found himself deeply in love and offered to make good her gambling debts and charge accounts. But she refused his generous offer because she had not learned to reciprocate the faith that he had in her. How she was awakened to an appreciation that all is not gold that glitters, how she realized the love and sacrifice of her parents, how she emerged from a social butterly into a woman of beautiful character, are events that are depicted dramatically and entertainingly in Ethel Clayton's new picture, "Men, Women and Money," which comes to the —— on ——.

CATCH LINES

She didn't appreciate what her father and mother had sacrificed in making life easy for her. She was only interested in society. And not being equipped with worldly goods she couldn't travel far. What happened? See "Men, Women and Money."

"GATES OF BRASS"
(KEENAN-PATHE)

An Interesting and Dramatic Photoplay

A DRAMATIC and thoroughly human photoplay amid scenes of hotel life in Southern California, with a touch of the desert also and a glimpse of circus life. The star has a typical Frank Keenan role, and the settings, continuity, cast and direction are up to standard.

The three-shell manipulator seeks higher game to provide for his one great love, the young motherless girl who later comes home to him from the distant school a finished social debutante. He promotes fake deals and cheats the father of his daughter's fiance. She does not believe her father dishonest until the great desert land sale, where many poor people are hoaxed. Then she leaves him and goes to Chicago after wedding her sweetheart.

A lucky deal made legitimately enables him to make restitution to all his dupes, but believing that his daughter would not visit him on this particular Christmas he entertains a bunch of saloon loafers, and the alcoholic excess combined with the great disappointment kills him, and the visiting daughter finds him dead.

While not pleasantly entertaining it is interesting and natural. Will undoubtedly draw well in all theatres where Keenan is a favorite and wholly satisfy the lovers of dramatic themes everywhere. —Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Frank Keenan comes to the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week in his latest dramatic photoplay, "Gates of Brass."

The Pathe people declare that he has one of the most sympathetic roles of his entire screen career. As Jim Blake, a three-shell artist and circus hanger-on, he determines to graduate to higher levels and becomes a promoter of fake stock and land deals.

His incentive is the young motherless daughter about to return from the distant school, a finished product. She was his great love and he wanted to surround his Margaret with every luxury. But when he cheats the father of his daughter's sweetheart he went almost too far.

Margaret believed her father and separated from her fiance. But later on when she found proof that he had cheated a lot of very poor people on a desert land deal she left her dad and after a reconciliation with her lover, married him and moved to Chicago.

The spirit of the father broke. In an effort to win back his daughter's respect he made restitution to all his dupes from the proceeds of a legitimate deal that paid him a fortune. He had never passed a Christmas away from his daughter and was sure that she would not be with him on the holiday.

So he proceeded to liquor up and entertained a horde of saloon loafers at his magnificent home. He gave them the silver and tapestries. When his daughter arrives a few hours later she found that the alcoholic excesses combined with his great disappointment had done for him.

This is pronounced an intensely human story with great dramatic reaches for the star and the ———— theatre management describes "Gates of Brass" as one of its best dramatic offerings of the season.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have this picture booked, the Frank Keenan following should be catered to in every line of your advertising. Especially as he appears in a typical Frank Keenan role. The circus atmosphere could be utilized in your lobby decorations, even to the three shells and the large cut-out of Keenan mounted in his circus wardrobe. Another lobby decoration could be placards advertising the great lot sale in the suburbs, a fake real estate promising atmosphere.

Try to get a special permit from your local three-shell game during the visit of whatever circus or carnival is about due. If you are determined to stir up some real publicity you might persuade some prominent minister or welfare worker to criticise the sheriff hotly. This can be done if manipulated rightly and will certainly cause a controversy with a laugh finish and no hard feelings. The tie-in is the final newspaper announcements stating that "Jim Blake" is portrayed by Frank Keenan in "Gates of Brass" at the ———— theatre.

PROGRAM READER

"Here's the silver, help yourself to the tapestries; have a good time, boys, my world is ended." Thus speaks Frank Keenan in the role of Jim Blake, the reformed tin horn gambler and real estate shark. He was entertaining the scum of the big city on a Christmas Eve.

His only love, his great love, his motherless daughter, had grievously disappointed him by not sharing the holiday with him. It was the first time since she was a wee small baby in arms.

It was a dramatic situation that confronted the daughter who came half-way across the continent that her poor old lonesome dad be not disappointed.

But she arrived too late.

All this is told with dramatic human interest in Frank Keenan's latest Pathe photoplay, "Gates of Brass," to be shown at this theatre next week.

CATCH LINES

Money came easily to Jim Blake, but his daughter had principles that cast a shower of cold water upon his methods. See Frank Keenan in "Gates of Brass" at the ———— theatre.

He passed as he lived, in a storm of wreckage. But you will have a great sympathy for him. See Frank Keenan in "Gates of Brass" at the ———— theatre.

"HAY-FOOT STRAW-FOOT"
(INCE-PARAMOUNT)

Charles Ray Stands Head and Shoulders Above Story

CHARLES RAY'S latest character study finds him again in his familiar portrayal of a rural bred boy. The part is no different in conception from dozens of others that have been his allotment, but his quality of individuality lifts it, embroiders it, so that it is a perfect expression of the thing it pretends to be.

His study is far above the story. In fact the latter is subordinated to permit the star to score his rural humanities. And score them, he does in the character of Ulysses S. Grant Briggs. From the moment that bedecked in his grandfather's uniform of blue he marches away to enlist, down through the time he is exonerated by his superior officers for rescuing a girl in distress, he holds the spectator's undivided attention.

The picture abounds with quaint humor and homely touches of rural life. The atmosphere is more suggestive of the Civil War than the lately deceased one. Spottiswoode Aitken gives life to a splendid type of '61. In all "Hay Foot, Straw Foot" is satisfying. Mr. Ray makes it so.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

On ——— of ——— week, Manager ——— of the ——— theatre will present Charles Ray, the Ince-Paramount star, in his latest photoplay entitled "Hay Foot, Straw Foot." This highly talented actor has had many delightful roles in the past and has created a distinctive type in his human sketch of the country boy, and it is only fair in saying that the character is more richly embroidered with every picture.

Here he appears as Ulysses S. Grant Briggs, who has been named after the famous general because his grandfather served with him in the Civil War. The war with Germany breaks out and young Ulysses is sent Godspeed when he enlists. To make him every inch a soldier, the old man dresses him in the uniform of blue that served him so faithfully during the days of '61. Thus he makes his appearance in camp. The monotony of barracks life is broken when a community show is given and Ulysses is called upon to demonstrate his powers as a magician. And he is some cheater. Advised to stay away from play actresses, he doesn't know what to do when he meets one. He weighs every question and asks himself—"Would Grant do likewise?" But love comes to him and he goes to the guardhouse. But he is exonerated and restored in the ranks with honor.

A quaint picture full of clever human touches embroidered with comedy tones. It interests throughout its entire five reels. Mr. Ray is given support by Doris Lee, Spottiswoode Aitken, William Conklin and J. P. Lockney. Jerome staged the production under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince.

CATCH LINES

He was named after Ulysses S. Grant and when war was declared between the United States and Germany his old grandfather sent him away in the uniform of blue that he had worn when he "fit" with Grant. Young Ulysses had made up his mind that he wouldn't do anything that Grant wouldn't do under like circumstances. Did he keep to his resolutions? See "Hay Foot, Straw Foot."

Charles Ray, Thomas H. Ince's wonder boy, will come to the ——— theatre on ——— in his latest essay of rural character entitled "Hay Foot, Straw Foot." It is not a war picture; it remotely suggests the late war. By all means don't fail to see it.

He was a rookie and his granddaddy who "fit" with Grant thought he would never make a great general because his feet got in the way. The old man told him to avoid "them there play actresses." But he went to the rescue of one just as General Grant would have done. You see, his name was Ulysses S. Grant Briggs.

The popular Charles Ray, than whom there are no better actors on the screen today in the delineation of rustic character, will appear on the ——— screen next ——— in his latest Ince-Paramount photoplay entitled "Hay Foot, Straw Foot." It unfolds a wonderful blend of comedy and pathos.

PROGRAM READER

Patrons of the ——— theatre will be pleased to know that Charles Ray, the greatest actor on the screen in the delineation of rural characters, will appear very soon in his newest Ince-Paramount photoplay entitled "Hay Foot, Straw Foot." Mr. Ray has delighted you in the past in the sincerity and understanding of his roles, and the manner he scored his comedy attainments, so it goes without saying that he will cast his old time spell in his unique drawing of a country boy who enlisted in the great war. He is Ulysses S. Grant Briggs here and he has been brought up to regard the famous general as the most wonderful man who ever lived.

Is it any wonder that he enlisted to do his bit with such a name. His granddaddy dressed him in the very uniform he wore in the Civil War and so he wore it to the camp. And his every move is actuated by the judgment that General Grant would have done likewise under the same circumstances. A wonderfully human picture and one full of quaint humor and charm. Mr. Ray is delightful and he receives excellent assistance from a well balanced cast. Be sure to see it.

SUGGESTIONS

Your advertising on this picture will suggest the character of the story which contains a faint war atmosphere. Don't fail to bring this out in any manner in which you exploit the film. The title is a good one and suggests all sorts of teasers for your campaign. It is usually identified with people who do not know how to march. The hero of this story is named after General Grant and naturally he has to live up to his name. But he is sincere about it. It occasionally happens that a youth named

"OTHER MEN'S WIVES"
(INCE-PARAMOUNT)

Should Satisfy an Elite Audience

A SOCIETY drama parading an elaborate array of full dress suits, tuxedos and evening gowns, with the villain forcing the heroine to become a vampire in order to live amid the splendor of the high brows. The high class rogue desired the wife of a newly rich man, and in order to enable her to win a divorce he must compromise the husband.

But Dorothy Dalton in the role of Cynthia Block, found she loved the husband, she had agreed to vamp, and jumps her contract. She finds employment in an office as stenographer, and soon manages to pay off a $6,000 dressmaking bill. In the end the divorced husband finds her and they are wedded, while the villain finds a year of married life was enough with the grass widow of his dupe. This is the story and it is well produced with a good cast.

This picture should draw best in a high class neighborhood house and satisfy the elite audience. The title and Dorothy Dalton may prove a drawing card in most first-run houses and make good as a picture. In a laboring class neighborhood there is no appeal in the picture as there are no real tense melodramatic situations or thrilling action.—Length, 5 reels.—Released June 15.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

When "Other Men's Wives" appears at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, Dorothy Dalton will be seen in what is described as a sympathetic role that fits her wonderful personality.

It is a Paramount picture produced by the Thomas Ince studio and based on the story by C. Gardner Sullivan. Miss Dalton as Cynthia Block, has been brought up in affluence surrounded by all the splendors that money can buy.

When her father passes away she finds herself destitute. Her cravings for the best environments that she has grown so accustomed to, augmented by the pressing demands of her many creditors, leads her to accept the monies of a scoundrel who induces her to attempt to compromise a husband whose wife he desires.

But she finds that during this process she has grown to love the husband of this other woman and in an intense scene she breaks away from her vampire bargain with the third party and determines to earn her own living in an honest way with the working class.

That she succeeds and finally wins her great love is told dramatically and entertainingly in "Other Men's Wives," Miss Dalton's latest starring vehicle under the Paramount banner.

CATCH LINES

She was pure and of refined antecedents, but she needed the money. And a great love saved her from her terrible bargain. See "Other Men's Wives" at the ——— theatre.

"Other Women's Husbands" were her prey in "Other Men's Wives," the Paramount photoplay starring Dorothy Dalton at the ——— theatre.

She was accustomed to the striking riding habits and the stunning gowns. And the love of splendor tempted her to become a society parasite. But the temporary vampire was the willing target of Cupid's arrow. See Dorothy Dalton in "Other Men's Wives" at the ——— theatre.

after a famous man never lives it down or up, but Mr. Ray comes up with flying colors and though he doesn't make a general of himself he does credit to his name.

Bring out emphatically that it is not a war story even though the title suggests it. The hero enlists in the war but never gets any farther than the training camp. Play up the atmosphere which smacks more of the Civil War than it does of the recent world conflict. Of course Mr. Ray will attract your patrons. He always does, we dare say. Bring out that he contributes his lovable character of the country youth. Another point—Don't neglect your musical setting. Use the old tunes of Civil War days. Boost Ray for all he is worth—he is a big favorite everywhere.

PROGRAM READER

Should she betray the man she loved for thirty pieces of silver? That is the question that confronted Cynthia Brock. And the man she loved was the husband of another woman.

And her creditors were pressing her hard. Should she be true to her great love and descend from the places of leisure into the drudge of a work-a-day world, or should she keep to the terrible bargain made in a moment of stress?

Dorothy Dalton portrays the role of Cynthia Brock in the Paramount Picture produced by Thomas H. Ince which appears at this theatre next week.

And "Other Men's Wives" is the title of this intensely human drama.

Her decision and her sacrifice of the temporary splendors bring her a reward of great love and happiness.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have this picture booked we will suggest an angle that can be used to great effect. It is the dress appeal to the women. If you have not used the style show idea before you might make an arrangement with some local merchant to engage several of his models wearing his gowns to use up about fifteen minutes of your stage or aisles every night. This is always sure-fire and the merchant bears the expense.

There are beautiful gowns worn in this photoplay. And striking riding habits. You can also dwell strongly on the well advertised trademark, "Paramount," and the star, Dorothy Dalton, as she has developed a following. And of course the title is a strong asset and should prove a card for you to emphasize in all your advertising. As Miss Dalton is a very attractive actress a cut-out of her from the poster in the largest size would assuredly draw attention in your lobby when mounted.

"THE MAN WHO WON"
(VITAGRAPH)

Harry Morey Is Conspicuous in Mystery Story

IT is difficult to put your fingers on the plot of "The Man Who Won" and unravel it so mysteriously interwoven are its melodramatic threads. Not until the fifth reel can one ascertain the idea behind it beyond the fact that the hero is painted in suspicious colors. Yet after the celluloid has run through its spool one feels somewhat disappointed to find that the author has had recourse to German spy characterization.

Mr. Brady might have constructed his tale with this factor eliminated and it would have scored as decisively. Yet this ingredient is mostly relegated to the background and in its place one finds an old fashioned mystery melodrama, wherein the elements of action and suspense are always dominant. The hero has traveled half the earth after a fortune of platinum, and it is the villain's purpose to obtain it for the powers of Wilhelmstrasse.

The only weakness in the structure of the play is that conclusions are arrived at too quickly. Mr. Morey has another of his virile roles. Maurice Costello is the sinister villain, while Betty Blythe is the pretty heroine.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Christopher Keene.....Harry T. Morey
Henry Longfield.....Maurice Costello
Barbara Le Moyne.....Betty Blythe
Seymour .....Bernard Siegel
Dempsey .....Robert Gaillard
Stevens .....Denton Vane
By Cyrus Townsend Brady.
Scenario by Edward J. Montague.
Directed by Paul Scardon.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Harry Morey, the virile Vitagraph star, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his latest picture entitled "The Man Who Won." This is by Cyrus Townsend Brady and gives Mr. Morey the role of an adventurer who has labored for years in collecting a precious metal. He is about to be rewarded for his efforts when he is struck down by a group of Maylays who are members of his crew. But they are killed in their attempt. Keene, as he is known, recovers consciousness to embark again on his ship though he is rescued at sea.

It is many months before he regains his faculties and he seems to prosper again when a new and powerful enemy is discovered camping on his trail. This man has dogged his footsteps to steal the platinum for the Imperial German government. And he poses as a member of the Secret Service. The latter is the fiance of the girl who had brought relief to Keene after his memorable tussle with the Malays. And when she tells the episode, Keene recognizes her. How he resolves to win her away from the German spy, how the latter attempts to discredit him with her, how Keene returns to his buried treasure only to be dogged again by his enemy, how he succeeds with the aid of the girl in overpowering the villain, and how finally love and fortune are his reward, makes a picture of extraordinary entertainment value.

Mr. Brady has constructed his story with a keen eye for melodramatic situations. The picture was produced under the direction of Paul Scardon. Mr. Morey makes a vigorous figure of the adventurer and receives capable support from Betty Blythe, Maurice Costello, and Denton Vane.

PROGRAM READER

Christopher Keene had traveled half the globe in search of the precious metal which was to make him fabulously rich. But he had enemies to cope with and it was fortunate for him that he knew how to protect himself when his mutinous crew attempted to take his life on the coast of Oregon. A girl found him unconscious on the beach but he soon recovered and set sail for parts unknown. Eventually he regained his balance and when he came to New York he discovered that he had a sinister enemy to fight—an enemy far more subtle and resourceful than the ignorant Malays. He also discovered the girl who had offered to help him on the beach months before. And when she told her graphic story the strange event came back to him.

But his enemy was the girl's fiance and this man made it clear to the young woman that Keene was a notorious thief. He also told her he was in the Secret Service. How did Keene fare? Did he win? Did he prove to the girl that he was honorable? What was his treasure? All these questions are answered with dramatic effect in Harry Morey's latest picture, "The Man Who Won," which will be shown at this theatre shortly.

Harry Morey, for years a Vitagraph star, who has signed again with that company

CATCH LINES

He had searched over half the world to gain this precious metal. And he had to fight every foot of the way. When fortune seemed to favor him at last, a powerful enemy attempted to rob him of his treasure. What was this treasure? How did he fare? See "The Man Who Won."

He defended himself successfully against the Malays but he lost his mind for a time. When he regained his balance a sinister enemy attempted to frustrate him in his plan to harvest a fortune. Did he win? See "The Man Who Won."

Though he traveled over half the globe, little did he know that his footsteps were dogged by a vicious enemy—an enemy who was after the fruits of his years of labor. Did the villain succeed? See Harry Morey in "The Man Who Won."

See the virile actor, Harry Morey, in one of his fighting parts in "The Man Who Won." It is a bang-up mystery story and it contains a world of action and suspense. Remember ——— the ———.

SUGGESTIONS

The greatest advertising point to bring out in this feature is the fact that it is a mystery story. Advertising should be molded on the form of one of the catch lines as far as word arguments go. Don't give away the plot because you would be robbing it of suspense, its strongest factor. Bring out that it serves to present Harry Morey in one of his fighting roles—the sort of role which tests his strength and endurance. He has established a big following in this type of play because he is in there trying every minute without any indulgence of mock-heroics. Stimulate the reader's interest in the character of the story—that it offers a well sustained mystery. Mention can be made of the author's name. He has contributed some big stories for Vitagraph. But also feature the star. Cash in on this by using his name in all exploitation matter.

"THE MAN BENEATH"
(ROBERTSON-COLE-EXHIBITORS MUTUAL)

Dramatic Photoplay That May Generally Satisfy

A DRAMATIC photoplay with scenes in Scotland and India and the "East is East and West is West" theme, with a side touch of the black-hand Mafia, and the Japanese star portraying a Hindu scientist. He loves the Scotch girl and the girl loves him, but, caste and racial prejudices conquer love, and their romance is ended.

A semi-happy ending is provided, however, by the girl's sister, who weds the young juvenile, whom the Hindu scientist saves from the hands of the Mafia to which he had affiliated himself in his more tender youth. Continuity, sets, direction and cast are very fair, and while not an entertaining story, it will generally satisfy.

This will naturally draw best in those houses where the Japanese star is a favorite, and will please those audiences as it is a typical Hayakawa role, with the story and theme they are accustomed to expect from this star and his producers. The appeal will be about the same with both the elite and first run audiences as it will be with family, popular and labor crowds.—Length, 5 reels—Released July 6.—Tom Hamlin.

THE CAST

Dr. Chindi Ashutor.....Sessue Hayakawa
Kate Erskine.....Helen Jerome Eddy
Mary Erskine.....Pauline Curley
James Bassett.....Jack Gilbert
Countess Pepite Florence..Fontaine La Rue
Francois .....Wedgewood Nowell

Story by Edmund Mitchell.
Scenario by L. V. Jefferson.
Directed by William Worthington.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Sessue Hayakawa, the noted Japanese screen star, appears as a Hindu scientist in his next Haworth production scheduled at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

"The Man Beneath" is the title and it is described as an intensely dramatic photoplay with many thrills. The love interest as shown is between East and West, the twain that met; the Hindu scientist and the lovable Scotch lassie.

In the role of Dr. Chindi Ashutor, the Japanese star portrays the likable Hindu who permits himself to love the girl of the Caucasian race. And Kate Erskine loves the scientist in return. And he shows his great love for her by rescuing her sister's juvenile fiance from the black hands of the Mafia.

The young man had journeyed to India to escape his persecutors who demanded that he keep the plegde made in his unsophisticated youth, and kill a certain judge. Dr. Ashutor takes ship with the young man bound back again for Scotland and by trickery manages to elude the black hand pursuers temporarily by giving the young man a treatment which produces the appearance of death. He was apparently dead and buried at sea.

The real tense moments come when the pursuers find that the Hindu has tricked them and the Countess stabs her Mafia colleague in a fury and is discovered by the Hindu.

While the Hindu's romance is shattered by the final refusal of the girl who loves him, and whom he loves, he accepts in very good grace; content that he has brought some happiness to the family by returning her sister's lover safe from any more fear of the black hand.

PROGRAM READER

The twain met. East met West and West met East. And they loved with a great human love.

Caste and radical prejudice was the big stumbling block. Should the Scotch lassie make the great sacrifice for her Hindu love. Or was it a greater sacrifice to let him go back to his own in India.

These are some of the intense problems confronting a pair of lovers in "The Man Beneath," a Haworth Photoplay coming to this theatre next week.

And the star is Sessue Hayakawa, the noted Japanese screen artist. He appears in the sympathetic role of the Hindu scientist who loved and apparently loved in vain. But did he love in vain?

Was not the world better off that this great love existed twixt East and West? A dramatic romance of sacrifices and thrills.

Sessue Hayakawa in "The Man Beneath," the Robertson-Cole picture through Exhibitors Mutual

CATCH LINES

East loves West and West loves East in "The Man Beneath" at the ——— theatre.

The twain met, loved and conquered in spite of caste and race prejudice in "The Man Beneath," at the ——— theatre.

The "black-hand" is thwarted by the Hindu, portrayed by Sessue Hayakawa, in "The Man Beneath" at the ——— theatre.

SUGGESTIONS

Hayakawa is your best bet if you have booked this feature. He has the name that should be emphasized the most strongly so that whatever following the Japanese actor has should all be brought into your theatre. Also mention the fact that he does not appear in a Japanese role this time but successfully portrays the sympathetic role of a young Hindu scientist.

For your lobby the turbans of the Hindu should be easy to secure for centerpieces amid the descriptive matter and scroll work on your one-sheet frames mounted on easels. And another lobby flash that should be attractive would be a large mounted cut-out of the Hindu figure with another large mounted cut-out of the white leading woman, side by side. Have the card on the woman read: "West is West" and the card on the man read: "East is East." The large card overhead covering both figures should read: "This twain meets in 'The Man Beneath,' at this theatre next week."

"HOME WANTED"

Madge Evans Appears in Familiar Child Recipe

A FAMILIAR recipe has been used to serve Madge Evans' youthful personality. Take some dessert in the shape of pastry and use it as the foundation; then add a portion of dramatic meat—or rather a substitute for meat—and you have a seasonable dish—one in fact that has never failed to prove palatable to the patrons, hungry for juvenile literature.

The dessert—to continue the figure of speech—is found in the sentimentality of the plot and characterization plus spontaneity and humor derived from the aforementioned elements. The meat of the drama is contained in the melodramatic interludes which are incorporated to balance the obvious development of the sentiment.

And so it is that the young star is seen again, "a little child shall lead them." She runs away from an orphanage, cures an old ogre of his temper, plays cupid to a pair of romancers, and eventually finds the "mother" she has craved for in her loneliness.

A bright little picture which somehow keeps you constantly interested through its humanities. Miss Madge is delightful as always and she has a creditable company.—Length, 5 reels.—Released June 30.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Madge Evans, the little star of World Pictures, will make her appearance at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her newest photoplay entitled "Home Wanted." The picture has been produced under the direction of Tefft Johnson from a story by Lucy Sarver, and little Madge gives a sincere and charming performance as the orphan who runs away in search of a mother.

She takes Spotty, a freckled youngster, with her, in her investigation of the big house across the way. She believes her beautiful mother to be there. But she finds instead a gruff old ogre by the name of Major Amesworth, who resides alone with his valet, Pierre. The Major had had trouble with his family years ago and the event had turned him into a man of considerable temper. Madge takes him out in his wheel chair and it runs away, carrying the old army officer down a steep hill. He is rescued by Dick Washburn, a physician, who brings him around on the road to recovery.

Dick, incidentally, is engaged to Letty Thompson, a charity worker, and Madge's Good Samaritan. It happens that as Dick is administering to the Major he comes across some evidence that establishes the old man as his father. So Madge acts as Cupid and peacemaker. And all is well in the big house and the little girl finds her "mother" in Letty.

A pretty picture full of sympathy and appeal. Naturally it contains a deep note of child interest. There is no question that it will send every onlooker away completely satisfied. The play is well cast and mounted.

SUGGESTIONS

If you are in the habit of running the Madge Evans pictures you know pretty well how to exploit them by this time. They are excellent neighborhood pieces and never fail to draw a family patronage. So in this picture be sure to bring out its appeal to the mothers and children. Symathy is its keynote, and it is engendered here through the star, who appears as an orphan who wants a mother. Concentrate upon this idea. Bring out that she scatters sunshine wherever she goes and also plays the role of Cupid.

Use stills of the little star plentifully and mention her name and the other leading players, Jack Drumier, W. T. Carleton, Anna Lehr and Hugh Thompson. You can run a feature story or two about the star and what she has done on the screen. As the picture concerns an orphanage, you might run special matinees for orphans, providing of course there are orphanages in your city. Any kindergarten, too, would come in handy on the matinee idea. Use catch lines around the title. It is an attractive one and can be used to advantage.

PROGRAM READER

At the ——— theatre next ———, World Pictures' child actress, Madge Evans, will appear in her newest photoplay, "Home Wanted." This little star can always be depended upon to furnish a splendid performance, and Manager ——— is safe in saying that she is as entertaining as ever in her latest picture. She is an orphan, is Madge here, and she looks hopefully into the future when she can have a mother just like all the girls who visit the orphanage. One night when all is still and dark, Madge and Spotty, her chum, steal out of their rooms and enter the house—the big house across the way. She is certain that her mother is there. But she is no sooner inside than she meets an old ogre in the shape of Major Amesworth, who is leading a lonely life with his gout and valet.

How Madge scatters sunshine where only clouds had previously passed, how she waves the magic wand of youthful love and cures the old gentleman of his temper, how she plays the role of Cupid, are events that are delightfully told in this charming little photoplay. The star is supported by a cast of well-known players, among whom are Anna Lehr and W. T. Carleton. Be sure and bring the children.

CATCH LINES

She was a lonely orphan and when she looked at the big house across the way she dreamed in her youthful fancy that her beautiful mother lived there. So she ran away and entered the forbidden house. What did she see? See "Home Wanted."

She wanted a home other than an orphan asylum. So she found a Good Samaritan and her dream was realized. She not only found happiness for herself but for everyone with whom she was acquainted. See "Home Wanted."

He was a gruff old gentleman and he hated himself and everyone else. But when he met the little orphan he became a different man. You see she knew how to handle him. Come to the ——— theatre next ——— and see the screen's leading child actress, Madge Evans, in "Home Wanted." And don't forget to bring the children.

"THE CHALLENGE OF CHANCE"

Melodramatic Western Should Pull Strongly

A MELODRAMATIC fast moving photoplay of virile activity along the Rio Grande with Mexican settings and hordes of wildly galloping horses mounted by reckless riders; well staged battles between rival Mexican forces, and several well directed gang fights with the big fellow displaying his knockout power.

While the star is no Lord Chesterfield or Beau Brummel, he perfectly typifies the role in which he is cast; the husky Texas rancher. The cast is quite mediocre excepting Albert Hart, but the story is neat with a consistent continuity. Outside of a duplication of scenes in one spot (which can be remedied) this picture can be branded as a wholly satisfactory melodramatic Western picture of fast action with a slight love element. The ensembles all show exceptionally good direction by Harry Revier.

This should pull strongly anywhere, but, of course not so strongly with the elite audiences. It will certainly satisfy any sort of an audience and thoroughly entertain those who are drawn into the theatre with the primary idea of seeing Jess Willard in action. And he does not cheat. There is plenty of it.—Length, 5 reels.—Released June 22.—Tom Hamlin

THE CAST

Joe Bates.....Jess Willard
Fay Calvert.....Arline Pretty
Charles Burr.....Albert Hart
Bob Edmunds.....Lee Hill
El Capitan.....Harry Van Meter
Produced by Fred Wilke for Independent Sales Corporation.
Story by Roy Somerville.
Directed by Harry Revier.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Jess Willard, champion pugilist for so many years, appears as a regular motion picture star in "The Challenge of Chance" scheduled to appear at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

In the role of big virile Joe Bates, a Texas ranch foreman and horse buyer, he is said to perfectly fit the picture and is in the midst of the many fights and thrilling action all through the five reels.

Joe Bates resigns as foreman of a ranch and accepts a position as horse buyer for Charles Burr of El Paso. En route he witnesses a man treating a horse very brutally and knocks him out. A gang of Mexicans tries to rush the big gringo but he beats them up very scientifically, although he misses his train by so doing and also loses track of the pleasant little passenger he had met, Fay Calvert.

When he accepts his position he finds that his new boss was the man he had whipped the previous afternoon. He meets the girl again and Miss Calvert tells him that this same Mr. Burr had turned her out of his office when she demanded the money due on her late father's string of race horses now across the Rio Grande in Juarez, Mexico.

Joe Bates' daring in crossing back over with the string of horses carried him victorious through battles between rival Mexican forces, gun battles and fist battles, and club fights, with hundreds of melodramatic thrills described by the producers, is declared to have brought audiences to their feet in many cities. Reckless Wild West riding and picturesque Mexican scenes are said to intensely interest.

And Joe Bates wins his own ranch while the young lady made happy by the recovery of her money, weds the young juvenile trainer of her race-horses. Jess Willard is said to be in action in every one of the five parts of "The Challenge of Chance."

PROGRAM READER

Punch was what he put into all his business dealings. He was the typical Texas ranchman and was simply trying to protect a pretty little easterner from getting the worst of a deal in the race-horses left to her by her father who had but recently passed away.

And his championship of the young girl's cause led him across the Rio Grande into Mexico. He was caught between two armies. He was set upon time and again but in a thrilling race with the string of horses in his charge he manages to elude all the enemy factions and emerge victorious on the United States side of the stream.

It seemed for a while that all Mexico was fighting the big Texas gringo but he gave blow for blow. For Joe Bates, the heroic Texan role in "The Challenge of Chance," which appears as a big five-reel feature at this theatre next week, is portrayed by the great American fighter, Jess Willard. See him in action.

Jess Willard in "The Challenge of Chance," the Independent Sales Corp. picture

CATCH LINES

Jess Willard fights his way successfully through hordes of angry Mexicans in his big five-reel feature, "The Challenge of Chance," at the ——— theatre.

He was a stalwart Texan and she was a charming little easterner. And he stampeded an army of Mexicans for her. See Jess Willard in "The Challenge of Chance" at the ——— theatre.

Joe Bates was a man of few words but many flying fists. In the five-reel photoplay appearing at the ——— theatre, Jess Willard plays the role of Joe Bates in "The Challenge of Chance."

SUGGESTIONS

If you have this picture booked remember that regardless of whether Jess Willard wins or loses the Toledo bout he is still Jess Willard, the man who held the heavyweight championship of the world so many years. You can therefore safely count on the co-operation of the sporting departments of the newspapers. For a lobby display several sets of boxing gloves on one side of a banner with muskets, knives, etc., on the other side of the banner will attract attention, especially if you have the banner worded to read: "See which weapons are the most effective in modern warfare. Jess Willard routs the Mexicans in the big five-reel feature, 'The Challenge of Chance.'"

Sporting goods stores and hardware stores that deal in sporting goods can be induced to arrange a display of their sporting articles in the windows with a one-sheet figure of Jess Willard advertising that "The Challenge of Chance" is at your theatre.

To prevent the general public from believing that this is merely a portion of a news-reel it is advisable to always mention that this is a five-reel feature.

"THE LONE STAR RANGER"

(FOX FILM CORP.)

Zane Grey's Story Looks Good with Farnum

ZANE GREY and William Farnum have proven before that they are an unusual combination when it comes to providing screen entertainment. The impressions which they have planted in the mind of the average spectator still endure. So it is that they are right in their element as entertainers in "The Lone Star Ranger."

Mr. Farnum has one of those fighting characters in the title role—the sort of character that almost seems as if it might have been conceived with him in mind. And how Zane Grey has given breath and detail to it. And how the star embroiders it with his virile personality. His physiognomy expressed in his determined jaw and with a steadfastness of purpose visualized in his eyes, you know that he will not fail to accomplish what he has set out to do, which is that of stamping out villainy above the Rio Grande.

The picture is rich in fast moving action and unfolds an element of real suspense. In fact aside from an occasional indulgence in heroics, the subject is a compelling one. It also offers an appeal in the picturesque scenery. Mr. Farnum's players are thoroughly in character.—Length, 5 reels.—Released June 29.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

William Farnum will make his appearance at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in "The Lone Star Ranger," which is an adaptation of Zane Grey's vivid story of the same name. The Fox star has portrayed a number of this celebrated author's characters on the screen, but it can safely be said that never has any of them so closely approximated his personality as the role of the ranger, Steele. It almost seems as if Zane Grey had Mr. Farnum in mind when he conceived the character. And the latter makes the ranger a big, human fellow whom you will take to your hearts the minute you set eyes on him.

He belongs to the Texas rangers, does Steele, and when his captain is killed from ambush he resolves to tackle the outlaws single-handed. While in search of their stamping ground he encounters a couple of rustlers who are about to kidnap their chief's daughter, not knowing of her relation. Steele rescues her and as a reward her father offers him a position on his ranch. And the ranger jumps at this opportunity as it puts him in close proximity to the camp of the outlaws. Cyrus Longstreth has long been desirous of quitting his vicious "rustling" business but his henchmen will not consider it. A time comes when Steele rides out to capture the leaders dead or alive and he gets them all but the ringleader, Longstreth. He is placed in an embarrassing position when he discovers that the girl he loves is the daughter of the chief outlaw. How he gets out of his predicament is told in an absorbing climax.

The whole picture abounds with tense situations—the sort of situations that you have come to expect in the Farnum pictures. How Steele accomplishes his task when things look desperate for him is revealed in a story that throbs with action. Mr. Farnum receives capable support. J. Gordon Edwards directed.

PROGRAM READER

Patrons of the ——— theatre will be pleased in the announcement that William Farnum will appear here shortly in "The Lone Star Ranger," a pictorial version of his well-known story of the same name. It is a tale of that picturesque band of horsemen who roam the plains of the great Southwest in order that the communities may be safe places to live in. Steele, as Mr. Farnum is known, has the reputation of being the most fearless ranger north of the Rio Grande.

And when you see him start out single handed to take the vicious rustlers dead or alive, you know that you are in for an hour of tense dramatic action—the kind of action that is always associated with Mr. Farnum. He is cool as a cucumber in his appointed task. Yet he has to be for bullets are deadly, whether they are fired by desperadoes or not. It is a great, big Farnum picture—the kind that you always expect from him. His name, coupled with that of the author, spells a rare hour of entertainment. Splendid support is given him and the action is embellished with remarkably picturesque scenery. Don't miss it.

CATCH LINES

"I always get my man!" Can't you hear Bill Farnum say that? This sterling actor, big of frame, big of heart, comes to the ——— theatre next ——— in Zane Grey's powerful story of the Southwest, "The Lone Star Ranger." Of course he appears as one of the intrepid Rangers. Does he beat the rustlers?

It meant death to a ranchman to voice his suspicion of a cattle rustler. But Texas has its rangers and when you see "The Lone Star Ranger" you will see how Bill Farnum worked single handed in routing the rustlers.

In which a Texas Ranger worked single handed to drive outlawry from the great Southwest. See "The Lone Star Ranger"—it is a vivid and vital story of the Mexican border, told in Zane Grey's eloquent language and superbly acted by William Farnum and his players.

SUGGESTIONS

You have a number of vital points in the exploitation of this picture. Firstly, it is an adaptation of Zane Grey's famous story of the same name. Surely you are acquainted with his fame as one of our leading authors of today. He knows his Southwest and writes of it vividly. So be sure to play him up big in any advertising you do. Doubtless you have played Farnum in other Grey stories, and so you have something tangible upon which to work. Mention that this picture is the latest Grey subject to reach the screen. Secondly, there is the star himself. Certainly he has a considerable following.

"A LITTLE BROTHER OF RICH"

(UNIVERSAL)

Adaptation of Patterson Story Is Mild

JOSEPH MEDILL PATTERSON'S "A Little Brother of the Rich" looks quite emasculated on the screen—emasculated in the sense that its risque suggestions have been trimmed down because of the censors who loom up in the offing. Therefore it does not make quite as interesting reading via the silver sheet. Mr. Patterson in his book conveys a striving for the socialistic millenium, and this note is missing in the photoplay.

It starts off auspiciously, but before the screen journey is half over one encounters two distinct plots. It merely presents an incompatibility of temperament between two small town characters, the girl taking the road that leads to the stage and fame, and the man dipping into Wall Street and oblivion. The picture doesn't carry much sympathy for either character since there is no heart interest involved.

While it is adequately staged with appropriate settings, still the thought arises that Lynn Reynolds is more at home in the great outdoors. His artistic brush looks out of place with interior decorations. The picture only skims the surface and seems somewhat artificial despite the earnest endeavors of the cast.—Length, 6 reels.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

The Universal picture, "A Little Brother of the Rich," will appear at the ——— theatre next ——— with an all-star cast that includes such capable players as J. Barney Sherry, Kathryn Adams, Frank Mayo, Lily Leslie, and Jack Gilbert. It is an adaptation of Joseph Medill Patterson's sensational story of the same name which created such a furore when it appeared a number of years ago. And it is said to be a picture which will be equally remembered with the story.

It concerns an ambitious youth who is money mad and who gives up his sweetheart because she is unable to wear the mask of the social butterflies. He is happy with her until she visits him at Yale. Then he compares her with the beauties from the city, and the country girl is found wanting in grace and charm and CLOTHES. She releases him from his promise to marry her and sends him Godspeed into Wall Street—the place he has selected to make his way in the world.

Misfortune visits her father and she is compelled to go upon the stage. But where Paul finds life a dull monotony in his social whirl and the failure of his marriage, Sylvia takes up life with enthusiasm and soon emerges with a name and fame. She is responsible for the rescue of her teacher and eventually finds wealth and happiness. And Paul comes to grief as do all worshippers of money who put it above honesty, love and character.

A powerful picture in every sense of the word, and one that should be seen by every film lover. It abounds in startling situations and unfolds a number of dramatic climaxes. The picture is handsomely mounted. It was produced under the direction of Lynn Reynolds.

PROGRAM READER

Paul Potter was the captain of the football team at Yale. He hailed from a little Indiana village. Back there, Sylvia Castle waited for the day of his graduation when she would become his wife. The senior promenade was on and Sylvia was invited to attend. But when Paul discovered that the other girls were fashionably attired while his betrothed wore a simple frock, he became disillusioned. The sensitive girl realized her shortcomings and released the young man of his promise. And so he plunged into Wall Street while she went on the stage. Fortune didn't come to him rapidly, and his marriage with a society butterfly proved a dismal failure. Sylvia, on the other hand, prospered and her fame was spread broadcast throughout the land. She was the means of rescuing the man who taught her the art of acting from the curse of drink.

What happened to these young people? Did they ever see one another again? Was Sylvia happy? Did Money prove a curse with Paul? Did it bring him happiness? These questions are dramatically answered in this adaptation of Joseph Medill Patterson's story, "A Little Brother of the Rich," which comes to the ——— theatre very soon.

Kathryn Adams in "A Little Brother of the Rich," the Universal picture

CATCH LINES

He may have been a little brother of the rich, yet she was a little sister of the poor when her father died penniless. These young people were betrothed but when she came to visit him at Yale, he became disillusioned. You see she was from the country and didn't know much about fashions. What happened to them? See "A Little Brother of the Rich."

Joseph Medill Patterson's book, "A Little Brother of the Rich," has been adapted for the screen. It makes as vital a picture as a story. Don't fail to see this pictorial revelation of how money proves to be a curse.

She didn't shine with the false lustre of his other girl friends. She realized it and released him from his promise to marry her. He took a flyer in Wall Street while she went on the stage. Which one fared the better? See "A Little Brother of the Rich."

SUGGESTIONS

Emphasize the fact that this picture is an adaptation of Joseph Medill Patterson's powerful story of the same name which came out a few years ago and created such a topic of conversation. Interest your readers in the salient points of the story, that money is a curse, that false pride is a curse, that no man can find a substitute for the simple things of life. Bring out that the story proves that houses are built on sand when love is not generated. Ambitious youth is found in the characterization. The hero

"SECRET SERVICE"
(PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT SPECIAL)

One of the Really Big Pictures

A WONDERFUL screen production of William Gillette's stage drama of civil war times portrayed by an exceptional cast, expensively and accurately mounted, remarkably well directed, and with a smooth running continuity that brings out all of this forceful and intense story in all its well known details.

Considered by the reviewer as one of the really big pictures of the year from every standpoint. The tense situations brought out so strongly in the stage production are made just as rich in dramatic perfection on the screen.

This picture should draw strongly with the elite, first-run, popular, family and labor audiences and should wholly satisfy and bring them back for more. It is worthy of longer runs than the average good photoplay.—Length, 5 reels.—Released June 22.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Major Robert Warwick is the star in the Paramount-Artcraft special screen production of William Gillette's famous stage success of Civil War times, "Secret Service," which appears at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

The hero finds himself in a desperate situation when he attempts to betray Richmond into the hands of the Union army, and is saved by a southern girl who loves him.

However, all who ever saw William Gillette in the stage play, or saw "Secret Service" played by a stock company, know that this is not a war play with shot and shell screaming, etc.

It is described as a tense human story of a few people involved in a network as a result of secret service as performed in the closing days of the Civil War.

A dramatic theme in every sense of the word. The star as a northern spy in the southern city is forced to see his own brother killed rather than own up to the relationship which would betray himself and the country's cause. But the love between the southern girl and the northern officer was strong enough to bring them together again in the following days of reconstruction after the fall of Richmond.

In the supporting cast are found many favorites. Wanda Hawley, beautiful and talented, is Edith Varney, the heroine, playing opposite Major Robert Warwick. Others in the cast are Theodore Roberts, Raymond Hatton, Irving Cummings, Casson Ferguson, Edythe Chapman and Guy Oliver.

PROGRAM READER

Duty came before love with this man. He took the risk of losing his life and love both rather than lose his honor or betray his country's cause.

And it seemed for a while as if the lover and sweetheart were forever doomed to be as far apart as the North and South Poles. For such was the bitterness between North and South during the closing days of the great Civil War.

He was a northern officer in the house of this charming southern girl. And the scene was Richmond just before its fall. He was a spy. But when he was captured her heart spoke more strongly to her than her love of country.

The man's path led to duty and the girl's path led to love. There are tense moments in the drama made famous on the American stage by William Gillette.

And "Secret Service," the big Paramount-Artcraft screen production, is coming to this theatre next week. Major Robert Warwick has returned from France and is the star.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have this production booked your best bet is to harp on the many big names. And you have a big list of drawing cards. The fact that the trade brand of both Paramount and Artcraft is so widely advertised should prove doubly a puller when you let them know that this picture is a Paramount-Artcraft SPECIAL. And then the title is familiar as a stage play to two generations. Who has not heard of or seen "Secret Service?" And the name of William Gillette, the author, is another card. And don't forget that Major Robert Warwick is just returned from France and has quite a following because of his past stage and screen successes. And Wanda Hawley, Theodore Roberts, and the balance of the cast have their respective followings.

Special stunts would be out of place and unnecessary. If you use your lobby filled with war stuff you will hurt the business. Just use all the big names and emphasize that it is not a shot and shell war play.

CATCH LINES

His own brother was shot before his eyes but he had to stoically deny the relationship. See "Secret Service" at the ——— theatre.

So feature him in big type and electrics. Mention the story as a revelation of the great Southwest when Texas rangers were put to much trouble in stamping out bandit life of the plains and border towns.

You might concentrate upon the big plot situation wherein the hero finds himself between the devil and the deep sea in capturing the chief outlaw inasmuch as the latter is the father of the girl he loves. Play it up as a big, throbbing picture—one that is full of punch and action. Make mention of the scenery and atmosphere. And don't neglect to advertise the director and the players. Your patrons know them.

"ONE-THING-AT-A-TIME-O'DAY"

Clever Comedy Story Well Produced

A PLEASING comedy based on the experience of a quaint youthful character who joins a circus to win the cute little bareback rider. This clever story is well produced and rich in humor, with many pleasant thrills, a love element, plenty of laughs in the last three reels, after the producer has successfully planted the character in your mind, and a final punch that should send them out laughing heartily.

Bert Lytell gives a finished performance and his support is very good. The many circus scenes, the automobile incident, the chase and the fight are the high spots.

This picture should draw best and register heaviest in the elite and first run houses in any sized city. It should pull strong in the popular and family theatres and delightfully entertain. And there is no reason why it should not draw good in the labor-audience-theatres also and please thoroughly.—Length, 5 reels.—Released June 23.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Bert Lytell is coming to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his latest Metro picture, "One-Thing-at-a-Time O'Day," the William Dudley Pelley story published in the Saturday Evening Post.

"Stradivarius O'Day" is the burdensome name attached to the star in his role, and he also carries with him a persistent determined policy of doing just one thing at a time. Comedy situations galore are the net results.

This ambitious youth leaves the farm to join a circus because of the pretty bare-back rider whom he is determined to win as his bride. The "strong" man of the circus wants the girl also and throws Stradivarius around like a foot ball. One of the things at a time that O'Day then decides upon is to be able to whip the strong man. And he hires a trainer and does a beautiful job.

He even learns to run a Ford car by the aid of a book. And he can make it buck up and almost talk before he gets through with it. All this fast action, romance and thrills fills five reels of amusing entertainment and laughable comedy situations.

Bert Lytell is generally recognized as one of the most natural screen actors and it is reported that this part fits him like a glove.

But the final climax which is said to close the picture amid gales of hearty laughter is responsible for Stradivarius losing his claim to the title of "One-Thing-at-a-Time O'Day."

And it is too good to tell at this time. The action without words in the final of the fifth reel describes it better and more entertainingly than mere words could.

PROGRAM READER

Her bare-back riding caught his fancy. and he was only a country boy of studious habits. He felt that she was a queen while he was nothing but a poor ten spot.

When he started in pursuit of his heart's desire he couldn't even run a Ford. He joined the circus to be near the little charmer. His policy of only doing one thing at a time—and doing it well—earned for him the title of "One-Thing-at-a-Time O'Day" and he lives up to the title—and more.

"Stradivarius" was the name the music-loving mother hooked on to this unique youthful and ambitious character played by the Metro star, Bert Lytell, in his own inimitable style.

Comedy situations, one after another in fast succession, fill five reels of thrills and modern romance, accompanied by all the glories of the circus. And it isn't until the very last of the fifth reel that our hero loses all claim to any right to the "One-Thing-at-a-Time" title. And it's a roar. Here next week.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have this picture booked you can certainly fix up an attractive lobby picturing the entrance to a circus. Go the limit on what you can afford to expend and what it is possible to secure in your city. No use describing this. If you can have a fac-simile of three-sheets painted even grotesquely to represent the bearded lady, fat woman, snake charmer, etc., etc., it quite fills the bill.

As many of your patrons have undoubtedly read the story in the Saturday Evening Post and have certainly chuckled over it, you should mention this fact. Also that Bert Lytell is one of the most natural actors of the screen, and, last but not least, always emphasize that this is a comedy.

A Ford car is used with such great success in the picture that an invitation of a morning matinee free to all owners of Ford cars who drive to the theatre in their machines should bring you volumes of publicity, especially if you can get the chief of police to issue a complaint against your bolding the performance unless you take out a regular "parade" permit.

CATCH LINES

"Stradivarius" could make a Ford car prance and even dodge libel suits, from his book learnin'. See "One-Thing at-a-Time O'Day" at the ——— theatre.

Some times good things come two at a time but it took "One-Thing-at-a-Time O'Day" the whole five reels to find it out. A riot of laughter with Bert Lytell at the ——— theatre.

"A LITTLE BROTHER OF THE RICH"

takes the wrong road, the heroine, the right one. Concentrate upon this contrast.

And play up the author. He is a well known figure in the fiction world. His story created a sensation when it appeared and your patrons have probably read it. Play up the title attractively. It catches the eye. Send out teasers that this adaptation of Patterson's famous story is coming soon. Then what about the cast? J. Barney Sherry and Frank Mayo have been stars in other pictures. Work up catch lines for your arguments. It suggests all sorts of advertising possibilities.

Exchange Director of Pathe on Long Trip

Fred C. Quimby, Director of exchanges of Pathe Exchange, Inc., left on June 23nd, for a six weeks tour of the Pathe Branches, his itinerary taking him as far as Los Angeles Mr. Quimby will visit the Pathe offices in Chicago, St. Louis, Kansas City, Denver, Salt Lake City, Spokane, Seattle, Portland, San Francisco and Los Angeles, during his trip and incidentally will attend the National Exhibitor's Convention at St. Louis, and the Western Exhibitors gathering at Seattle.

His tour is for the purpose of increasing the efficiency of the Pathe Branch offices and in addition if he follows his usual custom on trips a flood of big contracts may be expected in the Pathe Home Office, as the Director of Exchanges likes to get out and sell film. Pathe has many important releases in the immediate future including the first Cappelani subject "Oh! Boy," with June Caprice and Creighton Hale, "Gates of Brass," with Frank Keenan, "The Profiteers," with Fannie Ward, and the forth-coming serial, "The Great Gamble," with Anne Luther and Charles Hutchison.

Songs Named from Hodkinson Productions

McCarty & Fisher, music publishers, and Frederick V. Bowers, another successful music publisher, have each chosen a W. W. Hodkinson Corporation screen drama with which to link up a song success across the nation.

"The Blue Bonnet," the first National Film Corporation production starring Billie Rhodes under the Hodkinson distribution, is made the title of McCarty & Fisher's song now ready for country wide exploitation.

Frederick V. Bowers, the publisher of "Beautiful Sahara," the authorized musical version of the big J. Parker Read Jr.,—C. Gardner Sullivan production "Sahara," starring Louise Glaum, has an Oriental melody that is being used by many exhibitors in their orchestration of this Hodkinson special.

Tom North with Fox

Fox Sunshine Comedies and Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons are hereafter to be under the sales management of Tom North who for four years has been associated with Pathe.

Pearl White's Last Pathe Feature

PEARL WHITE'S last Pathe serial is announced by Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc. In this Robert W. Chambers' creation, "In Secret," is introduced what is declared to be a new and progressive note in serial making. The picture is announced as not only Miss White's last for Pathe, but also her greatest of twenty-five issued.

Miss White will make special productions for Fox in the future. It is said by Pathe her contract still had a half year to run, and in releasing her it was agreed she would produce no serials during that period.

Pearl White's last serial will, it is declared, show her at a new height of dramatic power and heart appeal. It shows her, too, it is claimed, in situations rich in ingenuity and constant surprise. "While regretting the departure of Miss Pearl White, we nevertheless wish her all success in her new field, to which she has amply demonstrated her ability to enter and achieve," says Mr. Brunet. "We feel especially fortunate, too, in having her last serial, which is the best of the entire procession of them, begun more than five years ago.

"In Secret," Said to Set New Mark in Serial Production

"Looking backward from Pearl White's last serial to the 'Perils of Pauline,' we come forward through a rapid succession beginning with 'The Exploits of Elaine,' 'New Exploits of Elaine,' 'The Romance of Elaine,' 'The Fatal Ring,' 'The Iron Claw,' 'Pearl of the Army,' 'The House of Hate,' 'The Lightning Raider,' which, in its technical perfections, its surprise and suspense, was an excellent forerunner of the peak of serial and star achievement, 'In Secret.'

"The serial business built up by the house of Pathe is based on a firm foundation of demonstrated fact continual 'serial survey' has indicated just what the public desires and shows the changes in popular taste. It has shown, also, that the taste and judgment of the general serial-going public is becoming improved in a marked degree just as the serial itself has steadily improved in quality. In an art that is in the course of development—or any human project for that matter—you cannot stand still; new forms, new methods and new mediums must be created. So it is with a serial, which has now outgrown its swaddling clothes and has at last reached the merit of high-class production.

"Mr. Pathe, during his recent visit to this country gave the considerable part of his time to the consideration of the serial and its still further improvement. He was deeply impressed by the observations made all over the country by Pathe Exchange, Inc., the comment of persons interested in social welfare work, of educationists and scientific men.

"I consider this last Pearl White serial is destined also to be the first serial of new order calling for a wide appreciation of the cinema continued story. 'In Secret' possesses, in a degree far beyond that of any of its predecessors, what is called 'atmosphere and feeling'—the touches in a picture that make the illusion perfect and fix the beholder with a sense of reality. It is told in a harmonious succession of episodes, without uneven break in action or feeling.

To Film the Re-Birth of Europe

BURTON HOLMES, traveler and cinema-lecturer, whose motion pictures are known everywhere under the trade name of Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures, has hit the trail again. Accompanied by Mrs. Holmes, Herford Tynes Cowling, his chief cinematographer, a battery of Bell-and-Howells, and some eighty or ninety trunks containing raw film stock, a portable laboratory, etc., Mr. Holmes recently sailed from New York for Europe. While his plans and itinerary are necessarily elastic and subject to change because of unsettled local conditions, he expects to take between fifty and sixty thousand feet of film for a new series to be released through the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to be known as "Europe in the Remaking." Fundamentally the idea of the series is to show precisely what is being done to put Europe on a pre-war or peace basis, according to Mr. Holmes.

"Right at this time the most interesting phase of the European situation is the phase of reconstruction," said Mr. Holmes, just before sailing. "The war, naturally, has left Europe in a chaotic state—even the neutral countries have not escaped it—and it is my plan to show just what is being done to restore normal conditions. It is a big job that they have ahead of them in Europe, and an interesting job it is, too, and I believe that the American people want to know all about it. Hence this series.

"Roughly, my itinerary includes England, France, Northern France, Belgium, the Rhine Valley, Czecho-Slovakia, Poland, Switzerland, Spain, etc. You will notice that I am not confining myself strictly to the war areas. As a matter of fact the biggest part of the reconstructing work is to be done behind the battle lines.

Burton Holmes Starting on Foreign Trip for Paramount

There are industries that were ruined by the war which must be revived and put back on a normal basis and there are industries which expanded beyond all reason because of the war and which must be reorganized in such a way that neither capital nor workingman will suffer. One thing I wish to emphasize particularly and that is that "Europe in the Remaking" will not be a travel or scenic series in the accepted sense of the word; it is to be rather a film record of the work done to reconstruct and reorganize Europe."

Upon reaching Europe Mr. Holmes will be joined by Louis Francis Brown, his business manager, and his wife, who left New York on June 5 on the Carmania to complete all necessary arrangements with the civil and military authorities of the various countries they expect to visit. Every member of the party is an expert motion picture and still camera operator and this will facilitate the work as several cameras will be kept going simultaneously. The Holmes party expects to be gone about four months.

First Poppy Comedies

The first public showing of the initial release of the Poppy Comedies, "Daddy Ambrose," featuring Mack Swain, will be made at the California theatre, Los Angeles, during the week ending June 28. This pre-lease showing was arranged by presentation, Director Harry Leonhardt with the distributors of these comedies, as Mr. Leonhardt is president and general manager of the Poppy Comedies, Inc.

Begin Comedy Series with Ernest Truex

The first two-reel comedy starring Ernest Truex, stage star and featured in several Paramount specials, have been placed in production by Amedee J. Van Beuren.

The picture is a comedy of suburban life written by Albert Payson Terhune, author of two Paramount-Drew subjects, "Once a Mason" and "The Amateur Liar." Mrs. Sidney Drew, star and director of Paramount-Drew comedies, wrote the scenario from Mr. Terhune's story which appeared in a recent issue of The Saturday Evening Post.

John Joseph Harvey has been signed by Mr. Van Beuren to direct Mr. Truex in these two-reel comedies.

Director Harvey is engaging a competent cast to support Mr. Truex. Already several exterior scenes have been "shot" for the newest comedy series sponsored by Amedee J. Van Beuren, who is also president of the V. B. K. Film Corporation, the makers of Paramount-Drew Comedies, and Timely Films, Inc., producers of "Topics of the Day."

Book Big Vitagraphs

The Palace Theatre in Los Angeles, has just announced a new policy which is not only an innovation at that house, but a compliment to Vitagraph as well.

Through arrangements completed last week, a Vitagraph feature will be the headliner at that theatre each week. Each Vitagraph feature will be shown for an entire week.

Metro Feature is Going Big

"The Red Lantern" Reported Playing to Big Business in Every Section

W. E. ATKINSON, general manager of Metro Pictures Corporation, is in receipt of telegrams and letters from prominent Southern Middle Western and New York State exhibitors containing reports of a continued wave of record business for "The Red Lantern," the Nazimova pageant drama of the screen presented by Messrs. Richard A. Rowland and Maxwell Karger and distributed by Metro.

The reports from the South reveal that not even a hot wave, which made motion picture theatre-going more or less uncomfortable, was able to spoil the enthusiasm of picture patrons intent upon seeing what has been described as Nazimova's supreme achievement.

A letter to Mr. Atkinson from Sergeant "Jack" O'Reilley, recently discharged from Camp Gordon, throws interesting light upon Nazimova's popularity in the land of sunshine and cotton fields. In the course of his epistle Sergeant Reilley says:

"During my year's stay in the South I have found that Nazimova is the most popular actress in the South today. This is best evidenced by the long lines to the box office wherever Nazimova is showing.

"For five months I was publicity director at the Liberty Theatre at Camp Gordon, and during that time became acquainted with just what the soldiers wanted. I personally ran a contest for motion picture stars and Nazimova was by far the first choice."

Metro is now offering to exhibitors throughout the country the newest producton of Nazimova, "The Brat," which is expected to be a worthy successor to "The Red Lantern."

Many Well-Known Stars in Sunset Picture

A cast of well-known players, every one of them cast in roles fitted to their peculiar talents, surrounds House Peters, star of "You Never Know Your Luck," Sir Gilbert Parker's story, a Sunset Pictures, Inc., production, now in its final stages under the supervision of Director Frank Powell at the Solax Studios, Fort Lee, N. J.

Claire Whitney has the leading feminine role, and Bertram Marburgh an outstanding male part. Marion Dyer, Frank Nelson and Charles Hammond are other well known players.

The picture for the most part was filmed in Texas. The locale is western Canada and England.

Bigger Blackton Studio

J. Stuart Blackton has approved plans for the enlarging and reconstruction of his own studios in Brooklyn to meet the demands of his increased production plans as outlined for his newly organized company.

Virginia Pearson's Cast Film at Lake George

William B. Davidson, leading man for Virginia Pearson in her second production, "Impossible Catherine," together with other members of the company, is now at Lake George where the final scenes of the production are being taken.

John B. O'Brien, who is directing the production, is a strong believer in realism, and in the taking of the lumber camp scenes William Davidson had to join right in with the men who made logging a regular means of livelihood and helped in the cutting, as well as in the hauling of the logs.

A few of the "oldest inhabitants" of the town stood by in wrapt attention watching the mechanism of a real moving picture company at work.

"Man's Desire" Bought by Robertson-Cole

Acting upon the early advices of its Pacific Coast representatives, who proclaimed the production a most spectacular one, Robertson-Cole has just purchased the world rights to "Mans Desire," a feature which will be exploited as a big special. Lewis S. Stone, stage star, heads the cast of "Mans Desire," which includes many well known screen players. The feature will be distributed by Exhibitors Mutual.

Lloyd Ingraham, directed "Mans Desire" from a story written by Stone himself. L. V Jefferson, who has adapted a number of Sessue Hayakawa's triumphant releases, wrote the continuity on the Stone attraction.

Simplex

THE SIMPLEX AND OTHERS

Get the price lists of the various projectors—compare them—you'll find that the prices are approximately the same.

But what a difference there is in the machines themselves—

There must be—there is—and that's why the Simplex is today the choice of the industry.

And do you know that

Despite the high quality of workmanship and material that goes into the building of the Simplex Projector its cost is approximately the same as that of machines that are inferior in workmanship and material.

Despite its numerous improvements which have cost countless dollars and numberless hours to develop the Simplex Projector costs comparatively the same as machines that have not improved.

Despite its exclusive features that result in actual saving in repair bills and electrical power the Simplex Projector can be purchased at the same price as is charged for high upkeep projectors.

Despite the qualities which the Simplex Projector carries with it for added screen illumination and photographic definition, its cost is no greater than for machines that employ four and five year old optical principles.

So—If you contemplate the purchase of a projector would it not be good judgment to select the machine which represents the best investment for your money—the incomparable Simplex.

Atmosphere and Action

SCENES of wonderful northern beauty, action of intense interest, a love story that is new and charming, a production that is elaborate and appealing—that's "A Daughter of the Wolf."

The story by Hugh Pendexter ran in the Woman's World last January and proved enormously popular.

Lila Lee does the best work she has ever done. Elliott Dexter is the hero. Raymond Hatton, Marcia Manon, Clarence Geldert are in the cast. Irvin Willat directed. Marion Fairfax wrote the scenario.

All in all, a picture worth your playing strong.

The book-worm will turn

HE'D been good all his life and it only brought him the refusal of the girl he loved. She was afraid the "wild oats" would be sown after marriage. So he started to gather in a harvest, but he couldn't get away with it. He remained a very good young man through all the side-splitting events that happened to him.

If you could fill your theatre with folks who had never laughed before, you'd hear the noise a block away.

Service section in last week's News will show you some ways of putting over this fast farce—funnier than "Skinner's Dress Suit."

Who Says So?

"'THE White Heather' reveals what admirable material for movie thrillers is to be found in the great Drury Lane melodramas. The picture is perfectly made and the director has added effects that thrill and amaze. There are scenes that look like Scottish landscapes; there are scenes in the London Stock Exchange; there are court room scenes; there are scenes in an underworld inn and as a climax there is a fight to the death at the bottom of the sea, produced by the use of the Williamson Submarine tube and patented inventions. It is an absolute masterpiece of motion picture direction and photography"

ARTCRAFT SPECIAL

Everybody!

"MAURICE TOURNEUR, maker of masterpieces, has achieved a great popular success in 'The White Heather.' The acting is so uniformly excellent it is impossible to differentiate between the roles. In a perfect piece of work like this the director is the thing. When you have sat through reel after reel of cheap screen business played against early Pullman interiors you feel a personal sense of gratitude toward the man who has brought so much genuine beauty before your eyes. In every way it is all that could be desired."

And that's what the New York reviewers think of "The White Heather."

Thousands of Words and not a Spark in all of Them.

W. W. HODKINSON CORPORATION'S policy of distribution was made clear to the exhibitors of America in less than seventy-five words of plain English.

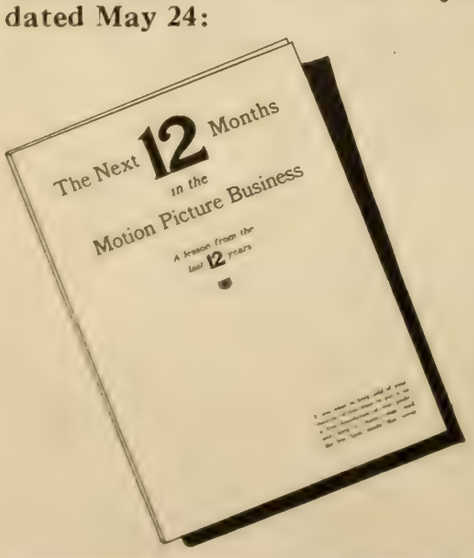
Not an exhibitor misunderstood the meaning of our announcement. Our policy was put into effect in April to benefit exhibitors immediately. We did not wait for September.

Six or more companies have followed us claiming to book pictures singly on the basis of individual merit, not so much because they actually favor it as because they have been driven into following W. W. Hodkinson.

We do not require special inserts ranging up to thirty-odd pages to drive an idea into the heads of exhibitors.

There is on foot in the motion picture industry a tremendous plot to mash those exhibitors who refuse to sacrifice their independence and give up the control of the businesses they have built by their own efforts.

W. W. Hodkinson said in his announcement in the trade journals dated May 24:



"The next year will see new consolidations, alignments and affiliations, particularly on the part of the smaller Producer-Distributor concerns if they are to compete successfully with the larger concerns.

"Such re-organization will no doubt mean that these affiliated concerns will, by the issuing of stock and securities place their own values on their 'assets' on the basis of what they think they ought to get out of it, and you, the exhibitor, will be called upon to shoulder the burden of their enormous capitalizations.

"When certain concerns find they can no longer go it alone, when they have pooled their interests in an effort to escape approaching financial storms, you may at that time find that they have in their possession a stream of quality product without which your theatre cannot live. Through controlling the life blood of your business such an organization aided by economic conditions and modern merchandising methods will then gradually force you into a scheme of national operation of theatres instead of individual operation and you will have to pay for the product they supply you with the virtual ownership of your theatre."

Two months ago this was predicted by W. W. Hodkinson. It is now happening before your very eyes. Who can be blind enough to overlook this warning or overlook the means of self-protection and escape?

Have you read the Hodkinson booklet, "The Next 12 Months in the Motion Picture Business?" Write for a copy.

To the Producers; to the Distributors;
and to the Exhibitors of the Northwest

The exhibitors in the four States of Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana have incorporated the Northwest Exhibitors' Circuit for the purpose of booking and buying Open Market Specials.

For the past few years the entire motion picture industry has been in a most chaotic state. Every one has been desirous of something that would put the business on a more solid basis. This year the producers, with their promise of "fewer and better pictures" are advancing in the right direction; and we propose to go along with them. Our organization will enable them to book their productions in this territory without the tremendous selling expense that has caused so much loss in the past.

Our organization is founded on CO-OPERATION, and its watchword is FAIRNESS. To the best of our ability we shall work in harmony with Producer, Distributor and every branch of the industry, operating always on a live and let live policy; and to this end we heartily and confidently ask you to co-operate for the highest measure of success.

What is a super-picture?

Since the day of the super-dreadnought, the screen has had a veritable deluge of so-called super-pictures, but how thoughtlessly has the term been used!

Just as it takes more than size to make a super-dreadnought, so does it take more than size to make a super-picture.

The largest ship in the world, without adequate armament, is only a boat.

Power alone makes the super-dreadnought.

And power alone—box-office power—makes the super-picture.

Whether a picture be long or short, if it has the power to bring the avalanche of business to the box-office it is a super-picture among pictures. But super-box-office power it must have.

By every test and experience, by constant demonstrations of unrivalled box-office power, the productions of

MARY PICKFORD
CHARLIE CHAPLIN
DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS
and D. W. GRIFFITH

are super-pictures. And United Artists Corporation will rent these super-pictures as they deserve to be rented—singly, each on its individual merits.

The FUTURE BELONGS to the
MOTION PICTURE

THE biggest and strongest and most significant thing in the world today is the motion picture.

The industry of America has created a new art—a democratic art such as no people have known since the beginning of history.

Through triumphs and failures we have been pushing it towards perfection.

For three years our own organization has been dreaming and building for the future.

Today we stand on the threshold.

Before us we see taking shape the biggest and finest pictures ever made, pictures such as the work of our industry has so far only hinted at.

All this comes as a clear answer to popular demands and expectations and to the urgings of the artistic factors that have been gathered together in the Goldwyn organization.

Never was an art or an industry so keyed to high accomplishment as is the motion picture today.

Goldwyn is prepared to lead!

Samuel Goldwyn

THE YARDSTICK OF THE INDUSTRY

MONTHS in advance, Goldwyn prepared for the new season and its new demands. It saw the calibre of picture that would be demanded—the only kind that could live. It began to build such pictures.

Six months before possible release it had its production forces working on more elaborate, more powerful, and more vivid pictures than any it or any other company had ever consistently produced. It had the stars. It sought and secured the greatest authors, the greatest directors, and the finest supporting casts. It put into production stories calling for technical mass and detail such as had gone hitherto into very few pictures.

Goldwyn did this to provide pictures that would meet the public's demands, the exhibitor's demands and the demands of the new era in sales which it saw coming.

Four such pictures will be released each month.

Six months ago Goldwyn began in the same way to create a systematic organization of advertising and exploitation suited to the distinction and individuality of these big pictures. This included a national campaign of poster and newspaper advertising, the creation of exploitation units for exhibitor-service in every Goldwyn exchange, and a trebling of the service force in the central office. Only such organization, Goldwyn knew, could meet the new season's conditions.

That was pre-vision.

Goldwyn credits that same ability and necessity of seeing things before they happen, to the exhibitor who is far-sighted enough to do business with this company.

Goldwyn has therefore evolved a sales plan which will permit the exhibitor to exercise the same careful foresight and consideration that go into the making of the pictures—to book productions months in advance.

The exhibitor will book each production only, however, after he has actually seen it on the screen.

Goldwyn will be prepared to display all productions far in advance of release in the projection rooms of its exchanges. The resident manager will invite the exhibitors of his district in to see what he has for sale.

If the exhibitor finds that in his opinion, Goldwyn has made the sort of splendid, special drawing productions that it has promised, then he may book—one or all, two, three or four, as he thinks wise.

The exhibitor is the yardstick of the industry.

The issue is simple and unescapable.

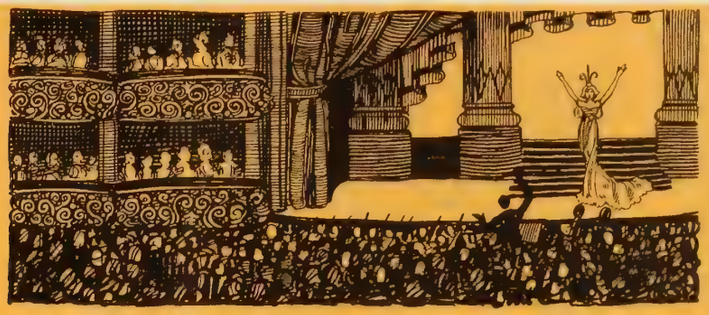
Quality pictures are made individually — on their merits.

They must and will be sold individually — on their merits.

That is the 1919-20 policy for Goldwyn Pictures.

GOLDWYN PICTURES CORPORATION
SAMUEL GOLDWYN, President

Geraldine
FARRAR



GERALDINE FARRAR

HERE is a woman who has scaled the heights of art and fame. She has won the applause of audiences frantic with joy, the praise of the severest critics, the adulation of whole peoples. Her beauty, her art, her voice, and the magic of her acting have made her the most famous woman in the world. In her newest picture, she soars above every pinnacle of her past career. She outdistances in power of beauty and action everything she has ever done on the screen.

"The Golden Song"

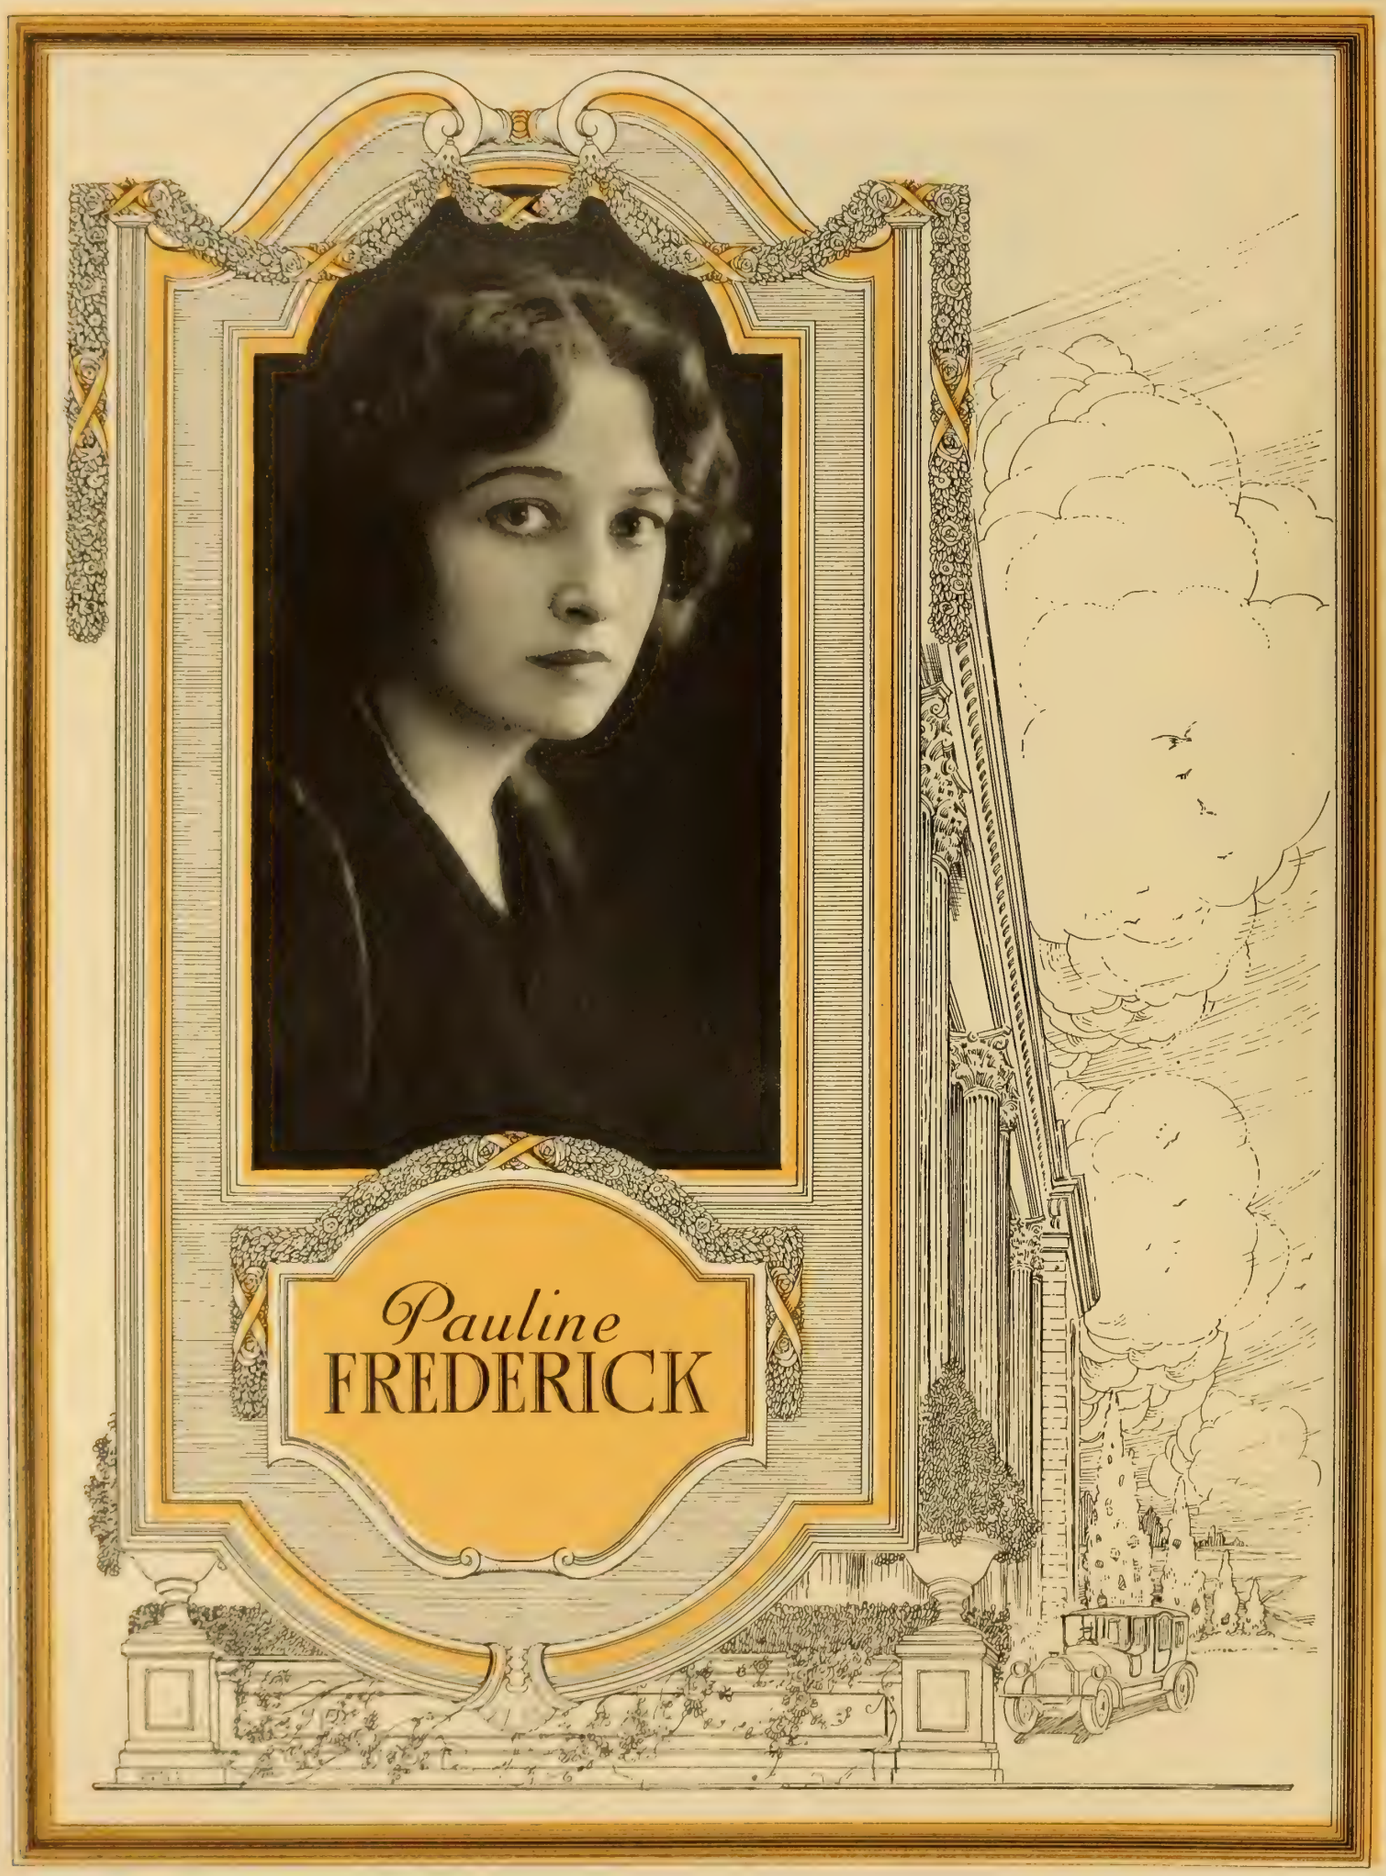
Supported by Lou-Tellegen and a powerful cast, she will be seen in a production that excels in picturesqueness, variety and spectacular display anything that she has hitherto done. Its appeal is as universal as the human desire for vivid, soul-stirring action and the love of beauty and romance.

It is a story that matches Farrar's matchless acting. It will be the sensation of 1919-1920.



Pauline
FREDERICK

PAULINE FREDERICK

THE power and appeal of this unique emotional actress will be immeasurably enhanced in the first of her new pictures released under Goldwyn's new booking plan—

"The Stronger Love"

You want Miss Frederick in all the wonderful gowns that she knows so well just how to wear. You want her in the rich setting of social life. You want her facing great crises, fighting a woman's battles, triumphing over the world and all its pitfalls.

"The Stronger Love" is a story that gives you that Pauline Frederick.

In "The Stronger Love," Miss Frederick absolutely dominates her field. No emotional actress of the screen possesses her clear-cut and polished power. No other actress has such fullness of beauty and poise and distinction.

Miss Frederick's personal appeal backed by high histrionic talent, is the secret of her exceptional popularity with the motion picture lovers of the world.

Mabel NORMAND

MABEL NORMAND

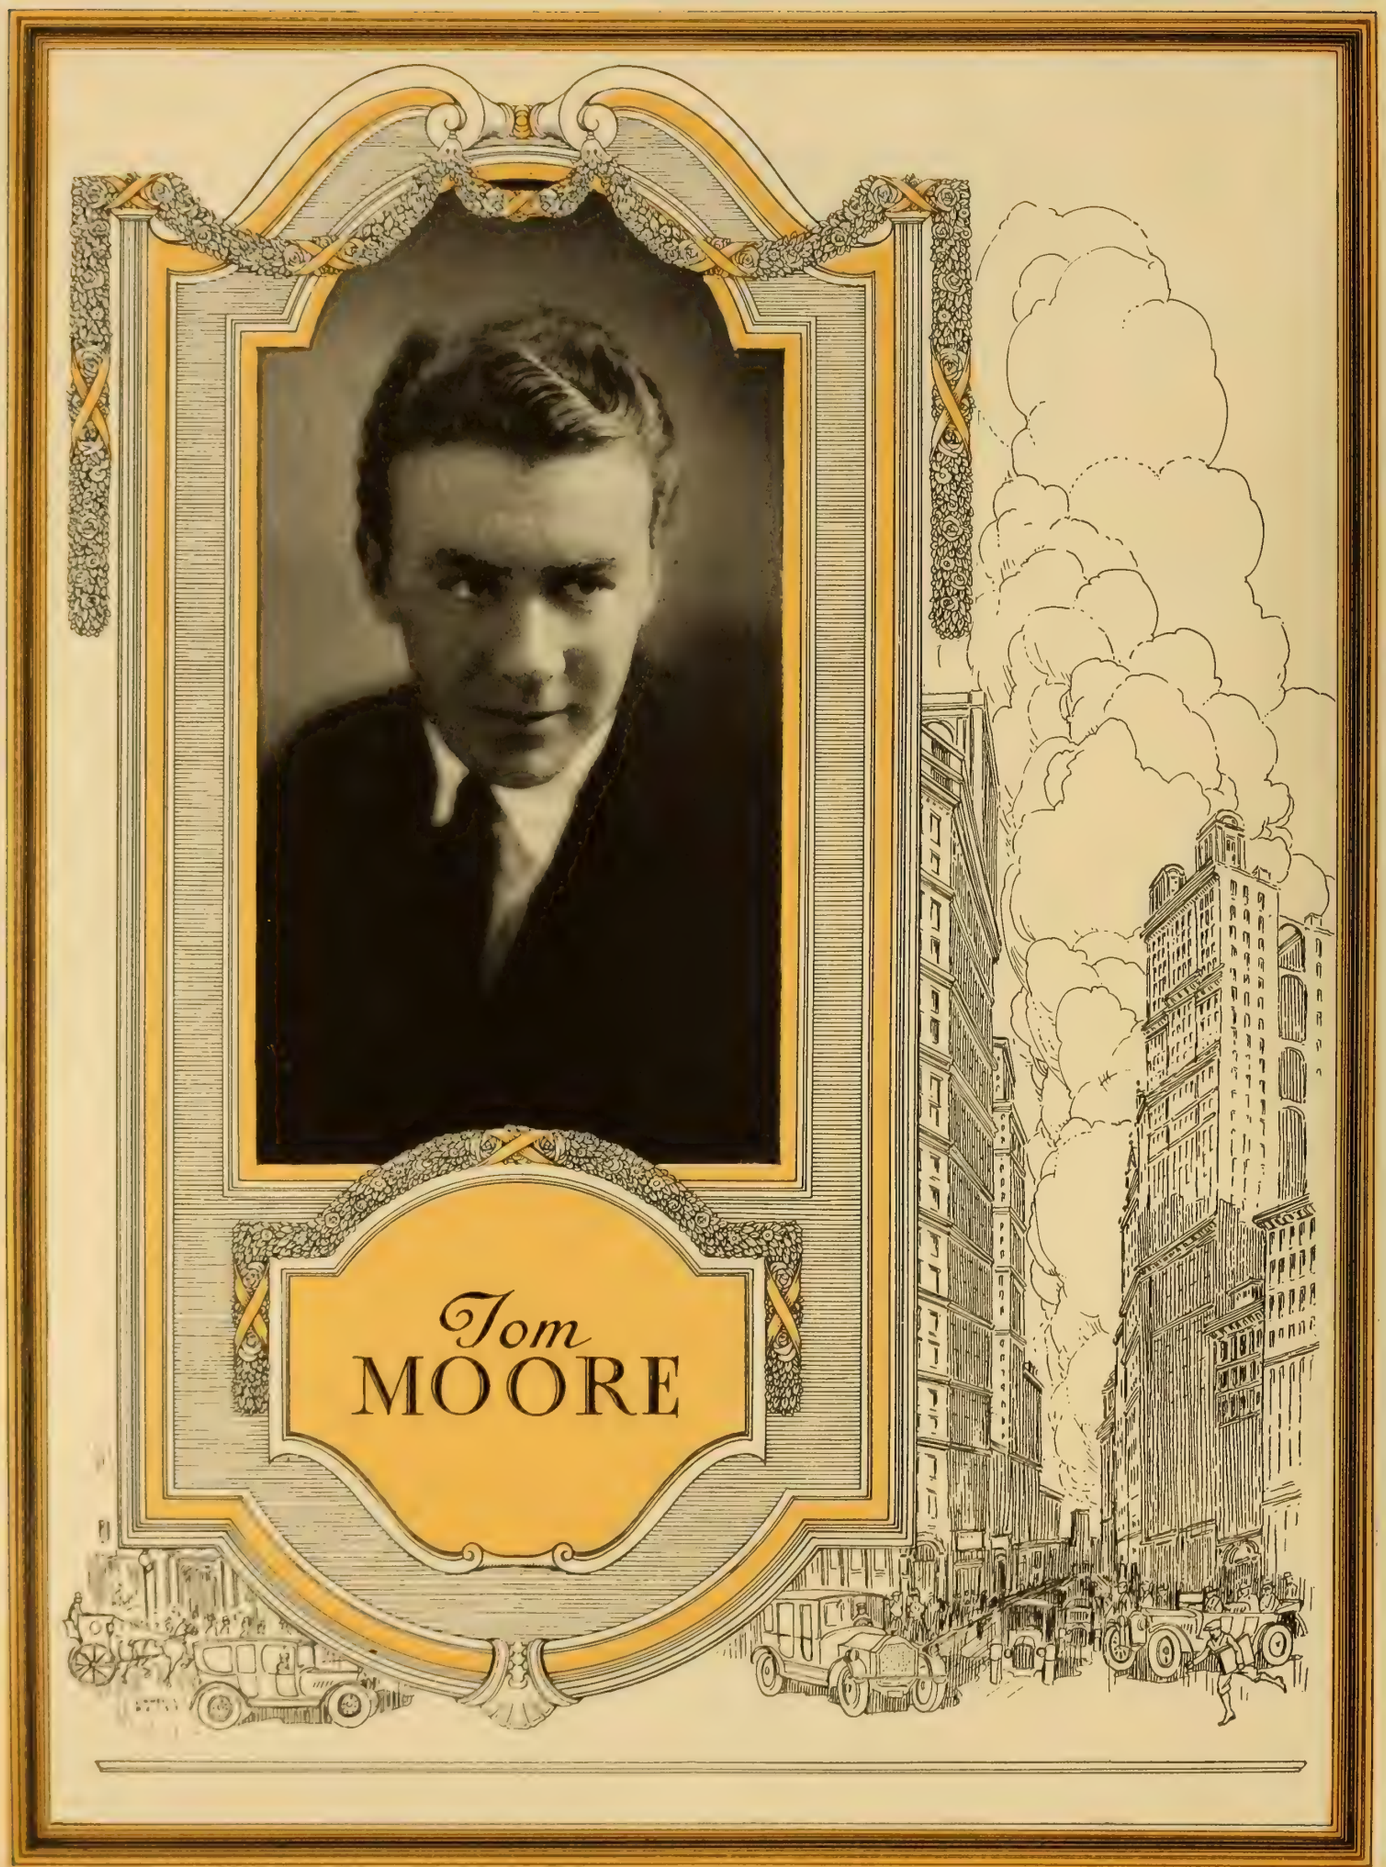
THE exhibitors of America have good reason to know and praise Mabel Normand. She has brought them success after success. The millions of admirers of the most popular feminine fun-maker in America's history will flock to see

"An Empty Paradise"

Her first picture of the new season will reveal in her again—as the Chicago Tribune said of her last picture—"The old Mabel, to the delight of everybody."

This production is the supreme achievement of Mabel Normand's career. It is spectacular. It has taken months — not weeks — to make. A great circus forms a small part of the elaborate variety of setting and atmosphere that you will see when you view this picture at the nearest Goldwyn exchange.

You know the entertainment qualities of the last six Normand pictures. Multiply them by ten. That is "An Empty Paradise."



Tom

TOM MOORE

THE Man with the Irish Smile has won more fans to his support in the past year than any other star in pictures. His triumphant progress in "Thirty a Week," "One of the Finest" and "The City of Comrades" will be left far behind by the popular response to his first picture of the fall,

"Lord and Lady Algy"

It is one of those stories that naturally draw crowds, mixing in the sporting instincts of English society with the eternal romance of true love. This has been amply proved by the country-wide tour of William Faversham's all-star revival of R. C. Carton's famous play.

"Lord and Lady Algy" is a big colorful production filled with enough spectacle and excitement to make three ordinary pictures. A fox hunt, with a score of mounts in the field, the Derby faithfully reproduced, a great and beautiful costume ball in a marvelous London town-house. These are mere details in the splendid design of this exceptional production—the most elaborate Tom Moore has ever had.

KENNEDY

MADGE KENNEDY

"THE First Lady of the Screen" is the phrase that the New York Morning Telegraph has coined for Madge Kennedy. It describes exactly her supremacy as a comedienne. It pictures accurately the quality that has made her a national favorite in barely two years. In her first picture of the new season—

"Strictly Confidential"

Miss Kennedy again displays the fresh and overwhelming sense of fun which has conquered America. This picturization of Jerome K. Jerome's famous play, "Fanny and the Servant Problem," will prove the most popular production in which she has yet appeared. The author has devised an ingenious plot which shows her as the bride of an English nobleman whose houseful of servants all turn out to be her uncles and her cousins and her aunts.

Madge Kennedy has justified every prophecy made when Goldwyn first introduced "her eyes and her smile" to the motion picture world. From "Baby Mine" to "Leave It to Susan" runs the record of her triumphs. It will culminate in "Strictly Confidential."

Will ROGERS
CAFE

WILL ROGERS

"WILL ROGERS just naturally walked right on and made a hit at his debut in 'Laughing Bill Hyde.' He is the most refreshing personality on the screen."

—New York Telegraph.

"If David Belasco doesn't try Rogers out, he may be losing another David Warfield."

—New York Evening Mail.

That was the way the critical world of the trade papers and the great dailies hailed the advent of Will Rogers. The verdict will be as unanimous and even more enthusiastic when they see "Almost a Husband"

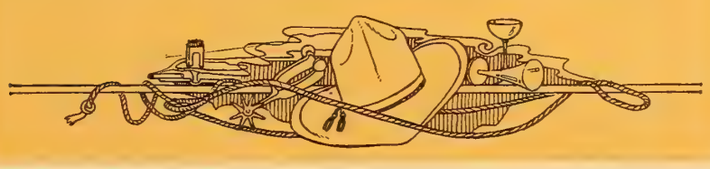
Famous Opie Read's story is a perfect vehicle for Rogers' unique talents as an actor. It gives him every chance to show his wonderful comedy method. As the town butt who gets accidentally married during a forfeit game, he has a part that carries emotion and sympathy as well as the best humor of three seasons.



ANNOUNCING EMINENT

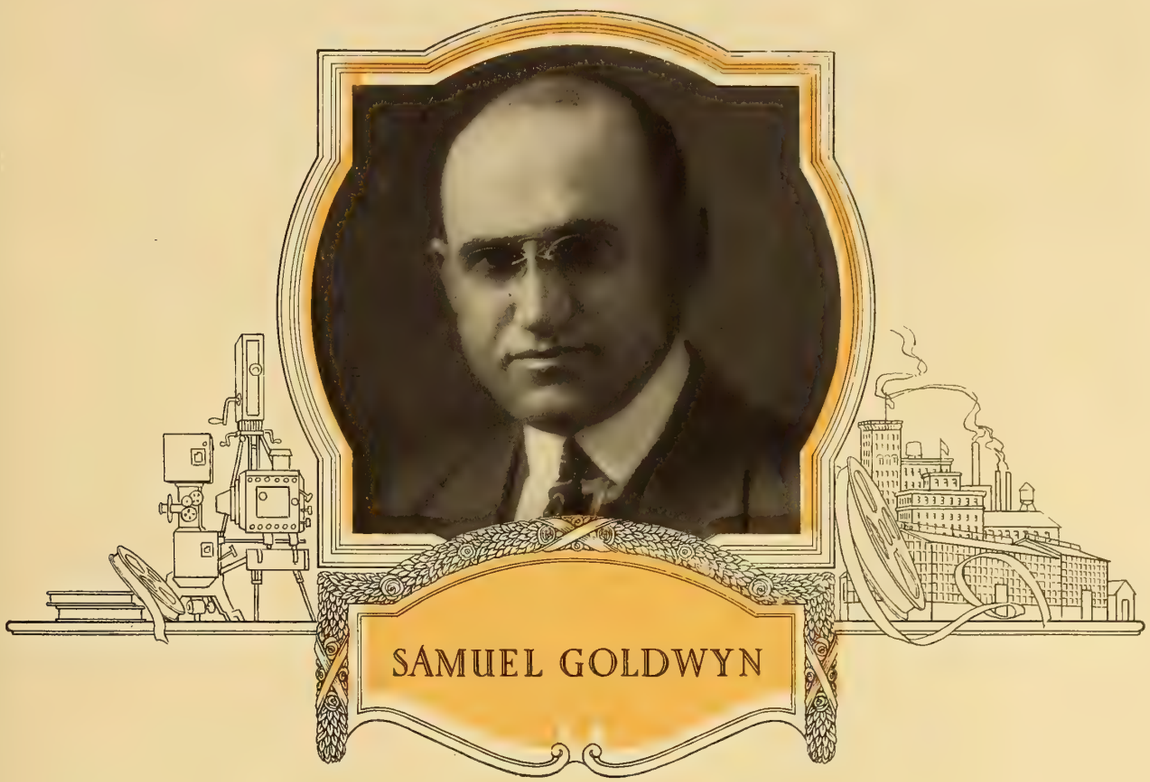
EMINENT Authors' Pictures, Inc., organized by Rex Beach and Samuel Goldwyn, unites in one producing organization the greatest American novelists of today. It insures the exclusive presentation of their stories on the screen and each author's cooperation in production. These authors are:—

Rex Beach	Gertrude Atherton	Mary Roberts Rinehart
Rupert Hughes	Gouverneur Morris	Basil King
	Leroy Scott

The creation of Eminent Authors' Pictures, Inc., is the natural outgrowth of the association of Mr. Beach and Mr. Goldwyn in the making of such successes as "The Crimson Gardenia," "The Brand," "The Auction Block."

It is safe to say that the authors in Eminent Authors' Pictures, Inc., are known to every reading individual.

Their popularity in the motion picture theatres can be no less than their popularity in the newspapers, magazines, and books. If anything, it must be greater.



AUTHORS' PICTURES

Editors and magazines vie with one another to secure the manuscripts of these writers. They pay large sums for the exclusive rights to their works. Every word of these men and women is contracted for, both for serial and book publication, months in advance.

Every picture will be as popular an achievement for the motion picture world as the story has been in literature. It will not be offered for release until the author has given his personal approval to it. The picture must first pass the severest critic that it will ever meet—the author of the story.

During the year each author of the corporation will be represented by at least two stories. These splendid productions will be sold only in the projection rooms of the Goldwyn exchanges one at a time—on merit.

The stories are right. That is settled by the approval of the millions. The casts will be models of excellence. Every part of the production will have the quality that is always the hallmark of Goldwyn.

The formation of Eminent Authors' Pictures is a great step forward in the betterment of the industry.

REX BEACH

YOU know Rex Beach. You know the power and popularity of his great pictures, "The Brand," "The Crimson Gardenia," "The Auction Block," clear back to "The Spoilers."

Now comes another—more powerful, more elaborate, more gripping—

"The Girl From Outside"

The same raw elemental strength surges through it. Like all the Beach pictures, it is a story of men that love and hate and fight on the hair-trigger, and of women that do their part. Great action, great thrills, pack every foot of it. A superb cast, masterful direction, elaborate settings and great, endless crowds, give the picture a physical size that matches the sweep and the grip of its story. And now in preparation is another great novel from the magic story-mine of Rex Beach. It has the same strength—strength in story and strength in popular fame and appeal.

To the best of my ability I have tried to learn and solve the problems of the screen. It is the intention of the men and women associated together in Eminent Authors' Pictures to give the same personal cooperation to the picturizing of their stories.

Rex Beach

RUPERT HUGHES

TEN out of the last twelve novels by Rupert Hughes led all the "best sellers" for six months on end. The great American public recognized instantly the tremendous appeal of his vivid stories of city life, his lightning flashes at the social struggle, his powerful portraits of the female of the species in all her grandeur and frivolity. Millions of American readers followed breathlessly Mr. Hughes'

"The Cup of Fury"

when it appeared in the Red Book and are reading this novel of the year in book form. This gripping story will be the first of his works to be produced by Eminent Authors' Pictures.

Its heroine is a remarkable character. In six months all filmdom will be talking about her. For in this beautiful body there are two girls —no, three, four—or more. The discontented village girl, the runaway, the vaudeville actress, the adopted daughter of wealth, the society butterfly, the stenographer, the shipbuilder. Which is the real girl? It is a question that will rival that famous publicity-crammed problem of a generation ago: The Lady or the Tiger?

A great revolutionary step has been taken in the motion picture domain. The author has at last been given the franchise. It carries with it a heavy responsibility but the opportunity is glorious.

Rupert Hughes

GERTRUDE ATHERTON

THE reputation of America's greatest woman novelist is international. Her books—old and new—are in greater demand at the libraries than those of any writer of the past thirty years. This is because great characters and great dramas fill her pages. She peoples Newport, Paris, the Adirondacks or San Francisco, with men and women that grip your deepest interest. She holds the life of half of the world in her palm.

"Perch of the Devil"

the first of Mrs. Atherton's novels to be filmed by Eminent Authors' Pictures, is crammed with the "man's sized" life of Butte, "the richest hill in the world"—and the hardest. It is a story of mountains full of copper and gold and of men and women bruised and broken, but never beaten, in their struggles with this earth and with themselves.

Life runs strong in "Perch of the Devil"—this bold study of a girl who rose from clothes baskets and bad grammar to a commanding position among the nobility of two continents.

I have always believed in the future of the motion picture.
I am delighted at the opportunity to reach new millions.

Gertrude Hoffman

MARY ROBERTS RINEHART

MYSTERY and mother love—romance in the village streets—laughter and sport—emotion that touches the heart—fine young men and their sweethearts in the joys and quarrels of life.

It is such vivid insight into modern America that has made Mary Roberts Rinehart a tremendous asset to the Saturday Evening Post—where story after story of hers regularly appears. It will make her just as great an asset in motion pictures.

"The Amazing Interlude"

The first Rinehart story to be made by Eminent Authors' Pictures is filled with excitement, youth, romance, enthusiasm, courage and devotion. The pen that made "Tish," a friend in millions of American homes, has found another favorite in the heroine of "The Amazing Interlude." The author gives us the heart of a girl from a Middle Western town who is thrust out into the great world of today, to face consequences we all know too well. Mrs. Rinehart has filled her story with situations that keep the attention at the topmost notch.

I believe thoroughly in the moving picture, present and future. It is the most democratic of the arts—a new art compound of the cooperative effort of author, director and actor.

Mary Roberts Rinehart

BASIL KING

BASIL KING is no stranger to the screen. In "The City of Comrades" Goldwyn has already shown American exhibitors the gripping quality of Mr. King's plots. No author has so visualized vivid dramas of hope and ambition. No author has made so picture-clear the fight of love and despair.

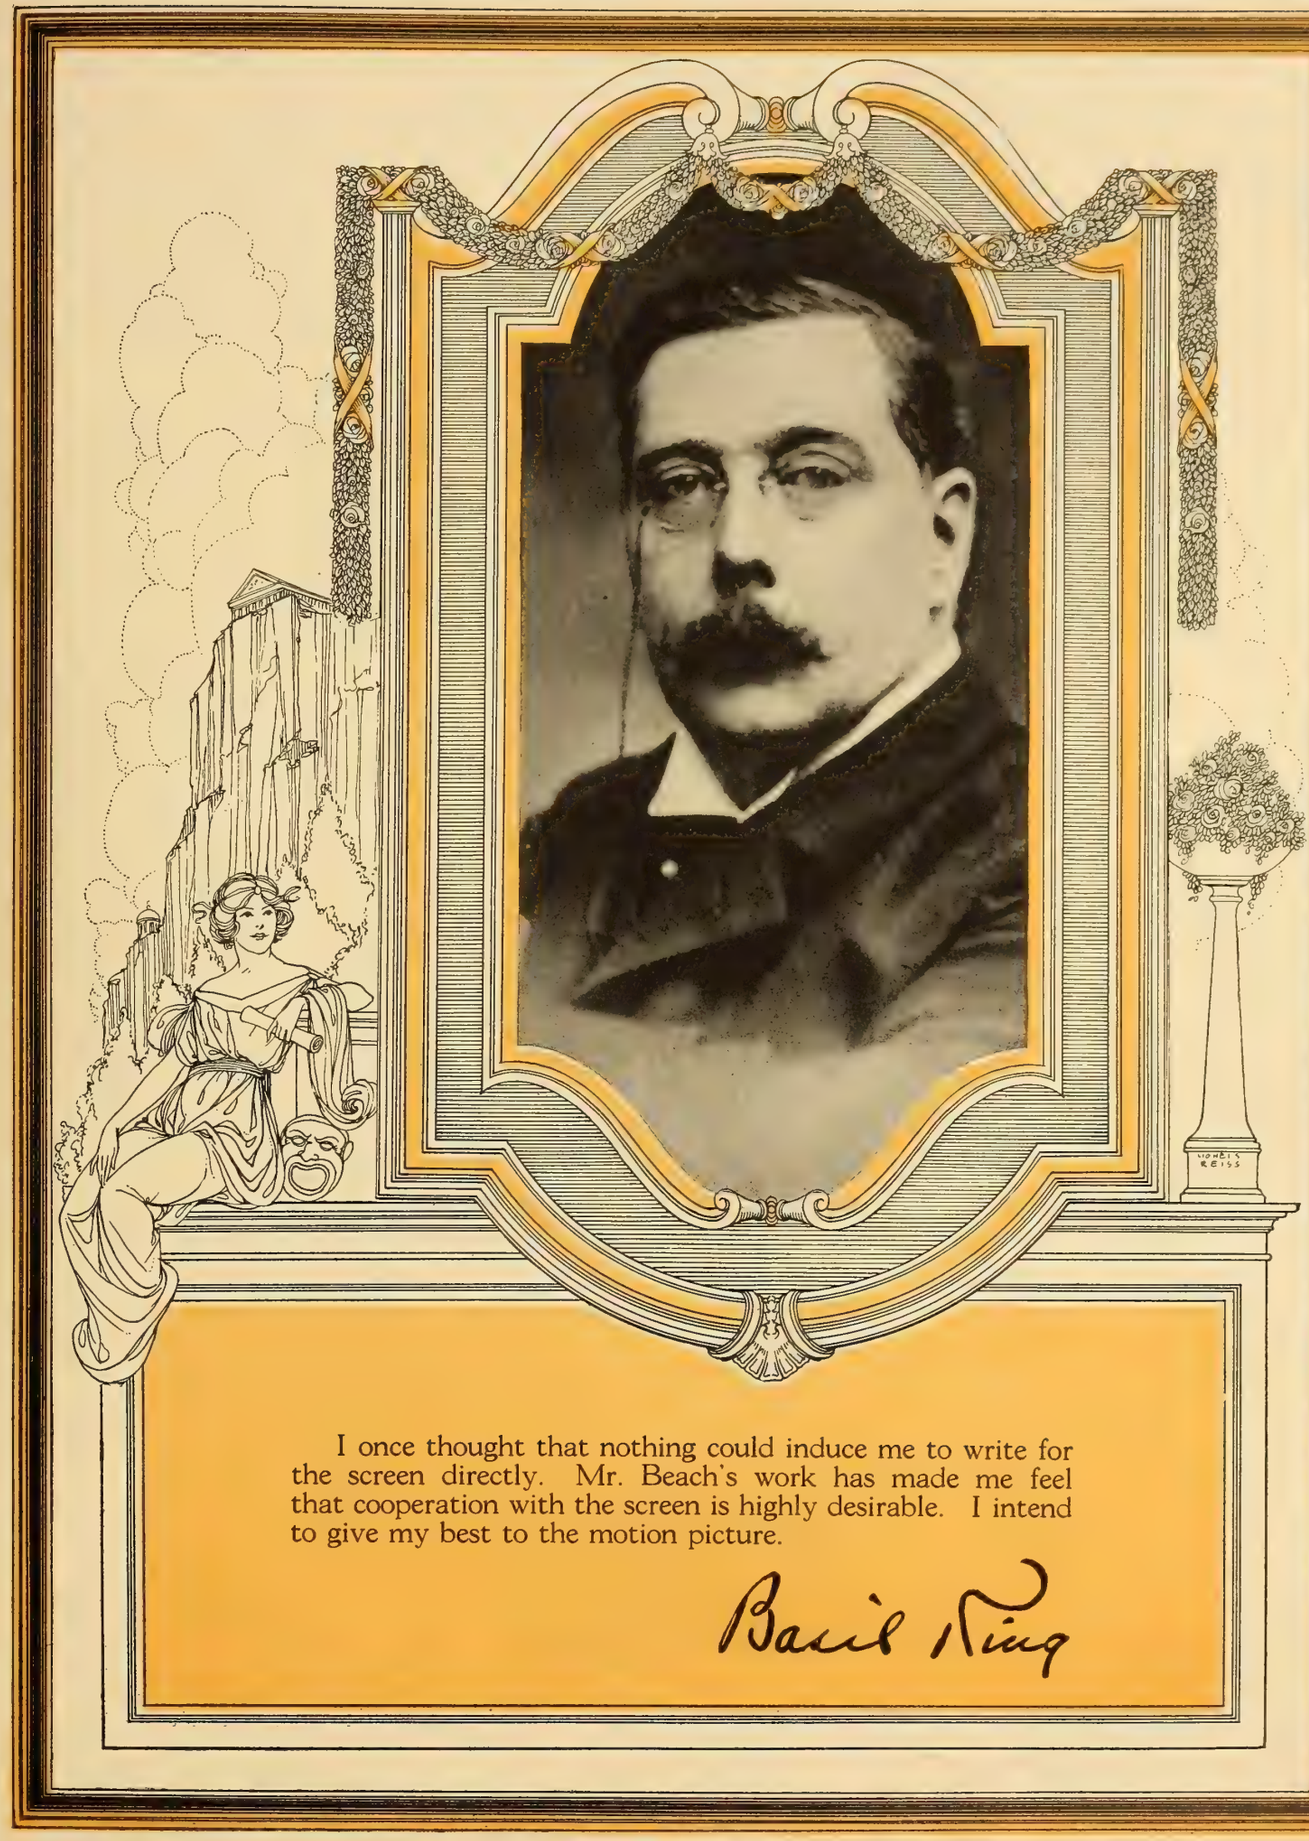
"The Street Called Straight" is the first story by Basil King to be made under the direction of Eminent Authors' Pictures. It vibrates with great action and it touches the heights of human sacrifice. Seldom has the "hunger for life"—and the power to take and give it—been so vividly pictured.

No American author has so varied a following as Basil King. There is hardly a great magazine from the Saturday Evening Post to Harper's in which Mr. King has not appeared. Consequently his name brings to the theatre every type of new patron that a forward-looking exhibitor is anxious to attract. Mr. King has already built new business for the theatre-owner. His new pictures will build much more.



I once thought that nothing could induce me to write for the screen directly. Mr. Beach's work has made me feel that cooperation with the screen is highly desirable. I intend to give my best to the motion picture.

Basil King

LEROY SCOTT

THE swiftest of rapid-fire crook stories, tenement house tales, dramas of politics, poverty and the labor of life—these have made Leroy Scott the most popular novelist in the pages of the great Metropolitan Magazine and other dominating periodicals.

"Partners of the Night" will be his first production with Eminent Authors' Pictures. The editors of the Metropolitan say it was the most successful novel published in that magazine in four years. It will get the same reaction on the screen, for it is picture stuff.

Scott's heroine is no story-book girl. She is real—real as the crooks with whom he surrounds her. The pulsing life of the city sweeps through the tale with a force that will lift theatregoers from their seats.

Producers have sought his works because they saw the wonderful picture possibilities in them. But Mr. Scott has kept his best for the moment when he could be sure they would reach his big eager public just as they want to see them.

Producers have been after practically everything that I have written, but I have tried to hold out until the motion picture was adequate for presentation. I felt that the only way in which it could be adequate was to have supervision by the author of the story selected for production.

Leroy Scott

GOUVERNEUR MORRIS

ALL the circulation-power of the biggest magazines is behind the stories of Gouverneur Morris. The ten million readers of the Cosmopolitan, the Saturday Evening Post, McClure's, Collier's, Hearst's, Harper's Bazar know and love his strange and colorful stories and his vivid pictures of the eddying whirlpools of life. When his first story to be made by Eminent Authors' Pictures, is shown on the screen, it will be known to more than a million eager readers through its serialization in Hearst's Magazine and its publication in book form. These will be the nucleus of other millions that will want to see in flesh and blood this story of the Bohemian art circles of New York. They will want to thrill over the actual sight of this wonder-woman torn between love for her husband, a rich and famous artist, and a poor man, for whom she must make the big sacrifice.

"The Wild Goose"

The development of this situation in physical terms will make one of the most-talked-of productions in the history of the screen.

I look forward with the utmost enthusiasm to my work of cooperation with Mr. Beach, Mr. Goldwyn and their associates in the making of a newer and finer type of motion picture.

Lon Chaney

"SMILING BILL" PARSONS

IN a little over a year, "Smiling Bill" Parsons has put a new type of comedy on the motion picture map.

It is clean. It is intelligent. Yet it sets a riotous pace in laugh-getting that is rare indeed on the screen.

Comic genius and creative brains of the first water go into the thirteen Capitol Comedies issued each year starring "Smiling Bill."

The constructive ability that put over "Tarzan" and other big landmarks in Parsons' career as a producer has made his two-reel comedies the biggest buys in the comedy market today.

In 1919-20, they will grow in humor, ingenuity and popularity. For "Smiling Bill" has set himself a program and a pace that win.

Your theatre needs that wonderful face on the screen. It is a sure sign of prosperity.

COMEDIES

Mr. & Mrs. CARTER DEHAVEN

THE new stars that "Smiling Bill" Parsons has introduced to the patrons of Capitol Comedies occupy a unique position in the entertainment world.

No young couple ever attained such popularity in that great popular testing ground of the people who really count—vaudeville.

No young couple ever registered so quickly a clean-cut hit in two-reel comedies.

This is because no "team" ever put over such snappy, speedy, well-dressed fun as these famous musical comedy stars.

There is a peculiar drawing power in the type of story they are making. Their comedies of domestic life—of the trials and tribulations of the newlyweds—appeal directly to the largest class of motion picture devotees, the young married couples.

THE FORD RECORD

HENRY FORD, when a young man, dreamed the dream of city streets and country roads almost horseless through cheap transportation.

Henry Ford, with his cheap transportation dream a reality, had, later in life, a new vision. It was to tell to the public some of life's secrets, some of life's unusual stories, through the new-born power, motion pictures. As Henry Ford always thinks large—thinks in world figures—he thought large and in world figures about motion pictures.

So Ford's only instructions were to search for the best. He told his laboratory to throw through the shutter on into the hearts and minds of the public only those facts which fascinate, interest, instruct and uplift.

The fact that the Ford Educational Weekly is being shown 6,000 days per week in the United States is the best possible evidence of its genuine merit and of the foresight of its founder. Plans are under way which will meet any and every on-coming condition of the motion picture in the United States and the world.

To meet this assured development the Ford Weekly will move forward in exactly the same spirit, ever increasing and expanding. It will keep leadership perpetually as it has kept it from the start.

This leadership is assured, chiefly because the spirit and the will of the mind which made the Ford Motor Company great through Service, is back of and directing the Weekly.

EXPLOITATION THAT GUARANTEES BOX-OFFICE RESULTS

GOLDWYN Pictures will be given individual exploitation on an absolute par with the elaborate and individual way in which they are produced.

First and foremost will come national campaigns on the billboards and in the newspapers, selling the productions to the big general public.

The Goldwyn sales organization has perfected plans for as strong an intensive campaign to help the individual exhibitor to put over every picture locally in a big way.

Chief among the plans already in operation is the creation of a staff of advertising-exploitation-publicity experts to work from each of the Goldwyn exchanges.

These men will be placed unreservedly at the service of the Goldwyn exhibitor.

In addition, the Central Service Department has been trebled in number of men and facilities for greater and broader cooperation with the exhibitor.

Everything is set—from production, through sales, to exploitation—to make Goldwyn Pictures not only the greatest productions but also the biggest money-makers in the history of motion pictures.

What The Wor

I have seen the stirring account of the heroic conduct of The Lost Battalion. It is an epic which ought to be and will be told and retold as one of the striking acts of heroism and endurance in the great war. My hearty and grateful congratulations go to you and your associates.

NEWTON D. BAKER, Secretary of War.

The idea of presenting by motion pictures reproductions of the striking episodes of the war in which the Seventy-seventh Division participated is fine. I understand these pictures will include Major General Alexander and his staff and also Lieutenant Colonel Whittlesey of the Lost Battalion and the picture should prove a great success.

GENERAL P. C. MARCH, Chief of Staff, U. S. Army.

Wish you every success with your picture of The Lost Battalion and of Major General Robert Alexander and the other distinguished officers and men of the 77th Division which did such heroic work in France.

MILES POINDEXTER.

Americans will take everlasting pride in the exploits of The Lost Battalion. They will therefore view with interest the motion picture that presents the famous Major General Robert Alexander and Lieutenant Colonel Whittlesey and the other heroes of the Argonne in a reproduction of their famous deeds. Col. Whittlesey's remark is truly American.

COLEMAN DU PONT.

The Lost Battalion added a glorious chapter to the history of American Arms. Success to you in your project in reproducing their exploits on the screen.

J. W. WADSWORTH, Jr., U. S. Senator from New York.

What American heart will not thrill with pride when Lieut. Colonel Whittlesey appears on the screen in actual person reading the insolent demand of the Germans to surrender and when he is seen making his now historic reply telling the Huns to "Go to H....."

JACOB H. SCHIFF.

I wish all success to "The Lost Battalion." Can imagine no more thrilling production than the motion picture accurately presenting General Robert Alexander, Colonel Whittlesey and the heroic doughboys in action in the Argonne.

CHAS. S. WHITMAN.

It is fitting that the heroic action of The Lost Battalion should be preserved on the screen.

Attorney-General A. MITCHELL PALMER.

Lost Battalion is unexcelled in human interest. In the annals of bravery the refusal of Lieutenant Colonel Whittlesey to surrender is well worthy of preservation on the screen. I wish you every success.

Secretary of State, ROBERT LANSING.

THE LOST

"The Lost Battalion" has lifted the motion picture from a form of entertainment to the altitude of a historical record.

C. S. FARNSWORTH, Major-General U. S. A.

Every man who answered the call to the colors will appreciate the big patriotic purpose behind "The Lost Battalion." Lt. Colonel Whittlesey's reply to the Germans will go echoing down the corridors of time as typically representative of the Do or Die American spirit.

WILLIAM SIBERT, Major-General U. S. Army.

I am glad to add my voice to those of the other United States Senators who appreciate the great worth of "The Lost Battalion." I regard this picture as a leader among big films.

DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, U. S. Senator.

Lieutenant Colonel Whittlesey has written as bright a page of History as Marshall Ney, Farragut, John Paul Jones or Nathan Hale. Your motion picture should be as endurable as the fame of The Lost Battalion.

THEO. G. BILBO, Governor of Mississippi.

"The Lost Battalion" is a wonderful idea. It appeals to me greatly. Should attract more patronage than any picture ever shown.

JOSEPH E. RAMSDELL, U. S. Senator.

The public of my State I am sure will gratefully appreciate such a soul stirring photo-drama as "The Lost Battalion."

C. B. HENDERSON, U. S. Senator.

I consider The Lost Battalion a picture of the highest patriotic as well as entertainment value. I wish it all success.

M. A. SMITH, U. S. Senator

As a national legislator, I take pleasure in commending a picture that will serve to inspire the youth of the nation as I am sure "The Lost Battalion" will.

GEORGE P. McLAIN, U. S. Senator.

New Haven presents the key of the city to "The Lost Battalion."

DAVID E. FITZGERALD, Mayor of New Haven, Conn.

The bravery of the members of the famous Lost Battalion in the face of a military situation demanding courage to a degree unusual even on the battlefield, is an inspiration of American manhood. We cannot too highly honor them. They are splendid examples of true heroism. As a Senator from the State from which these men came, I am indeed proud of their service.

WILLIAM M. CALDER, U. S. Senator.

Future American soldiers will be inspired to high deeds by "The Lost Battalion." It is the most remarkable screen feat I have ever heard of.

G. W. READ, Major-General, U. S. Army.

As a soldier, I am glad to pay homage to the survivors of The Lost Battalion. It will be a pleasure to see the film in which these brave men appear.

WILLIAM S. McNAIR, Major-General, U. S. Army.

And one hundred more famous Americans have wired or written us proclaiming it a great achievement—Anyone can see the original communications at derful Jury Said!

The Proving Ground

A motion picture which presents in person the military leaders and scores of the survivors of the Argonne in the true scenes of their adventures is an event of special interest in film production. "The Lost Battalion" will no doubt win high appreciation.

WILLIAM C. REDFIELD, Secretary of Commerce.

The people of my commonwealth are ever ready to pay tribute to real American heroes. I therefore look forward with interest to the motion picture which gives a faithful record of the immortal deeds in the Argonne and which presents in person the brave officer and men of "The Lost Battalion."

Any American whose heart will not swell with patriotic pride at sight of the motion picture that shows the deeds of The Lost Battalion must be lacking in the character that true Americans have.

REED SMOOT, U. S. Senator from Utah.

The people of this country should hail with delight any picture that brings before our eyes the actual heroes of "The Lost Battalion" re-enacting the actual scenes of their famous exploit in the Argonne.

C. M. SCHWAB.

Every audience in America should have opportunity to witness your film of "The Lost Battalion." It will serve to put new patriotism and reverence for our heroes into the hearts of our people.

W. P. HOBBY, Governor of Texas.

It will be a real pleasure to see the screen dramatization of the Lost Battalion. A well thought out film of this kind should not only keep alive the actions of these men but should serve also as a constant inspiration of the proper kind to those who see it.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT, JR.

American Motion Pictures are likely to Americanize the world. We need such pictures as "The Lost Battalion" to hasten that result.

R. C. CABELL, Major-General U. S. Army.

I will welcome opportunity to see a true film of The Lost Battalion just as I would welcome the chance of seeing those heroes in real life.

JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS, U. S. Senator from Mississippi.

When you bring the Argonne Forest and its embattled heroes before our eyes you are doing a great work. I wish success to your picture "The Lost Battalion." I naturally feel a deep interest in your picture as I was the first woman to go through the Argonne Forest after the fighting was over. I have just returned after spending the whole winter with our boys of the A. E. F. who know me as the little Mother.

MRS. BALLINGTON BOOTH, Volunteers of America and Y.M.C.A.

Boston would certainly be interested in having the opportunity of seeing the motion pictures in which Major General Alexander and Lt. Col. Whittlesey personally appear.

ANDREW J. PETERS, Mayor of Boston.

BATTALION

I wish to extend my thanks to Major General Alexander and Lieut. Colonel Whittlesey of the 77th for contributing their services in the production of a film of The Lost Battalion.

GEO. E. CHAMBERLAIN, United States Senate.

I wish all good things to you and Major General Alexander and his heroes who appear in the picture "The Lost Battalion." This film should have everlasting life.

ATLEE POMERENE, U. S. Senator from Ohio.

The exploit of The Lost Battalion was a splendid victory. An authentic film of that event should be an equally great victory in film science for its producer.

JOHN WALTER SMITH, U. S. Senator from Maryland.

The motion picture has played a great part in recording the war and preserving for future generations authentic reproductions of actual historic episodes, but this is the first time I have heard of a General and his staff and hundreds of his men reenacting their roles before the camera. Congratulations on the success of the "Lost Battalion."

P. J. McCUMBER, U. S. Senator from North Dakota.

I wish General Alexander and Lieut. Colonel Whittlesey all good luck in the pictured preservation of their war experiences.

MEDILL McCORMICK, Chairman Democratic Nat'l Committee.

Here is hoping that the "Standing Room Only" sign will be hung out when "The Lost Battalion" plays in New Orleans.

MARTIN BEHRMAN, Mayor of New Orleans.

"The Lost Battalion" is a picture among pictures. It heads the list of inspirational films.

GROTE HUTCHESON, Major-General, U. S. Army.

The people of the State of New York are proud of the heroes of the 77th Division and undoubtedly will flock to see on the screen an authoritative pictorial account of "The Lost Battalion," in which I am informed Major General Robert Alexander and Lt. Colonel Whittlesey personally appear, and reenact their historic achievements in the Argonne. It is indeed a notable feat to preserve in the films a living page of history.

ALFRED E. SMITH, Governor of the State of New York.

When Lieutenant Colonel Whittlesey told the Huns who asked him to surrender to "Go to Hell," he reached the plane of John Paul Jones. I congratulate you on your film of "The Lost Battalion."

D. W. DAVIS, Governor of Idaho.

The great Northwest awaits "The Lost Battalion" and may its success be as high as an Oregon pine tree.

BEN W. OLCOTT, Governor of Oregon.

We knew we had a great production but such praise nearly overwhelms us. Every exhibitor now knows "The Lost Battalion" is the greatest picture of the year.

HARRISON'S REVIEWS BY MAIL

Commencing this week, HARRISON'S EXHIBITOR REVIEWS, which have appeared in MOTION PICTURE NEWS for the past fifteen months, will be published by the undersigned, independently, under the new title HARRISON'S REPORTS. They will be mailed to subscribers every Saturday at the yearly subscription of $10.00. Film advertising will under no consideration be accepted; this is to remain the permanent policy of the service.

Readers of MOTION PICTURE NEWS are well acquainted with the impartiality, fearlessness and accuracy of these reviews: They have been conducted true to their original conception—with the interests of the exhibitor at heart. Under the new plan, the field opens wider for the serving of these interests.

Not only will the utter independence of these reviews be maintained, but, under the new plan, the following advantages will be had:

(1) Immediate service. Reports by wire if called for.

(2) More direct, personal service. The specific needs of the individual theatre will be catered to.

(3) Market advice—practical, confidential—will be added.

(4) Brief, practical statements—the bare truth at all times—of the picture's value to the exhibitor as seen by an exhibitor who has absolutely no interest to serve but his client's.

Gentlemen:

You know me well enough to realize that I never go out of my way to recommend a picture, unless it was extraordinary merit.

"The Turn in The Road" has all of that and more. It is without a doubt the best picture I have yet seen upon the screen when properly understood and handled.

There is an appeal in this picture to all those people who are tired of dogmatism, formality and creed, and when you remember that more than two-thirds of the people of the United States are not affiliated with any religious society you will appreciate the more readily what I mean. The person who has lost the faith of child-hood because of the narrowness of sectarianism will find a haven of rest in the event underlying the plot of this production. Those who have been jarred loose from their pre-conceived ideas will welcome it. It was a distinct appeal to all modern thinkers who place reason above emotion, and yet recognize that we are naturally emotional.

"The Turn In The Road" is worthy of a long run wherever booked. I only regret that I did not book it for a longer period.

Sincerely,

Sam Atkinson

Gentlemen:

When I play a picture in my house that pleases my clients in an extraordinary manner I do not like to keep all of the enjoyment to myself. In this case I want to divide it with you.

Your picture "THE TURN IN THE ROAD" which I played last week caused more favorable comment from my patrons than any picture I have run in a long time. It is the kind of picture that causes your patrons to stop and tell you that they are getting what they want. I want to congratulate you, not only upon this picture, but upon the way you are coming in general. Keep it up.

Very truly yours,

Gentlemen:

I played "The Turn in the Road" last Tuesday and it was the best one we have had since taking over this Theatre.

We were compelled to stop selling tickets ten minutes before the first show started and people stood on the outside for one hour and a half waiting for the second show and we would out long before the first show was over.

It looks to me like you overlooked the value of this feature as we have some features that cost us twice as much and did not go over anything like this one did. I suppose you know I have booked this for a return date June 6 and from all indications it will go better the second than it did the first if I had the room. Any number of our patrons are coming to see it the second time. Any time you have a feature of the caliber of this one count me in.

Wishing you all the success possible, I am,

Yours very truly, R J McLean

On pages 496, 497, 498, 499 will be found congratulatory messages from theatre men the country over, on the new size of Motion Picture News.

Here are a few more which were crowded from those pages through lack of space.

" For the issue of June 28th, 1919, the MOTION PICTURE NEWS is to be heartily congratulated by all exhibitors of the country. It has many pages of good clean reading matter, regardless of the pages of advertising matter. " Like the soap maker who couldn't improve his soap, but made a better box, you have improved the NEWS the one way possible. The size is fine. But it's the stuff between the covers that has made your paper great. Kindest personal regards."

Morris A. Kashin

" It is with a great deal of interest and satisfaction that I take this opportunity to compliment you on the new form in which the MOTION PICTURE NEWS is being published. To my mind it bespeaks the progressive manner in which your publication has always endeavored to be a leader, and marks a long step forward in the production of a first class motion picture trade journal. Also I am pleased to note that the MOTION PICTURE NEWS has not only increased in size, but also in the quality and manner in which the news of the trade and other matters of interest to exhibitors are presented. Once again compliment you on the progressiveness of your journal."

Hitting the Pocket Book

¶Just what is the exhibitor attitude toward open booking?

Any impartial student of the business, for the past several years, must have had the firm conviction that the arrival of open booking would be nothing short of an exhibitor millenium.

If there is one thing that exhibitors have been generally protesting against it is the system which has made them contract for pictures they don't want.

And yet, now that open booking looms large upon the horizon, there are a few open protests against it and some unexpressed uneasiness over it.

The silent majority of exhibitors, the very large silent majority, is keeping silent.

If we may speak for this majority we would first separate them into two classes: Those who do and those who do not care whether they have open booking or not.

There are houses which prefer program booking and feel no incentive to change. There will always be such houses; and in this connection we might remark that it has never been the good principles and good product of the program system which exhibitors in general have objected to, but rather its flagrant abuses.

Then there are the exhibitors who are keen about the selection of their pictures, who want to pick them one by one. These comprise not merely the large theatres in the large centres but many a small house in an isolated district.

Speaking for these many theatres, we feel sure that they look forward to open booking as a business opportunity long coveted.

Some uneasiness may exist. In wanting open booking they want just that and not a camouflaged article; and they don't want it used as an unfair leverage against them—especially in the matter of rental prices.

This business has grown old enough to know that the producer and his exhibitor's interests are identical.

Any producer who "gyps" his exhibitor is only "gyping" himself.

Producers will flourish through their dealer's—the exhibitor's—prosperity—and they know it.

They will not book one picture here and another there for purely selfish and shortsighted interests. They are not going to play one house against another. They are not going to ask ruinous rentals.

They are going to protect their exhibitors—and, thereby, themselves.

On the other hand the exhibitor must realize the following facts:

First, there are no settled standards of price in this business.

Advertising, good advertising, of the show, proves right along its remarkable effect upon gross receipts.

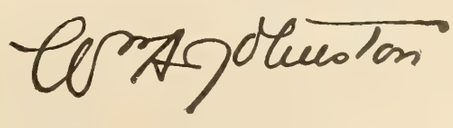
And advertising—and here is the point—is going to be the biggest factor in open booking. Once the exhibitor has selected his picture it is up to him to advertise it for all its worth—else the other fellow will be able to get more out of it.

And in this new advertising situation, it seems only fair that the manufacturer who delivers a good picture should get his share of the new and increased earnings—provided he also does his share in helping the exhibitor advertise it,—and his share here is a big and pressing one.

Open booking, we have said, is here anyway.

It is here because it is fundamentally correct and proper. It was bound to come—in time. Nothing could stop it.

Open booking is modern merchandising and its bulls'-eye is advertising.



Speaking Editorially

Advertising on the Screen

WE are in receipt of a letter from an Ohio exhibitor, Carl F. Miller, of the Strand, Fremont, on the subject of advertising on the motion picture screen.

The writer declares, "This week and also last ewek we were in receipt of letters from one of the big producing companies in which they enclosed contracts for pictures which we were to get free provided we would agree to run them. We have found that both of the pictures offered us were reels advertising some product. . . . This producer was very careful to avoid telling us that these were advertising reels."

In the further course of the letter Mr. Miller registers two complaints against screen advertising. "In the first place," he declares, "we do not believe that any first class house can afford to display advertising on their screens as that is certainly not what their patrons are paying to see.

"In the second place we do not think it is playing fair with the second or third grade houses when they are asked to donate the use of their screens gratis."

Motion Picture News has on many occasions in the past four years expressed its opinion concerning screen advertising. It has taken the stand that the day will surely come when advertising pictures will be an important factor in the industry.

But we have also contended that this day will not come until the advertising subject measures up in entertaining value with the average photoplay, just as magazine advertising carries practically as much interest to the reader as the editorial contents.

And we have also contended with equal force that when this day comes that finds the advertising picture an established factor the exhibitor will sell his screen space and receive equitable payment for it just as the publisher now sells his magazine space.

The development of the screen to more closely parallel the publishing business will not come through slip-shod industrials nor distribution methods that consist merely of efforts to "slip something over" on the exhibitor.

That day is passing.

One indication of this is found in the fact that the subject of which Mr. Miller writes was offered to him free. The day is not far distant when advertising subjects found their way into some of the better known programs at regular rentals.

Cincinnati and the Trade Rules

THE Cincinnati correspondent who told Motion Picture News that exhibitors in that exchange territory were completely satisfied with the rules recently adopted by the Cincinnati Exchange Managers' Association is no longer connected with this publication.

That is sufficient evidence of the attitude of Motion Picture News.

Motion Picture News is the only trade publication which has taken a flat-footed editorial stand in opposition to the "Trade Rules." The Cincinnati story was published under the impression that the rules adopted there were of a different and more satisfying character.

Our attitude still remains as expressed in the editorial, "Trade Rules and Raid Rules," appearing in the July 28th issue.

Remember the Old Days?

DO you remember the days, about four or five years ago, when it was a simple matter to find people who believed that the serial craze was due for an early death?

Each serial that was issued was proclaimed by the "wise experts" as the last. "People are tiring of them," they said.

Turn to the news columns of this issue and read of the expansion of Pathe's serial plans for next season. The number of the serials, the quality of the stories and the production forces add but one more laugh to the many we all have on ourselves for some of the ideas we entertained five years ago.

Grafting on the Government

THE Congressional committee investigating the conduct of the War Department during the conflict just ended has hopefully shot an arrow into the air by allowing a story to reach the newspapers that its searchers are hot on he trial of film grafters cooperating with government departments.

About the most concrete statement yet forthcoming from the committee concerns the use of government agencies to distribute private advertising subjects.

To the man sitting at some distance from the political maelstrom it does not seem that this is the right track.

Advertising films have a right to the use of Governmental agencies— as strong as the right of the farmer to plentous free services, or the Congressman to his franking privilege. Any business man can tell the committee that the Bureau of Economics is doing a valuable work for American industry in the dissemination of industrial subjects.

But if this statement is merely a "smoke screen," and the committee is really going deeper into the search for graft it will carry the best wishes of the motion picturfe industry.

For the picture industry will emerge from an investigation with clean linen.

But if rumorists and gossip mongers are to be credited the same cannot be hoped for official and near-official Washington.

The Pot of Gold

EXACTLY why any sort of connection in the motion picture industry is still looked upon—to the outsider—as the stepping stone to great wealth, is hard to determine. Wide press agentry of fabulous fortunes made, and enormous salaries paid in the business, has given the fallacism impetus. Human foiable in the shape of constant search for, and belief that there is a way of attaining fortune without equible endeavor, has done its part.

Each week's list of incorporations granted for one thing or another, seems longer than its predecessor. Just as, perhaps, each week's list of men who failed in stock gambling, or through roseate ventures built on visionary foundations, is more extended than the last.

The fortunes made are well known to everyone. The failures —and they are in the majority—are not known. They do not come within the realm of press agentry.

This world has been reaching for its pot of gold, Peace, for upward of five years. One hundred million fell by the trail before the intrepid survivors grasped thei rtreasure.

There are fortunes still to be made in motion pictures. There is scarcely a limit to the number who may make their name a byword as a success in world's battle.

The rainbow of endeavor, however, cannot be spanned by a quick, effortless jump.

The Author's Day Is Here

THE outstanding fact of the elaborate Goldwyn announcement this week is the stress laid on the proper recognition of the author and director.

Of course this emphasis is to a great extent repetition of what Mr. Goldwyn and others have been declaring for some weeks past but with the weight of a "Policy Announcement" added to it the statements take on interest.

It is certainly a most ambitious and elaborate program that Mr. Goldwyn has laid down, and it is also an able and well equipped organization that he counts on to "carry through."

Dealing in Personalities

AS we meander merrily to press we have the sneaking idea that enough news to get out an extra edition is going to break before this lengthy week-end is over.

It started out that way Thursday morning. William Fox came to bat with the William Fox story that we hinted at last week. With Pearl White and William Russell as new additions to his string the indications are that Bill Fox is not going to be caught napping in the mad scramble for business that this Fall will bring.

Close on the heels of the Fox story Thursday morning brought a big one in the confirmation from Paramount of the rumors that they would form affiliations with the speaking stage. And the mere mention of the name Frohman tells the class of these affiliations. Adolph Zukor, producer for stage and screen, it reads now.

How many years will it be before our picture magnates are the largest producers of stage plays, the greatest publishers of novels, in control of the song field, and setting a new pace in the newspaper syndicate field?

If the present speed keeps up we are here to say that it won't be years. We think we know men who will make it months.

Speaking of film men's expansion into all branches of publishing this year, and the development that has come about in the picture world should give W. R. Hearst and C. F. Zittel the biggest opportunity they have yet had. We haven't heard much about Cosmopolitan Productions lately—probably too busy working to talk—but we'll keep an eye on them in the Fall scramble.

AMONG the news items that may sneak up and break on us just after the book has gone to press is one we have been awaiting from the neighborhood of 1600 Broadway for many weeks. Concerns a new distributing organization with a number of old faces. Will surely stir things up by coming into the game just when all the magnates have decided that the cards are dealt and it is time to start playing the hand.

Speaking of this possible story reminds us that the Clara Kimball Young announcement is long overdue. About the time all the distributing organizations are ready to shoot there should be one or two big splashes in the state right field. Based on the belief that open booking will help the independent and the fact that the state right market is coming to life even now. As F. O. Nielsen, of Chicago, told us during the week, "If you have a $100,000 production you can sell it as quick as talking; if you have thirty thousand dollar picture you may as well shelve it."

Among the exhibitors we met during the wek were Br'er Gintz, of Wilmington, Gene Clark, of Natchez, Mississippi, and Gaston Dureau, of the Saenger forces. These hectic open booking days and rumors of producr-theatre affiliations have the exhibitors of the country flocking to New York with increasing regularity. You could book fifty per cent. on any feature without leaving Broadway.

THAT subject of booking reminds us of something. If you were able to sign a week's booking with each of the exhibitors whose names appears on pages 496, 497, 498 and 499 of this week's MOTION PICTURE NEWS you would have productions cost back on any feature—no matter how big.

And each one of these names was signed to a telegram of congratulation to MOTION PICTURE NEWS on the new enlarged size. Isn't that enough to make a perfect day for any trade paper editor?

Last week we told you what New York thought of the new size. This week the verdict is from the field. And it's unanimous. Need any more be said?

There comes a rumor to our desk that the S. A. Lynch Enterprises are going as far afield as Oklahoma. Growing, ever growing. We haven't any further details, which we regret. For if there is one sure way to make a Southern exhibitor happy it is to tell him something about S. A. Lynch. If we were a Secret Service operator we could earn a decent year's salary dishing up information about the future plans and intentions of S. A. Lynch for Southern exhibitors.

TWO important news stories broke out in the field this week. One concerns the passage of the Pennsylvania bill calling on the producers and distributors to put up cash security for all advance deposits they hold in that State.

If the bill receives the Governor's signature there will be some tall happenings in the next few weeks. We imagine some of the companies will prefer to give up the advance deposit practise rather than tie up securities with the State Censor Board. Out at the St. Louis convention Marcus Loew chided exhibitors for introducing such bills, saying that if they spread to all states only one picture organization would be strong enough to continue in business.

Quite a statement—if you think it over from every angle. And to our mind nothing to tell exhibitors who are seeking only the protection of their own interests and care little for the fate of ambitious producers.

The other interesting story from the field tells of the formation of the Northwest exhibitor organization along cooperative lines. Well worth keeping an eye on.

Joe Lee is just one of the many film men who accidentally found it necessary to go to Ohio this week on business. And, of course, it's just as easy to be in Toledo on the Fourth. But Joe went with a clean conscience, for he had just put something over in cabling congratulations in Anita Stewart's name to President Wilson on the signing of the Peace Treaty. Back came a cable of thanks from the Prexy himself.

OUR own photo gallery introduces to you this week the industry's most informal and nonchalant magnate. W. E. Atkinson, general manager Metro, is the same friendly looking person any day you meet him that he looks in the photo on this page.

Which is probably the external evidence of the reason why everyone who meets Br'er Atkinson goes on saying a good word. We have heard so many of them that we took it on ourselves to get this photo for our gallery this week.

While on the subject of Metro let us convey a couple of tons of good wishes to Jack Meador, efficiently carrying on the publicity and advertising efforts of that organization. You've got a great big rooting section boosting for you, Jack.

Harry Poppe, the Rolfe publicity and advertiseing expert, who has been postponing an operation until business conditions slowed up a bit, is now in St. Mary's Hospital. We understand that the operation is only a slight one. Here's hoping to see you back on the Rialto soon, Harry. And you'd better hurry because the market is waiting for that female Tarzan picture with its corking opportunities for exploitation.

FRANK HALL just keeps on going at a fast pace with never a let-up. His latest trick is to secure the rights to the Willard-Dempsey pictures. From indications we think his whole organization journeyed to Toledo this week to take the pictures.

Joe Kelley travelled along. Harry Diggs is out in Toledo. From six to eight camera men are on the job. Looks as though it is going to be done right.

Moral: "Beware the Sucker!"

Being the Fable of the Wise Guy Who Unloaded a Dying Arcade on an Ambitious Young Man and the Fate That Ambition Leads To SUCKERS come and Suckers go in the picture business—but once upon a time there was a Sucker who came, then saw, and conquered. Which is not at all according to the Hoyle of Suckerdom.

So we are going to tell you the tale of this particular Sucker—as an inspiration to some of us, and as a warning to some of you. You never can tell what an Enraged Sucker will do.

This particular member of the species happened to be in the Clothing Business—with the Knickerbocker Sponging Company, on the lower East Side of New York. He was pretty successful, too—and Ambitious. One day a Friend pointed out to him the amount of Money that appeared to be rolling in the doors of a certain penny arcade in Brooklyn.

The Sucker showed Interest. This was a signal to the proprietor of the arcade to get out his fishing rod, tackle and Sucker Bait.

"Why, this place is bringing in so much Money," he said, "That I am thinking of selling it just so that I can go away and catch up on Spending. I might even sell it to you—you look like a bright young man. To tell the truth, though, I don't care much whether I sell it or not. If you were anxious I might consent."

The Sucker decided to Investigate.

They always do.

So for three days the Sucker haunted nearby corners and other vantage points. He watched with Bulging Eyes as the Crowds streamed into the arcade. There were no Dull Hours for this arcade and in the evening there were Near Riots of Palpitating Patrons seeking to rid themselves of Itching Pennies.

The Sucker fell.

They always do.

He almost begged the proprietor of the arcade to go off to Palm Beach and enjoy his Wealth. The proprietor hesitated—not more than half a second—and consented.

He had some worries about whether he would be able to handle the Crowds that stormed the arcade, but he determined to Do or Die.

And then the Sad Awakening.

We could give you the Details—the Local Color—the Heart Interest.

But we'll save you that—and get to the Point.

The Mad Mob that had been pouring into the arcade during the three days that the Sucker watched was on the Payroll! They were all Working for the proprietor, having been slipped Plenteous Gobs of Pennies to spend in the arcade. They were a Bluff, a Fraud, a Deceit.

Here Is Where Our Ambitious Young Man Got His Start—Paying the Rent on the Second Floor of 116 East Fourteenth Street

And here the story of most Suckers ends. From the Sad Awakening they go to the Bitter End.

But not this "Sucker."

He was One in a Million.

He is One in a Million.

He was—and is—William Fox!

He just buckled down to the job and decided that out of a Humbug he would make a Real Thing. He started making a Regular Place out of the Compo Board Set.

And, Gosh Blame Us—he did it!

Before many months he had two other Gold Mines. And the Chain was being operated from Offices—though these latter consisted solely of Desk Room at 24 Union Square.

He was no longer a Sucker—now he was a "Showman." And though we hate to jump ahead of our Thrilling Story—we are here to say now that he is today the Showman Par Excellence of the Fillum Game.

Getting back to our History—the period is about 1905—the Chain was at this time augmented by the leasing of the Dewey Theatre on Fourteenth Street and the Gotham on 125th Street. With deals like this our Young Hero was beginning to Create a Stir.

Then he Capped the Climax by branching from the theatre into the distributing end, He organized the Greater New York Film Rental Company, with offices at 116 West Fourteenth Street.

Thus was the Nemesis of General Fillum born unto this earth!

Greater New York spread from the Big City out through the East giving to Independent Exhibitors—or Outlaws, if you were on the inside—the one and two-reel masterpieces of the Balboa Company, the Great Northern Company, and other Pioneers.

The Story from then on is so much a Steps to Success recital, so much a Steady Climb to Commanding Affluence that we can almost let the Press Agent tell it to you. Even that Hardy Animal can't overflow it with Untamed Adjectives nor give it Too Much Color. Because the Story is the Goods.

In fact we think we will let The Other Fellow tell you the rest of the Tale of the Sucker who Swallowed the Bait, Hook, Line, Rod, and Fisherman. Here he goes:

Mr. Fox organized the Box Office Attraction Company for the purpose of producing his own pictures. But before he produced a single foot of film he formed a selling organization that covered the principal cities of the country. While he made preparations for producing his own photoplays he also continued distributing film produced by other companies.

The office of the Box Office Attraction Company occupied part of the fifth floor of the building at 130 West 46th Street, most of which building is now occupied by the Fox Film Corporation.

Associated in the direction of the first picture produced by Mr. Fox was J. Gordon Edwards, then stage director of Mr. Fox's dramatic stock company at the Academy of Music. Mr. Edwards has been with Mr. Fox ever since, and has staged some two score motion picture productions, including such big film spectacle dramas as "Twelve of the Night" and "The Lone Star Ranger."

At that time Mr. Fox had only one company of players. The first picture was staged at the Eclair studio in Fort Lee, N. J. Later pictures were made at Scott's Farm on Staten Island and in a studio in Jersey City.

After a few pictures had been produced it became apparent that the existing organization was not based on sufficiently comprehensive lines to permit the development that seemed assured. In consequence the Fox Corporation absorbed the business of the Box Office Attraction Company and began immediately to produce on a much larger scale. Mr. Fox purchased the Eclair studio, organized new companies, engaged additional stars and popular leading players, and gave notice, by aggressiveness if not by words, that he was in the producing business on a big scale.

He made himself more and more a power in the industry. One studio became altogether inadequate for his purpose. Others were bought. More companies were organized. More stars were engaged. Additional office space was taken in the building at 130 West 46th Street. New branch offices were established in this country. Canada was invaded, then South America, Australia, New Zealand and Cuba; and when the great war burst on the continent of Europe immediate advantage was taken of non-production there for the establishment of a chain of Fox branch offices centering at London and Paris.

Having purchased or leased a number of studios in the East, Mr. Fox now established a production plant at Hollywood, California, being attracted there by the extraordinary facilities which that section affords for the filming of pictures. The Fox Hollywood plant was one of the largest studio plants on the Pacific Coast, covering several acres. Despite its size, it was not large enough to meet the growing demands placed upon it by the increasing business of the Fox Film Corporation. Since it was laid out in 1916, the studio and laboratory facilities have been increased several times by the purchase of adjoining tracts and the erection of additional buildings.

This Spring, Mr. Fox, in company with Mr. Sheehan, spent several weeks in Europe establishing ten new exchanges and preparing for the opening and operation of studios and laboratories in England and France. The branch office organization of the Fox Corporation now literally covers the civilized world, with the exception of Germany, Austria and Hungary. There are twenty-three branches operated in the United States under the immediate supervision of Herman Robbins, assistant general manager of the company, and six district managers working under his direction. In Canada there are six branch offices, in Great Britain nine, in Scandinavia and Russia two, in Australia five, in New Zealand one, in Cuba one, in South America six, and on the continent of Europe ten—making a total of sixty-three branches. Many of these are quartered in buildings owned by the Fox Film Corporation, and all are operated as an integral part of the Fox organization.

With the opening of the new $2,500,000 William Fox Building in New York City and the completion of plans for work abroad, the Fox Film Corporation will have its extensive business centralized in two immense plants—one in the East and one on the Pacific Coast—with supplementary plants in England and on the European continent. The New York plant is not to effect a reduction of the work in California, or modify the plans for European production.

Some Day You'll Want to Quote a Clergyman on the Motion Pictures

"ONE of the most effective ways to combat the spread of Bolshevism is the movie," said the Rev. Robert J. MacAlpine, pastor of the Central Presbyterian Church, of Buffalo, one of the most influential in the city, in the course of a sermon on the subject.

"There are many ways of educating the public," said Mr. MacAlpine, "for example the press, the pulpit, the platform and the schoolroom. But by far the most effective means is the movies. Every day it reaches 10,000,000 of our population. The moving picture theatre should, therefore, be used by our government, federal, state and city, to bring systematically before our citizens the genius and benefits of American democracy.

"This is our biggest and best avenue for genuine Americanization. A four-minute Americanizing speech should be made in every movie theatre in the land at least once a week. Every movie manager and audience would welcome it. Think of the effect in Buffalo alone in reaching in this manner every week 50,000 of our citizens with such a propaganda. Our city department of public welfare could do nothing more genuinely timely and far-reaching than to lead the other cities of the nation in such a needed movement."

A Loop-Hole in Raised Admission Tax

THE Bureau of Internal Revenue has further defined regulations governing the tax on admissions to places of amusement, pertinent points raised on which, with the rulings, were published in MOTION PICTURE NEWS in its issues of June 28 and July 5.

A specific example which will enlighten exhibitors and guide them in their admission rates, follows:

"The act imposes a tax of 50 per cent on the price of admissions to places of amusements in excess of the 'regular or established price.' In the case of a theatre the price decided upon by the management before any of the seats are put on sale is the established price. If, however, the management stages a performance which is to run three weeks, sells seats in advance, and, after the second week, decides to increase the price of orchestra chairs for the remaining week from $2 to $2.25 there is a tax of 12½ cents due from the theatre for each ticket sold for $2.25. This tax must be paid by the person selling the ticket and is distinct from and in addition to the tax on the established price of admission—in this instance 20 cents—which must be paid by the purchaser of the ticket."

Our Weekly "Get Acquainted" Department

Meet the Boys on the Film Firing Line

THESE are the Ascher brothers three, Nathan, Max and Harry, who guide the destiny of Chicago's greatest chain of exclusive motion picture shrines, that make up one of the largest chains in the world.

Only in 1912 they entered the movie field, and then with twin houses, the Panaroma and President, two of the Southside's first showplaces devoted to the new art. To these initial links, there has since been successively welded the long chain of neighborhood amusement institutions found near the hub of practically every busy community over the north and south sides.

Not only within the city limits is their fast growing chain confining itself. Last year marked the opening of the Ascher Midway theatre at Rockford, one of that city's most pretentious edifices, and now in the course of construction, equally imposing structures are fast taking shape in South Chicago and in Cincinnati, Ohio, to be opened in the fall.

Nathan Ascher, eldest of the brothers, heads the firm, and when the urge of golf or fishing is not too strong, is overseeing the construction of the newest addition to the circuit, or choosing the site where ground shall next be broken.

Ask Max Ascher what is going to put the furrows in his brow, and, unless it's a day when the Sox have had a bad time of it on the diamond, he'll probably say "managing the managers." When not serving in the capacity of the firm's treasurer or occupied with the direction of the Oakland Square theatre, which he manages personally, he finds in this his most strenuous diversion.

And now for Harry Ascher, youngest of the trio. When it is not Harry Ascher, secretary, for as such he serves the firm; or Harry Ascher, manager, as the Metropolitan audiences know him, it is Harry Ascher, censor.

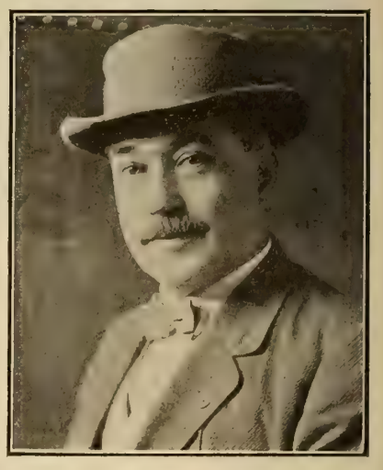
D. J. SHEPHERD, who with George W. Cuff owns the U. S. Palace theatre and the Colonial theatre in Orange, New Jersey, is one of the showmen who took over a house with the "Can't" sign over the lobby and proved that he Could. The Palace was one of those theatres that would never pay—but did as soon as the right man took hold of it.

But Mr. Shepherd was surely equipped for the task. For at the age of seven he started in the amusement game—distributing handbills. Later he achieved the heights of doorkeeper. On up he climbed in the show game until the movies came along when he entered the new art as an operator. Later he did a bit of acting with Famous Players and finally broke into the theatre and running three small houses in Elizabeth first.

L. W. BARCLAY was a newspaper man until 1913, when he started writing advertising for a Johnstown, Pa., house as a side-line. The fillum bug must have hit him hard for he is now managing three houses in that city.

These are the Nemo, Parkview and Grand, owned by the Grand Amusement Company, of which George Panagotacos is president and general manager. The Nemo, the largest of the trio, runs the pick of the big stuff, some of the recent attractions including "Mickey," "Heart of Humanity," "Salome," "The Lion and the Mouse," and "The Unpardonable Sin." The pick of Select and Fox Standards also go into the Nemo.

Conditions at present in the Johnstown territory are not all that they should be, according to Mr. Barclay.



L. H. O'DONNELL, former president of the Indiana Exhibitors League, is well known to MOTION PICTURE NEWS readers as a man who has done some stiff fighting against advance deposits and other problems.

Mr. O'Donnell runs the Grand Opera House and the Theato at Washington, Indiana, the houses being owned by the O'Donnell-Eskridge Amusement Co., of which S. C. Eskridge is treasurer.

Bre'er O'Donnell has been in the picture game since 1910. For over a year now he has been booking independently, showing all First National, Universal, Vitagraph, World, Exhibitors-Mutual and Fox specials. He finds conditions good and the year nineteen-nineteen the best in his experience.

W. W. WATTS—wonder if he ever had a press agent who made it Winning Ways Watts—is running the Vaudette and Gaiety theatres at Springfield, Illinois. He has been an exhibitor since 1906—which is going back some in this game.

Supplying the picture entertainment for a city like Springfield is no easy job. "The city has the reputation of being somewhat of an aristocratic center," declares Mr. Watts. "There are many wealthy people living here, and as it is the state capital that also brings many of the better class to our theaters. Only the finest pictures will draw at the Vaudette and Gaiety, and we don't even get chance for a second breath if the picture is poor. The reaction is quick—business is sure to go way off. And, of course, it goes without saying that clean pictures are a necessity for our clientele.

SPLIT REEL STORIES OF INTEREST

What's the Answer?

Will Exhibitors Need National Bank Backing for Advance Deposits Under Open Booking?

Editor Motion Picture News,
New York City.
Dear Sir:

I HAVE just finished reading the editorial page of the June 28th issue of the NEWS and a thought has come to me out of those editorials.

"Trade Rules—and Raid Rules" and "A New Word in the Vocabulary" when combined give rise to a complication.

Taking the latter first—If selective booking is to be the rule, what about the deposit system? How is that to be handled? Will an exhibitor be compelled to place a deposit on each individual picture? How much money will an exhibitor have to have in order to make those deposits? Must an exhibitor be backed by an UNLIMITED AMOUNT OF READY MONEY to be able to make a week, two weeks, month, or two months bookings? In the case of the small town exhibitor, where changes are from daily to two and three a week, where will he be at?

Some may say "Longer Runs," but he cannot do that on everything. He cannot afford to buy pictures all the time that will stand longer runs, because on those he invariably finds it necessary to increase his admission prices. That is one condition that he must keep away from as much as possible.

The rule at present is 25 per cent. of the rental price of the picture must be put up as deposit.

I have in mind one of the so-called Super Pictures which just recently came on the market, and which has been given much publicity in the trade papers. That picture was offered me, in a town of about 7,000, at $500.00, which would necessitate a deposit of $125.00. In order to properly handle that picture, an exhibitor should make his booking from four to six weeks in advance, and then arrange his exploitation in order to get the good of it. He would have $125.00 tied up for the four to six weeks on the one picture alone, in addition to his other pictures.

That brings up the first editorial referred to above. The trade rules and raid rules. And in that I just want to mention the matter of clean business methods which we certainly need, and, in the coming year are going to need more than ever.

Certainly there is going to be a necessity for some revision of the deposit system.

The fall contracts are going to come in right away, and right at a time when every theatre's receipts are at their lowest owing to the summer season.

A Dun or Bradstreet of the film business is absolutely necessary.

Somewhere in this land of freedom there is surely brains enough in "Fifth Industry"

NELSON ARTICLE NEXT WEEK

J. Arthur Nelson's series of articles suggesting a constructive program for the picture industry will be continued next week.

Five Years Ago—

PATHE Daily News is issued from 1 Congress St., Jersey City, and says that exhibitors are meeting with great success in showing the innovation.

Lew Dockstader, world's greatest minstrel, appears in a five-reel feature "Dan," by Hal Reid. Produced by All Star Features. Harry R. Raver, President; Augustus Thomas, director general.

The fourth annual convention of Motion Picture Exhibitors League, scheduled for Dayton, Ohio, for week of July 6-11, is planned by the promoters to be one of the biggest gatherings of exhibitors, exchange men, producers and accessory men ever held. George H. Wiley is Chairman and Managing Director of Special Convention Committee. M. A. Neff is President of the League.

Phillip Smalley and Lois Weber (Mrs. Smalley), have joined the stock company of Bosworth Inc., producers of the Jack London stories.

Pennsylvania exhibitors in state convention at Wilkes-Barre, oppose censorship of films in any form whatever and instruct their delegates to the national convention at Dayton to so report.

On account of the popularity of the longer feature pictures recently invading the market, the tendency of the people is to patronize the larger downtown theatres showing these features in preference to the program of short subjects. In Greater New York nearly three hundred of the smaller theatres have closed their doors on this account.

The New England exhibitors are practically agreed that the admission prices to motion picture theatres will never get to be more than ten cents.

A campaign is on in New Haven to educate the public to patronize the high class ten cent house instead of the nickel establishments.

The Film Renters Protective Association of Philadelphia, composed of exchanges, declare that all their members will refuse to book any house THROUGH the Stanley Booking Corporation.

Cincinnati exhibitors believe that the big six reeler has come to stay.

During the past week three more of the five-cent theatres have passed in Los Angeles. Two others have stepped into the ten cent admission class and are doing nicely.

Amalgamation of the two rival exhibitors' organizations is hoped for by many of the leading delegates to the Dayton convention.

Paramount Pictures Corporation, just organized, and distributors of the productions of Famous Players Film Co., Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Co., and Bosworth Inc., announce the names of the exchanges handling their product in the eleven territories of the United States.

"Soak 'em Again, Boys!"

So Says This Exhibitor After Reading "This Boy Is Sore"—"Jump on Those Exchanges"

IF I am any judge the "This Boy Is Sore" article in this week's issue is being read with many a hearty "Amen."

I have been an exhibitor eleven years and in that time I have fought for my rights (and been left dead on the field in a majority of the battles) with so many film exchanges that I couldn't remember one per cent of my grievances. For the past few years I have become so used to having exchanges "put things over on me," that about all I do is, write a perfunctory letter or two, pay and let it go. What's the use of wasting your time and spoiling your temper when you know it won't do you any good? The "gyps" are never big enough to make it worth while spending a couple of weeks' time and wearing out a perfectly good typewriter trying to get justice so the best thing to do is to stand for what you get (you won't get anything better somewhere else) and wait for a chance to get even—maybe.

However it seems to me that "This Boy Is Sore" has struck a possibility of remedying matters to some extent at least.

Publicity.

I never thought that any trade paper would have sand enough to take a real rap at the film exchanges.

My hat is off to the NEWS for so doing, and I suggest to exhibitors, that they tell their troubles the same way "This Boy Is Sore" and the writer are doing. We'll have an experience meeting. Don't make your stories too long and don't bother too much about trivial matters. Most of us have enough really serious complaints.

Get this started and maybe some of these "birds" who control the destinies of all the theatres in their territory will begin to sit up and take notice. What do you say, boys?

There is one point on which I don't agree with "This Boy Is Sore." Most exchanges aren't really crooked. The boys around these joints are a lot of incompetent, darn good fellows.

The trouble is this business got started wrong. Every man who has ever been around an exchange knows that nothing ever goes right, no time, no how. It's just slam bang, let her go, telephone ringing, telegrams coming in and nobody giving a darn whether anything is attended to or not. An exchange manager gets so used to having exhibitors kick that trouble rolls off him like water off a duck's back. If it didn't they'd take him to the "bug" house in a week. He takes somebody's word for everything about the place and everybody has an alibi. So the business has come to a point where no exchange ever makes anything good unless they figure they will lose the account and for the past couple of years that has been hard for the reason that every exchange has so much of your money that the exhibitor never has a look in.

There is one thing I know about "This

Northwestern Exhibitors Form a Body

Hold Meeting in Seattle and Form Circuit for Mutual Benefit, and to Book and Buy High Class Attractions in the Open Market

LEADING exhibitors from the Northwestern States, Washington, Oregon, Montana and Idaho, met in convention on June 26 at Seattle, to announce their new organization the Northwest Exhibitors Circuit.

Organized for the purpose of systematically booking and buying of open market special features, its activities will, it is declared by the sponsors, embrace all big state right productions as well as any big productions released by regular exchanges on the open market.

At the morning session by-laws were adopted, officers ratified and the objects of the corporation outlined. Establishment of cooperation and harmony among the various theatres in the second; encouragement of fair and progressive policies, and of closer relations between exhibitors and producers; and hopes of gradually raising the standards of the association are among the ideals of the circuit.

Identical Interests Cited

L. O. Lukan, of Pathe, and George Endert, of Paramount-Artcraft, were among the guests present, representing the Northwest Film Board of Trade.

Mr. Lukan, in a few brief words, called the attention of the members to the importance of the Northwest Film Board of Trade Convention to be held in July, and asked everyone present to give this their hearty support. Mr. Lukan also emphasized the fact that while he had not been informed as to the objects and the working policy of the Circuit, he knew that the Film Board of Trade and the association that was being formed would absolutely work in harmony as their interests were identical.

In the afternoon the Film Review Committee were chosen, consisting of C. E. McKee of Everett, William G. Ripley of Aberdeen, H. C. Lambach of Spokane, Frederick Mercy of Yakima, John Rantz of Bremerton, J. C. Stille of Portland, H. T. Moore of Tacoma, and James Q. Clemmer.

Mr. Clemmer, in a few well chosen remarks, thanked the members for their almost 100 per cent. showing, and then proceeded to outline the plans and policies of the Northwest Exhibitors Circuit, as follows:

"This is one of the most fair plans that has ever been conceived. There is only one member of the Circuit from each town. The watchword of the organization is to be "fairness" and at all times it will be the aim of the Circuit to follow a live and let live policy with both the producers and exchanges as well as among the exhibitors themselves. The distributors and producers, I am sure, will recognize the merits of our proposition. We are ready to do business with them for over 250 booking days simply as exhibitors. We do not anticipate going into the exchange business, but our proposition will enable the exchanges to sell us at one time without the slightest selling expense

"It is a well known fact that the selling expense in these four states is tremendous, due in a great measure to the long railway jumps between towns of any size. As a matter of fact, the selling expense in this territory rarely runs below 35 per cent. It is this high selling expense that has made it almost impossible for Seattle exchanges to do business on a profitable basis, and with the increased cost of production and the "fewer and better pictures," something must be done to eliminate any waste expense that is going on. All the members realize that they must be fair in price. Unless the producer can realize the money that a picture costs he cannot, of course, continue to make big pictures, and this organization wants big pictures and is going to do everything in its power to help to get them."

Officers elected were as follows: James Q. Clemmer, president and treasurer; Frederick Mercy, first vice-president; C. F. Hill, second vice-president; B. W. Bickert, third vice-president; E. C. O'Keefe, fourth vice-president; H. B. Wright, secretary and manager.

The Board of Directors consists of James Q. Clemmer of Seattle; J. C. Stille, Peoples Amusement Company of Portland; H. T. Moore of Tacoma; Frederick Mercy of Yakima; Frank T. Bailey of Butte, Montana; John Rantz of Bremerton; C. F. Hill of Albany, Oregon.

OHIO EXHIBITORS DISPLEASED

EXCEPTION is taken to a statement from a correspondent, published in Motion Picture News in the issue of July 5, to the effect that exhibitors in Ohio territory are pleased with plans of the Associated Film Exchanges of Cincinnati by John Slefert, president, and A. F. Kirzele, secretary of the Miami Valley Exhibitors League.

In a telegram to this office they said:

"One of the rules states that payment must be in the office before the film is shipped. Whoever sent information that exhibitors are pleased with this, deliberately lied. We are not pleased in any way with this ruling. One exchange has already dropped out of the Managers Association because the new ruling put them back further with their accounts than the old way of doing business."

Quinn Holds Second Meeting

Jesse Goldburg Speaks Strongly on Needs of the Producer and Producing

THE second meeting of the Motion Picture Co-operative Association took place at the Hotel Astor on Tuesday July 1, and the folks wto attended heard quite a few things from producer, exhibitor, director and others, which ought to help them bring good results to the film industry.

Great praise should be given Jesse Goldburg of the Frohman Amusement Company for the masterly way in which he put forth the producers viewpoint.

J. A. Quinn, president of the organization was his usual self again and spoke forcefully on the desires and needs of the exhibitor. He said: "I have spent three years studying the conditions in the motion picture business and have come to the conclusion that fifty per cent of those in the game ought to be cleaned out. We have suffered long enough from the "bunk" and "fourflushing" of the "kings of the industry." They are the biggest jokes in the world and should never have been inflicted on the people.

"Money is being burned up on big productions which are expensive to the exhibitor and on which he often loses money. Not four times in four years have I had a winner, while my people were crying for good stuff.

"We should have a committee chosen from the people to view the pictures and put their stamp of approval on them. This is the trade mark we need.

"While directors and producers were flying about in high power cars, I have known exhibitors who could not attend a meeting because they could not afford the small price of the dinner which went with it."

Mrs. E. D. Porter, editor of the Community Motion Picture Bureau, disagreed with Mr. Quinn on a point, saying she believed pictures were better today than ever and that the motion picture as it stands today is a "great commodity, badly abused" and that it should be standardized.

Mr. L. J. Rubenstein, the next speaker, said that so much "circus" publicity is sent to the newspapers that it is insulting to the man at the desk, who has come to regard the producer as a kind of a fool.

Jesse Goldburg said: "It is the hardest thing in the world to get two minds to agree in this industry. There is no more iniquity in the studios than there is outside. You say you want good pictures, educational and instructive. I have striven for them and find they are not the kind that are in demand.

"At a prominent Broadway theatre last week where a picture showing girls in costumes none too high or too low, the box office was broken down the first night and tremendous business was done. And yet you say the public wants good pictures."

Ad Clubs Recognizing Picture Advertising

Motion picture advertising has finally been officially recognized by Ad Clubs. The Pacific Coast convention of Ad Men at Portland, Ore., staged during the big Rose Festival in early June, had a special motion picture exhibit classification, with a handsome silver trophy cup, and the Couche Advertising Service, with its Majestic Theatre (Portland) newspaper display ads, won first prize.

It's the first time a convention of Ad Men in the West has included motion picture advertising in its exhibit schedule, and this section of the exhibit room was one of the most attractive of the big display.

Lynch in Florida?

Rumor says that the S. A. Lynch Enterprises will shortly invade Tampa. Several theatre managers have been approached and tentative offers made for their houses. One manager states that he had the info that if the houses could not be acquired, they would see new houses erected to oppose them.

Pennsylvania Showmen Win and Lose

CONTINUES AS "HOUSE OF SERIALS"

PATHE intends to live up to its title of "The House of Serials." Serials are the predominating note in its announcements regarding the coming season. Serials bigger than ever, more thrilling than ever—eighteen of them, are to come.

Aside from those, and the News Weekly, Pathe remains essentially a distributing corporation. Many feature contributions at hand, and to come, are named. It looks like a big year for Pathe.

Vice-President Brunet's announcement will be found on page 555, with further details on Pages 556, 557, 558 and on Page 500.

Bill Against Child Attendance in School Hours Resurrected and Passed; Measure Requiring Deposit by Exchanges Is Also Approved

IN the final legislative rush, the Pennsylvania lawmakers at their last session passed two bills vitally affecting two ends of the industry in that state.

The exhibitor was dealt a body blow when the Leiby bill, barring children between eight and fourteen years old from attendance at motion picture theatres during school hours unless accompanied by parent or guardian or unless with a written permit from the school teacher, was recalled from the discard and finally adopted.

Independent motion picture exhibitors who had banded together and sent a committee to the Capitol to advocate the passage of the Soffel bill won a victory by its passage.

Boon to Exhibitors

The Soffel bill, the exhibitors say, is designed to protect them against unreasonable financial exactions by film distributors. It was passed in the final rush of legislation with practically no opposition.

The bill requires the licensing of all distributors of films in Pennsylvania and requires the distributors to make certain deposits in money or securities with the State Board of Censors for the protection of the exhibitors, giving that body the power to revoke licenses for violation of the provisions of the measure.

The bill will have, the exhibitors believe, a far-reaching effect and will result in material changes in the methods of business transactions between exhibitors and exchanges in Pennsylvania. At present, exhibitors say, they are required to make heavy advance deposits with the exchanges when they contract for a series of films running for a long period. Often the series runs for a long term of months during which the deposit money is tied up, so far as the exhibitor is concerned, though it is available as "working capital" for the exchange men or distributors.

By requiring, under the terms of the bill, that the exchanges deposit with the board of censors amounts equal to the amounts they require of exhibitors in the form of advance payments on film contracts, the backers of the Soffel bill contend that the exchanges will be deprived of the use of the money and that hereafter there will be no financial advantage to the exchanges to demand the advance deposits and that therefore believe the advance payment plan will be discontinued.

The committee of exhibitors who worked for the passage of this measure was about the only body that came to the 1919 session of the Pennsylvania Legislature to do any serious work in the cause of motion picture legislation. It was composed of Fred J. Herrington, of Pittsburgh, former president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, and Henry Poke, J. W. Shearer and Chris Vollmer, also Pittsburgh exhibitors.

The Leiby bill was vigorously opposed by theatre owners as a menace to the business of theatres, and the passage of the measure, after it was defeated previously, was a shock to the exhibitors.

"BIG FOUR" OPENS A CHICAGO OFFICE

CRESSON E. SMITH has opened United Artists Corporation's Chicago distributing depot at 1202 Consumers Building, 220 South State Street, and it is reported that the "Big Four" Chicago office has already been put "on the map" of the Lake Metropolis, with business rushing.

Report Good Foreign Market

Metro's President Cables Enthusiastic Report of Conditions Across the Seas

RICHARD A. ROWLAND, president of Metro Pictures Corporation, who is touring Western and Central Europe in a personal survey of the motion picture situation abroad, has cabled a highly optimistic report of his observations to Harry J. Cohen, recently appointed manager of Metro's foreign department. Mr. Rowland's cablegram was sent from Paris after Metro's chief executive had gone thoroughly over the situation in London from the viewpoint of the producer, the distributor and the exhibitor, and a summary of his conclusions is that Metro's prospects in the foreign market were never so bright as they now are.

So encouraging was his chief's report that Mr. Cohen has decided to join Mr. Rowland abroad, where he will complete with him a tour which is to cover the whole European field from the British Isles to the eastern and southern extremities of Italy. Mr. Cohen, accompanied by his wife, will leave New York for the continent on the steamship Baltic, sailing July 12.

In addition to affording Mr. Rowland the very best first-hand knowledge of European tastes and European wants, his trip, he indicated in his cablegram to Mr. Cohen, is bringing him into personal touch with a great number of foreign manufacturers, distributors and exhibitors who are alive to America's predominancy in the motion picture industry and who, Mr. Rowland has found, are in a most receptive mood toward the newest and best produced here.

And on his part the Metro chief has been able to assure them that the forthcoming Screen Classics, Inc. and Nazimova productions to be distributed by Metro will be up to the very highest artistic standards, with distinct box-office value abroad as well as at home; because of the popularity of the successful plays and novels chosen and the ability of the stars; and because each production will be accompanied by a campaign of exploitation that will extend to the farthest reaches of the civilized world.

Give Exchanges' Views Advance Deposits

The exchange side of the deposit system was aired at the first of the get-together meetings of the Milwaukee F. I. L. M. Club held in that city lately. W. A. Aschmann of Pathe, President of the local association spoke on the relation of the exhibitor to the F. I. L. M. Association, and said in part:

"We in the film business have no merchandise to sell. We have no wares, no actual things, no real or personal property, nothing which can be traded or kept in stock to sell tomorrow if it is not sold today. We are selling time—film time, as it were, and the hour and the day on the calendar for which such sale was made appears but once and that time, that particular hour, that particular day when gone by can never be sold again.

"Since we have nothing but time to sell to the exhibitor and the public pays the exhibitor cash for such time there is no reason on earth why we should be asked to extend credit to anyone regardless of his financial responsibility. This fact has long been established and is conceded by all of the biggest exhibitors in the business and scarcely needs mention here. However, from time to time the theatres change hands and are taken over by men who may have been in the merchandising business for years, some of whom have established an extensive credit rating, others who are entirely irresponsible, and it is only for the benefit of such newcomers in the industry that I feel it necessary to call attention to these well established facts at this late date."

Get Canadian Franchise

Sterling Films, Limited, the new Canadian exchange, announces that it has secured the Canadian franchise for releases of the Film Clearing House and the company will be handling Frank Hall specials, J. Stuart Blackton productions and Rothapfel Unit Programs. The first release, "The House Divided," will be ready for booking shortly.

Film Theft Committee Continues Active

Syracuse has apparently been the trading center in stolen motion picture films, according to statements issued by the Film Theft Committee of the National Association on their investigations into this prevalent evil.

The committee's statement announces that John R. Van Arnam, "arrested two weeks ago in connection with a big theft case was ordered held for the Grand Jury after an examination. A New York broker, Hans Frohman, is also said by the committee to be free on $5,000 bail.

"We are not satisfied with arrests," states the Film Theft Committee. "We do not consider our work done until each case involving a theft is finally disposed of. We will make film stealing a relic of the past if we have to fill the jails with suspects."

Sheehan and E. T. Stewart.

This will be Sam Kaplan's third term in the president's chair. Others who were reelected were Messrs. Rotker, Sherman, Goldfarb, Jawitz and Wilson.

Loew Starts a Big Expansion in South

E. A. Schiller States Theatre Man Plans One Hundred New Houses by Labor Day at an Expenditure of Millions of Dollars

EXPANSION plans which call for one hundred new theatres and the expenditure of millions of dollars, are under way to bring the name of Marcus Loew forward even more prominently in the theatre and motion picture fields than it now stands.

E. A. Schiller, general representative of the Loew Southern and Southwestern Circuit is authority for the statement. Many of the theatres will be in the South—the same South in which Mr. Loew dropped one hundred thousand dollars establishing his name and houses, and then instructed Mr. Schiller to spend another hundred thousand if necessary to accomplish his end. The second fortune was not needed however, as in Southern territory Mr. Loew's name is now a by-word.

Mr. Schiller in an interview last week told of the plans made. He said:

Up-to-Date Theatres

Within three months work will begin on another theatre building in Birmingham to cost $400,000 to take the place of the present Loew's Bijou building, and we will use the present building for other amusement features which will be decided on later. Two new theatres representing an investment of more than $3,000,000, will be erected in Memphis by the Loew amusement interests. The first will be known as Loew's Metropolitan and will be located on South Main Street, with a seating capacity of 3,750. The second will be Loew's Palace on Union avenue, just west of Main street, with a seating capacity of 3,000. The Palace will be a movie theatre. The Metropolitan will replace the Lyceum, now leased by the Loew interests. Road shows will then be staged at the Lyceum as in the past. Both of the new structures will represent the last word in theatre construction being equipped with all modern conveniences. Marcus Loew intends to spend $100,000 in remodeling the Garden Theatre, Kansas City, Mo., for vaudeville and pictures, retaining Loew's Empress which is now in operation. There will be installed a $25,000 pipe organ, which will be the finest theatrical organ in Kansas City. Negotiations are under way for the erection in the downtown district of St. Louis, Mo., of a $1,000,000 theatre.

"The Loew interests already comprise two hundred theatres in various cities of the east and south, and having established himself in that field, Mr. Loew is now turning his attention to the west and southwest. Beginning next season, the Southern and Southwestern Circuit will include Richmond, Va., Chattanooga, Nashville and Memphis, Tenn., Atlanta and Augusta, Ga., Birmingham, Ala., New Orleans, La., Houston, San Antonio, Dallas, Waco, and Fort Worth, Texas, Oklahoma City and Tulsa, Oklahoma, Kansas City and St. Louis, Mo.

"Marcus Loew has completed the largest real estate deal ever transacted in Indianapolis,—the leasing of almost a quarter of a square of property in the heart of the business district of Indianapolis—and will erect a vaudeville theatre which will seat 3,000 people, and an office building.

Adler Heads Realart's New York Exchange

Lester W. Adler has been appointed manager of the New York Exchange for Realart Pictures Corporation and began his new duties July 1st.

Mr. Adler is well known in the profession, having been identified with the selling end of the business for the past ten years. He started selling motion picture supplies for Harry Mackay, Inc., ten years ago. Later he went into business for himself as an exhibitor in Brooklyn, after which he branched out on his own account and traveled over the country handling motion picture specials which were exhibited at various theatres. He then signed with the World Film Corporation as a salesman and was soon advanced from that position as assistant manager of the New York Exchange. Later he was made manager of the New York office for the World handling the northern New Jersey territory. From this position he went to Select Pictures as New York office manager where he has remained until the present.

Hughes "Loaned" to Young

Clara Kimball Young is reported to have been so impressed with the screen career of Gareth Hughes, the youthful star of Tyrad Productions, Inc., that she "borrowed" him to become her leading man for six weeks in her forthcoming production.

GOLDWYN SPEAKS TO EXHIBITORS

J. G. Hawks, Scenario Chief, has a statement on page 538.

Big Foreign Film Invasion

Newly Formed Concern to Invade Market; Handle 50,000,000 Feet of Film

COINCIDENT with the announcement of the signing of the final papers of the Peace Treaty comes the statement that an American organization of film men are ready to invade Germany, Austria, Hungary, Czecho-Slovak, Jugo-Slovak and other Balkan states, as well as Poland and Russia with 50,000,000 feet of American made motion pictures. The new corporation which was formed in New York recently carries the incorporate name of "The Atlantic Cinema Corporation" and the officers are Benj. Blumenthal, who was formerly a member of the Import and Export Company, as president; William M. Vogel, the exporter of Chaplin films, vice president and treasurer and Samuel S. Rachmann, secretary.

The president of the corporation is at present in Copenhagen, Denmark, completing the shipping arrangements for the placing of the American product across the borders of Germany as soon as the country is opened up. The shipments to the former neutral coutries are already under way.

Although the company has been in existence a very short time they have placed contracts with American manufacturers of motion pictures for a great quantity of the output that has been made here in the last four years. They have secured the entire program of releases that were made by the Triangle Company since 1915. This includes about 400 five and six reel features. In addition they have contracted for the entire output of Goldwyn, Select and Selznick.

Of the five reel productions alone their contracts call for more than 1,000 subjects which are ready at present, and as from five to eight prints of each subject will be used in the countries for exhibition purposes the figures of 50,000,000 feet of film for the initial invasion are conservative.

The company has also contracted for all of Charles Chaplin comedies that have been made and released by that star while he was with the Mutual and for his later releases through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

The offices of the Atlantic Cinema Corporation are located in the Longacre Building.

Aim to Eliminate Prejudice of Churches

A special committee representing the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry will attend the convention on motion pictures for church workers at Columbus, Ohio, which is scheduled for Tuesday, July 8th, in conjunction with the Methodist Centenary Celebration, now in progress in that city. The Executive Committee has designated the following to represent the industry upon this occasion: President William A. Brady; Walter W. Irwin, Chairman of the Executive Committee; Gabriel L. Hess, Chairman of the Censorship Committee; J. Robert Rubin and John C. Flinn of the Censorship Committee and Frederick H. Elliott, Executive Secretary.

As the result of many weeks of cooperation between the producing and distributing members of the National Association and the Methodist Minute Men, hundreds of reels of films including features, comedies, weeklies, serials, scenics, historials and dramatic and spectacular specials have been shipped to Columbus for exhibition in the three specially constructed theatres, including the Coliseum, seating 10,000 people, which is equipped with the largest screen ever erected.

Manie Gottlieb Arrives

After an absence of nineteen months in the service of the United States in foreign fields, Manie Gottlieb arrived back in New York City June 26. He will be mustered out at Camp Dodge, Iowa, and then visit his home in Minneapolis.

Mr. Gottlieb was general manager of the Favorite Feature Film Company of Minneapolis before this country entered the war. He visited England, France, Germany and also Italy.

A. Zukor Acquires Theatrical Interests

Look Out for $100 Fines

MOTION PICTURE NEWS is informed that many exhibitors are encountering /100 fines through failure to observe one feature of the Revenue Tax law.

This is the section requiring that the name of the theatre, price of admission, war tax, and total charge be printed on all tickets.

We have frequently brought this section to the attention of Exhibitors.

Revenue officers in many sections are enforcing it strictly.

Be careful

Charles Frohman, Inc., Merged; Big Theatre Season Planned; Best Stage Works to Be Filmed and Screen Classics to Be Dramatized

ACQUISITION of the Charles Frohman, Inc., interests marks the entry into the legitimate field of Famous Players-Lasky and at the same time indicates a further expansion of its motion picture activities.

Arrangements in the transaction were completed July 2 by Alf Hayman, treasurer and general manager of Charles Frohman, Inc., and Adolph Zukor, president of F. P.-Lasky. Hayman will remain as executive head of the theatrical enterprises.

While this expansion of the motion picture concern was not entirely unexpected, it came as a surprise to some. The amalgamation of interests means that F. P.-Lasky will be able to draw upon the best of the Frohman theatrical attractions for film production, while, similarly, the firm's best screen subjects will be presented on the stage.

New Theatres Planend

Elaborate seasons of dramatic entertainment are being planned for both the Empire and Lyceum theatres in New York, which are controlled by Charles Frohman, Inc., and the presentation of plays on tour. The relations between Charles Frohman, Inc., and the Klaw and Erlanger Circuit throughout the United States as well as the foreign connections of Charles Frohman, Inc., will be fortified and expanded under the new arrangement. It is extremely probable that new theatres devoted essentially to the legitimate drama, will be erected.

Since the death of Charles Frohman the theatrical enterprise has been conducted by Mr. Hayman. The high dramatic ideals of Charles Frohman and since his death, of Mr. Hayman, have also been the ideals of Mr. Zukor, Mr. Lasky and their associates, and the merging of the interests has for its purpose the strengthening of both moving pictures and the legitimate drama. Mr. Zukor will be elected president of Charles Frohman, Inc. Mr. Hayman will be managing director; Daniel Frohman will be vice-president; Elek John Ludvigh will be secretary. Mr. Ludvigh is secretary of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Mr. Zukor said concerning the deal: "Some time ago in our search for the world's greatest dramatic material and the world's greatest artists it became obvious that we should be obliged to participate in legitimate theatrical activities apart from our own motion picture enterprises. Our ambitions were of the highest, and our resources were such that we felt able to choose, as our associates in this new undertaking, virtually any firm or individual in the legitimate business. One firm only, however, represented our ideals—Charles Frohman, Inc.—which so admirably sustained the ideals of its founder.

"In entering the field of the legitimate drama, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has acquired for Paramount-Artcraft Pictures an almost inexhaustible supply of the finest dramatic material. We shall be able to offer authors, stars and producers unlimited opportunity, for the entire field of dramatic activity will be open to us."

"Lost Battalion" is Screened

Notable Gathering at Ritz-Carlton Witness the MacManus Production

FIVE hundred persons attended the first showing of the screen production just completed by Edward A. MacManus, "The Lost Battalion." The Ritz-Carlton in New York City was the place chosen for the testimonial premiere, and the elite were present in great number, including prominent people of the motion picture industry.

Based upon the famous event in the late war where an entire American Battalion far advanced in the Argonne Forest was besieged on all sides by the Germans for nearly a week, and refused to surrender, it registered heavily with the audience.

Many of the stirring incidents were re-enacted by the original heroes, and the director succeeded in injecting many romantic incidents, and the love element through the production, which runs about seven reels. The battle scenes with the "flashbacks" to the homes of the wealthy, the poor, the burglar, and the different nationalities, showed that the battalion was a great melting pot of grim fighting Americans.

A twenty-piece orchestra supplied the music for the showing. Some of those among the great number present were:

Maj.-Gen. Robert Alexander, commander of the 77th Division, and Staff. Lieut. Col. Charles W. Whittlesey, commander of the "Lost Battalion"; Major George G. McMurtry, Capt. Wm. J. Cullen, Lieut. Arthur F. McKeogh, of the "Lost Battalion"; Major-Gen. George B. Duncan and staff, Lieut. Col. and Mrs. W. de Lancey Kountze, Commander Louis M. Josephthal, Major and Mrs. de Lancey Kane Jay, Major and Mrs. Wm. H. Luckett, Miss Helen Luckett, Capt. Anson F. Robinson, Capt. Joseph D. Eddy, Capt. and Mrs. E. Vail Watson, Capt. and Mrs. Henry R. Wilson, Jr., Capt. Dwight E. Potter, Capt. Howard Grose, Lieut. and Mrs. L. Stuart Wing, Lieut. C. H. Matthiessen, Jr., Major Lewis Sanders, Judge and Mrs. Elbert H. Gary, Mr. and Mrs. C. Ledyard Blair, Mr. and Mrs. Sherwood Aldrich, Gen. Coleman du Pont, Rev. Dr. and Mrs. William T. Manning, Mr. and Mrs. J. Stevens Ulman, Mr. and Mrs. George Gordon Battle, Mr. Frederick C. Inman, Baroness de Hedemann, Mr. and Mrs. R. A. C. Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Winchester Fitch, Mr. Frank Tilford, Judge Clarence J. Shearn, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin K. Scheftel, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas B. Yuille, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. H. Hirst, Mr. Francis D. Gallatin, Mr. and Mrs. Stephen C. Millett, Mr. and Mrs. Walter T. Rosen, Mr. Percy M. Chandler, Mr. and Mrs. Anderson T. Herd, Judge and Mrs. George A. Carden, Dr. and Mrs. Wm. Allen Bartlett, Mr. and Mrs. Irving T. Bush, Dr. and Mrs. Alfred H. Thomas, Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Dickinson, Mr. and Mrs. Burton E. Emory.

Fifth Anniversary of Peerless Service

Plans are being made now by E. H. Emick, President and general manager of Peerless Film Service Inc., for celebration of this exchange system's fifth birthday on August first. This company opened offices in Los Angeles and San Francisco five years ago on this date with the avowed policy of handling comedy subjects and since that time have strictly adhered to this plan and now are rightfully entitled to the distinction of being the house of comedy of the West Coast.

Mr. Emick, the organizer, is one of, if not the oldest, independent man of the California territory. He came to the Coast nine years ago from Denver and brought with him the first independent releases. At that time he handled the National Film Distributing Company's output and was the first buyer of Gaumont and Solax subjects when they left the General Film. About this time Emick met with considerable difficulty in buying film in this country and so he purchased through the English market.

Although the Peerless has endeavored to predominate their program with comedy subjects they have handled a number of other dramas and several big features most successfully. Their offerings now include one and two reel Christie Comedies, Jester Comedies every two weeks and Mack Swain Poppy Comedies every two weeks in addition to twenty-four Arbuckle reissues, twenty-seven Chaplin reissues and fifty-one one and two reel Keystone reissues.

WHAT'S THE ANSWER?

to devise means for the handling of this business. There must be.

We all know there are fellows who are "unclean" in their methods in the exhibiting end. We all know there are the same kind of fellows in the distributing end. The same can be said of the manufacturing end. And the same can be said of any kind of business you can think of in this country.

Then, it is evident that it is the duty of those "Trade Boards" to devise means of taking care of the fellow who is trying to be legitimate, and to further make rules so stringent for the "unclean" fellow that he will either get out or clean house.

I hope that I have been able to make my meaning clear. It is a matter of much weight to the manager in cities of this size and smaller.

Yours for further success, I beg to remain,

Very truly yours,
A. W. BALLENGER,
Sun Theatre Co.,
York, Nebr.

"SOAK 'EM AGAIN"

Boy is Sore." He doesn't live in the Buffalo territory. Up here they won't even ship you a one-sheet C. O. D. No, sir. If your check isn't in before shipping time either, on paper or films, you get a long collect telegram and that's all. No arguments or excuses accepted. You might drop dead, the train might run off the track and spill your remittance, but you don't get any show unless they have your iron men. Then if the film comes in a day late you can whistle.

Who is the next man to register his "yell"? If the News will print one letter, they should print more and I have a hunch that this stuff will make pretty good copy. At least it will save some staff man from writing a lot of bunk these hot days which will be a God's blessing both ways.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. Editor—Please leave my name off this. I love publicity, but if those "Dog Robbers" over in Buffalo ever knew who was planning to interfere with their now well established method of playing the game, "tails I win, heads you lose," they would probably call a meeting of the Film Club and orders would go out to chastise me and believe me I've had lickings enough from these "birds" individually without inviting a combined attack.

The New Enlarged NEWS as seen by Exhibitors Whose Names Count!

Joseph L. Plunkett
Strand — New York

"DEAR MR. JOHNSTON:

Congratulations to the MOTION PICTURE NEWS—the new size is excellent.

You know the saying in the picture business, 'the bigger the better,' and it is better.

Best wishes for your continued success."

S. Barrett McCormick
Circle — Indianapolis

"MOTION PICTURE NEWS in its new enlarged form is something that the entire industry can well be proud of. One has only to compare it with the small but ambitious issues of a few years ago to feel his backbone stiffen and his head rise and find himself saying to himself, 'by God! this is a great industry and MOTION PICTURE NEWS is the visual sign of its greatness!'"

Eugene Roth
California and Portola — San Francisco

"The Moving Picture industry is making wonderful strides in every branch. Your valuable and indispensable MOTION PICTURE NEWS has been a great factor promoting higher standards and every producer and exhibitor recognizes the splendid and consistent editorials as well as other reading matter appertaining to the industry. Your new enlarged magazine is another proof of your progressive ideas and is worthy of the greatest praise and appreciation of every member of our wonderful industry. Accept congratulations and my sincere good wishes for continued success."

H. M. Thomas
Rialto — Omaha

"From a typographical viewpoint your enlarged publication makes Inland Printer look sick from viewpoint of exhibitor. You've certainly nearly covered entire film universe with interesting chatty news. Congratulations are needless. The size of your paper and ads you carry speak for themselves. My only query is what are you going to do next?"

Charles G. Branham
S. A. Lynch — Atlanta

"June twenty-eighth issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS is an achievement. Only bad feature about it is I cannot carry it around in my pocket, it's too big. The NEWS certainly has made wonderful progress. Enlarged size makes it of much more value to the exhibitor. Best wishes."

E. Edgar Momand
Garden — Flint

"June twenty-eighth issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS is best and newsiest of any publication coming under my observation. Serves the interests of exhibitors by a dissemination of information on the industry as a whole and gives aid in ideas which should be appreciated. May you ever be a big factor in the industry and your policy ever worthy the exhibitor's confidence."

Sid Grauman
Grauman's — Los Angeles

"New MOTION PICTURE NEWS just reached me and hasten to extend hearty congratulations to you. Improvement of publication far greater than your advance announcement indicated. New departments, and especially professional section will be great aids to exhibitors, while enlarged exhibitors' Service Bureau and Plan Book doubles the value of publication. Again accept my congratulations for a more valuable guide to assist exhibitors to greater success."

E. V. Richards
Saenger Amusement Co. — New Orleans

"Just received copy of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, June twenty-eighth. Like it very much. We consider your paper in its entirety is to the motion picture industry the same that the Saturday Evening Post is to the American citizen. Regards."

Thomas D. Soriero
Park — Boston

"Wish to compliment you on enlarged size of MOTION PICTURE NEWS. Of particular interest to exhibitors as well as the manufacturers. Find it great aid in my work as general manager of New England leading motion picture houses."

Willard C. Patterson
Criterion — Atlanta

"Heartiest congratulations on your issue June twenty-eight. Attractive as an advertising medium, instructive to exhibitors, full of news of vital interest to the motion picture industry. Its remarkable size is typical of the industry that has proved the artistic and financial wonder of the age. Pat yourself on the back for you have something to be proud of."

C. A. Lick
New Theatre—Fort Smith, Ark.

"Your issue of twenty-eighth is great. The biggest fifteen cents worth I have ever seen. Am particularly impressed with advertising section. You have reached absolute perfection."

(More on Next Page)

H. B. Franklin
Shea's Hippodrome—Buffalo

"The new MOTION PICTURE NEWS is truly representative of the fifth industry. It marks a milestone in the history of trade journalism. Keep up the good work."

E. J. Myrick
Rialto — Butte

"You have attained the goal in the publication of a trade paper. Your issue of June twenty-eighth gives plenty of opportunity for the expression of ideas from both sides. You are to be complimented here. Success to you. Your June twenty-eighth issue is surely a winner."

Edward L. Hyman
Liberty — St. Louis

"Your new enlarged issue of June twenty-eighth is a knock out. It is positively the best trade magazine that I have ever seen. The new size of your magazine demonstrates the wisdom of the change. Features and illustrations are all that could be asked of any publication. Allow me to congratulate you on the huge success of this initial issue and I feel sure that the following issues will always be up to the top notch standard established by the MOTION PICTURE NEWS."

Milton H. Field
Newman — Kansas City

"Just received June twenty-eighth issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS. Undoubtedly the best issue of your valuable paper ever published. Accept our congratulations on the new size which makes the NEWS more attractive and allows more space for service to the exhibitor. We would not do without the MOTION PICTURE NEWS for good many times cost. Keep up the good work."

Sam W. B. Cohn
Sunset — Portland

"Congratulations. Your enlarged publication is a rare treat as you have not neglected any departments despite enormous advertising carried. You have every right to feel proud as increased advertising voices sentiment of industry that the NEWS leads the field. As member of Advisory Board I share your pride."

Leo A. Landau
Alhambra — Milwaukee

"Congratulate you on the new NEWS. It is a credit to your institution and also a credit to the industry which has evidenced its appreciation on your efforts and made your progress possible. If all the film industry gets as much pep and ambition into it this coming year as your journal has in the past year, it will be a gala period for us all. I am for you stronger than horse radish."

Jack Kuhn
Loew's Stillman — Cleveland

"The enlarged size of MOTION PICTURE NEWS is ideal. A veritable mountain of information. It will keep my anticipation for each succeeding number on edge. Best wishes for continued success."

Theodore L. Hays
New Garrick — St. Paul

"The June twenty-eighth issue of your publication, a master accomplishment in all that pertains to the ideal trade magazine. Congratulations and best wishes for your future success."

Mark Gates
Dayton — Dayton

"Have just received June twenty-eighth issue of NEWS and think it one hundred per cent better than it has been heretofore. Notice several new departments and new features made possible no doubt through the increase in size. Congratulations on the new move. Accept my best wishes for future success."

W. S. McLaren
Majestic and Colonial — Jackson, Mich.

"Congratulations on your issue of June twenty-eighth. Your enlarged size is a wonder. It fills a long felt want. You now have a one hundred per cent perfect magazine for the exhibitor. It stands as a lasting monument of progressiveness and cooperation. Long live the MOTION PICTURE NEWS."

A. J. Moeller
De Luxe — Detroit

"Congratulations on your issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS of June 28th. It embodies a combination of service news and attractiveness unsurpassed. It contains the vital elements of essential interest that must necessarily be a source of education and help aside from its news value to every exhibitor, large or small, who has the best interests of his theatre at heart. It is strictly in keeping with the rapid strides of the motion picture industry at large bringing into closer relationships the producer and exhibitor catering to both, but favoring neither. My best wishes are extended to you, your colleagues, and the MOTION PICTURE NEWS for the success which you so justly deserve."

Charles C. Perry
Strand — Minneapolis

"Again the NEWS has been the first to take the lead. The June 28th issue appeals to me both as to size and make up. Accept my congratulations. I know that when it comes time to make another step forward the NEWS will be the first to take it."

Alfred Black Heads Exhibitors League

Closing Session of Uneventful Convention Chooses Slate Including Black, Loew, Schaefer, Nolan, Wells and Rembusch—New York's Bolt

ST. LOUIS, MO. (Special to Motion Picture News).—For the second time Alfred E. Black has been elected to head a national exhibitor body. This time it is the National Association of Motion Picture Exhibitors, the successor to the Motion Picture Exhibitors League, which the New England exhibitor headed for a brief period previous to the amalgamation into the present organization.

The new vice-presidents of the organization include Marcus Loew, Jake Wells, P. J. Schaefer, and Harry Nolan. Frank Rembusch, of Indiana, is secretary-treasurer.

True to tradition and past performances the St. Louis convention had its bolt. This time New York broke over the traces. Samuel I. Berman, representing the Empire State, withdrew from the meetings following an unsuccessful attempt to have the national organization adopt the Congressional district scheme of representation.

Up to "Executive Committee"

The sessions of the convention were comparatively lacking in news developments. What resolutions were introduced brought no more decisive action than that of being "referred to the Executive Committee." The buck on advance deposits, the rental tax, and the music tax was passed up to the Executive Committee for later action. The members decided to go forward with the plans for grouped insurance under the Dale Crittenberger scheme.

St. Louis certainly turned itself inside out in hospitality to the convention. As related in the story of the early sessions in last week's News, Major Kieley opened the convention. One newspaper, the St. Louis Star, brought out a special edition during the week, while all papers gave warm treatment to the filmmen. A boat ride and gala festivals of all sorts helped to compensate for the torrid weather.

Ocean View, Virginia, home of Jake Wells, a new vice-president of the organization, won the honor of being chosen for the next convention.

On the return of Samuel Berman to New York a statement was issued by the New York State Exhibitors' League on its attitude towards the national body. This statement follows:

"The organized exhibitors of the State of New York sent their spokesman to the recent convention at St. Louis to submit a plan and basis for creating a vigorous, active and genuinely representative National Union of Motion Picture Exhibitors. This plan was to give to every exhibitor in the United States a chance to have a voice and vote in the formation and management of such a National Organization. It was therefore, based on the Congressional Unit of Representation, which is the broadest, fairest and the most democratic basis of representation. Under this plan each state will be entitled to as many representatives at a National Convention as there are Congressional Districts in the said State.

"The recent successful campaign in the State of New York by the Motion Picture Exhibitors resulting in the enactment of the Sunday Opening Bill was conducted on the basis of Assembly and Senatorial Districts—the two legislative units in this and every other State. The exhibitors in each Assembly and Senatorial district rallied their patrons to the support of liberal Sunday legislation. Every Assemblyman and Senator in the State of New York was approached and his aid solicited for the support of the liberal Sunday Bill. In the same way a proposed censorship measure was defeated.

"If these methods of organization were successful in the State of New York it is reasonable to argue that they will be successful in other States and at Washington. Using these same methods National Legislation can be influenced in the same manner. The 5 per cent tax on film rentals, imposed on us because of lack of a real National Exhibitors Organization will readily be repealed. A systematic campaign in every Congressional district should also lead to an early repeal of the burdensome admission tax.

"We realize that this basis of organization inviting as it does, every exhibitor to participate in its Councils is a new departure in exhibitors organization. Heretofore the name and machinery of both State and National organizations after an initial outburst of enthusiasm have generally passed into the hands of a very few men who were more anxious to retain their hold on the name and the machinery than to promote beneficial legislation or consult their fellow exhibitors in solving the many problems within the Industry. At this time when so many serious problems confront the exhibiting branch of the Industry there is greater need than ever for a really representative National Organization.

"The exhibitor of today is too enlightened and progressive to lend his name and support to these old style so-called organizations, too often exploited with more or less camouflage for the personal gain of the promoters.

"On the other hand the overwhelming support which the new organization in the State of New York received from practically every owner of a motion picture theatre in the State, has thoroughly convinced us that the enlightened and progressive exhibitor will be found eager to join an organization, in which every exhibitor has a voice and a vote and in which the control of affairs never passes out of the hands of the Rank and File.

"The Congressional Unit was rejected at St. Louis. The very small group which dominated at St. Louis consists mostly of men who are closely identified with producing interests. They are in no sense numercially or otherwise representative of the exhibitors of the Country.

"It is unthinkable that these men will be able to prevent the real exhibitor of the Country from forming a genuine exhibitors' organization resting upon the votes, freely cast and honestly counted, of all the owners of motion picture theatres throughout the land.

Pathe's Strong Selling Force

Pathe Departments All Work Together to a Common End

WITH Pathe out of the production end of the business entirely, insofar as dramas and comedies are concerned, the company does present an excellent example of a purely distributing organization, distributing pictures made for it under contract or acquired through purchase. The only exceptions to this policy are furnished by the Pathe News, Pathe Review and Serials.

The number of producers now distributing through Pathe has been considerably augmented during the past twelve months. The list is now a large one and represents some of the best producing talent in the business. On it are such well known concerns as the American, W. W. Hodkinson Co., Frank Keenan Productions, Inc., The Western Photoplays, Inc., Albert Capellani Productions, Inc., Leonce Perret Productions, Inc., Alma Rubens Productions, Inc., Virginia Pearson Productions, Inc., the Rolin Film Co., the Arthur F. Beck Serial Productions, Inc., Ruth Roland Serials, Inc., and Timely Films, Inc.

Of major importance to the Pathe Exchange, since it has specialized as a selling organization, is of course the Sales Department. In charge of this department Mr. Brunet has placed Fred C. Quimby with the title of Director Exchanges. Mr. Quimby illustrates the Pathe policy of promotion, having risen from salesman to his present place.

W. S. Wessling is the Short Subject Sales Manager and he again is an illustration of the Pathe policy of promotion from the ranks and of development from within.

Elmer R. Pearson is the Feature Sales Manager and he again is a third illustration of Pathe's promotion policy, though unlike Mr. Quimby and Mr. Wessling, his career with Pathe has been interrupted by engagements with other film concerns.

Pathe operates thirty exchanges, located in Albany, N. Y., Buffalo, Indianapolis, Denver, Detroit, Minneapolis, Milwaukee, Pittsburgh, Washington, New York, New Orleans, St. Louis, Chicago, Omaha, Des Moines, Newark, N. J., Dallas, Seattle, Philadelphia, Charlotte, N. C., Boston, Oklahoma City, Kansas City, Atlanta, Cleveland, San Francisco, Salt Lake City, Los Angeles, Cincinnati and Spokane, and is now opening an office in Little Rock, Ark.

Closely allied with the Sales Department and working in very close touch with it, are the Advertising, Publicity, Serial Publicity, Art, and Exploitation Departments.

P. A. Parsons, the Advertising Manager, has been with Pathe for over six years without interruption, a record for tenure of service which is believed not to be paralleled in the Advertising or Publicity Departments of any film company. He writes and places the copy for the trade papers and for general advertising such as newspapers, billboards, Fan Magazines.

The Publicity Department is managed by Randolph Lewis, with Frank Dallam, a well known newspaper man, as assistant. This department writes and places copy for all Pathe subjects with the exception of serials.

The Art Department is managed by Harry Lewis. This department gets out the posters, cuts, slides, etc., and has a staff of several artists who are on salary and spend their entire time on the Pathe work.

The Serial Publicity Department is Human Interest, personal Appeal Sought in Advertising by Finley

By Jean Finley

Director of Publicity, E. H. Hulsey Theatres, Dallas, Texas

(Various angles of newspaper exploitation are being covered by advertising leaders in these columns. Don't miss one. These articles will appear for some weeks to come.)

ONCE upon a time Webster compiled a dictionary and one of the first words he used was advertising. There are nearly fifteen hundred pages in the copy I have on my desk and on the seventeenth page I find the definition of advertising. Personally I don't think his definition is complete. He should have added that advertising is the greatest business in the world. I believe that advertising is the backbone of business, without it civilization would be where it started centuries ago. And to the man who makes a detailed study of it, advertising IS the greatest business in the world. It has ceased to be a game.

But to get on to the subject of theatre advertising, especially that concerning motion pictures. The advertising man should see his subject first, once at least and twice if possible. He should look for the human interest and the personal appeal and work on his prospective readers in that manner. Then he should discard the press book sent out by the average motion picture producer. In the file I have in my office I can pick up the first one hundred press books in alphabetical order and over ninety per cent. of them will start and end the same way. There is not the slightest bit of variation. In other words, "John Smith presents Henry Brown in Ten Bars in One Night. A Hookem special."

The love story of an orphan—an orphan who instigated the great prune strike. As the twelve-year-old Red in an orphan asylum, she led a strike of the other L. W. W.s which, in this case, means Infant World Wreckers — against America's greatest staple joke. But a few frowns from the mistress of the orphanage were enough to Ole Hansonize the rebellious youngsters and make them bury their faces in the prune dishes.

This fourteen inch three column was devoted to the personality of the star, and the selling argument is largely built on "great prune strike" ran ten inches, four columns, another was three fourteens, still another was two eight, and another was eight columns wide and two inches deep. In no case were the ads. alike unless an afternoon paper repeated an ad. that the morning paper had run the same day.

Where the theatre or chain of theatres has become recognized as the leader in any section, for presenting consistently good programs and the public knows what to expect from you, sell your house first. Let them know that it is your ad. to begin with. Then tell them whether you are advertising the present program or a coming one. Never mention the attraction until you tell them where it is and when—then go to it. Usually the producers do not sell the most attractive feature of their plays. That is the reason I say throw away the press book in so far as advertising is concerned. They may give you an idea for a publicity story, but that is about all.

Unusual cases set aside the rule that keep the house name predominant. An example of this is a three column ad. on "Daddy Long Legs" that is headed with the flash "Strike." The main idea of this was to connect the great prune strike in the film with the strike of the telegraphers and the local linemen.

I try to convey to the public mind my idea of the scene or scenes and use the ads. as the mouth of the management speaking for the theatres.

Where the star is well known the star should receive the best display line, but if the star is appearing in a famous play the play should be placed on an equal footing. At all times you should show your patrons that you believe in your program. If you don't how can you expect them to? In introducing a new star, give her a good send off. If she takes well three or four pictures later you will be more than repaid for the few extra dollars.

I am a firm believer in special ad. cuts drawn by

Your Idea and Ours

GOLDWYN Pictures have just had a week all of their own in St. Louis and they certainly did get the attention with the way that the "Movie Directory" on the St. Louis Star was arranged for that week. The Star is certainly showing a willingness to cooperate in this advertising business, as we illustrated only last week.

Nearly all of these houses showed a Goldwyn picture during the week, although some of the daily changes do not announce one of that brand for this particular day, and the name of Goldwyn appears in most of the separate advertisements prominently while the large lines at the top and bottom of the directory certainly result in establishing the brand name strong in the public mind.

Pride and Prejudice are impossible bed fellows for progress.

GLOBE theatre, New Orleans, one of the Saenger Amusement Co. houses, has just completed the longest continuous run of any picture at a regular motion picture house, so far as we know, with "As a Man Thinks." It is the sort of advertising that is based simply on the demand for the picture and that is apt to create a still greater demand.

First value of word-of-mouth advertising is that it is well nigh continuous. Your first patron tells someone else how good the picture is and that someone is so impressed by what you have said that he goes himself, and though he may not actually be as impressed as you he yields largely to your judgment and concludes that it is a great picture and passes the word along. The result is a ground swell that is bound to bring business.

Advertising in advance of the production was that with the usual big picture, but that which was used during the run was larger than usually employed by the Globe which is located on the big business street and counts on drawing a considerable share of the patronage from the announcements in front of the theatre.

In the larger of the announcements reproduced here the argument on the long run reads:

Never in the history of the Globe has a drama caused such a sensation. We've played it a week and public demand canses us to hold it over four days more. Have you seen—As a Man Thinks?

vertising, but the greatest reliance was placed on the text along the lines indicated.

Fellow who keeps calling each picture "the greatest ever" is apt to find the public inserting the short and ugly word to describe the exhibitor.

DESPITE the fact that the typing is poor, here is a good advertisement for a small city. It is a nine inch, three column effect of the Plumb theatre, Streator, Ill. With a name plate, slightly lighter typing and a proper indention of the selling argument it would have stood out like a full page.

It will pay any theatre like the Plumb to get a name plate and also to provide a distinctive border for its advertising. This heavy clak affair does not print well and there are the usual bad breaks in the alignment of the ordinary small city printing shop. There is an attractive picture of Miss Ferguson used, but the selling arguments should have been set in smaller type with plenty of white space at either side and the name of the star and the title should have been more prominent.

Keep remembering that the selling argument is not the thing with which to get the eye, but a secondary affair, though just as prominent. The size of the type in which it is set matters little so long as there is the white margin. The name of the star and the title should have been set in more attractive type and the words "She had to Choose" should have been in bold face on the same paragraph with the matter that follows in Roman. There would have been a great improvement in the eye appeal.

There are always greener pastures ahead.

WHILE we very frankly admit that Chaplin is one of the few stars who can be advertised without any selling argument whatever on the picture, we believe that any display would be stronger with that included. This 9½-inch, four column display simply used flat the cut that it was able to get from the exchange and then simply carried the name of the theatre and the statement that this was the first presentation anywhere.

With the numerous reissues of Chaplins going the rounds we would have brought out all the stronger that this was a new picture and we know of no stronger way to do that than to tell something about the picture itself.

If you've been advertising right you can celebrate a real Independence Day.

IF this had come to us in the usual run of stuff and we had given it but a glance without figuring in the opportunities of the town we would say that this is very poor stuff—which proves that the flash effect is not the only thing in advertising.

Typographical appearance of this eighteen inch, four column display could have been much improved and the mass of black type at the start is especially bad because it kills any eye-getting effect of the cut. And, still further, the matter should not have been set flush at both sides as it has been done, but there should have been plenty of white space and an alternation of type styles that would have brought out the matter in the display.

Immediately under the cut the ad says:

Twenty-five regular photoplay patrons selected from audiences in Boston theatres were invited to a special showing of "Daddy Long Legs" and four other recognized film successes. After viewing all five pictures it was the unanimous opinion of all that "Daddy Long Legs" was far ahead of the other four in every conceivable way, and further that MARY PICKFORD NEVER OFFERED SUCH A GENUINE DELIGHT IN HER ENTIRE CAREER.

Immediately following this comes the guarantee of A. B. Layton, manager of the Lyric, Fitchburg, Mass., and then a statement from Mary Pickford and a reproduction of her check for payment of the story rights. That makes a series of convincing guarantees that is bound to put over any picture.

Don't have things just happening around your theatre, but a reason WHY for them.

COLONIAL theatre, Seattle, Wash., has secured a striking effect and has put over a brief sales argument well in this three column, twelve inch display on Mae Murray in "The Delicious Little Devil." Here the theatre has used two illustrations that were employed in ready made advertisements prepared by Universal, with the text matter stripped off of them and then the theatre has its own set up.

The advertisement which the roadhouse inserted in the papers was used as suggested in the Special Service Section printed in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, and then the whole of the rest of the display is built around the peppiness of the offering. And what we like about this is that while there is plenty of sparkle about this there is nothing really suggestive about it.

War's over, so let's all start something now.

L. W. BARCLAY, advertising manager of the Grand Amusement Co., Johnstown, Pa., writes that it looks very much like the engagement of "The Challenge of Chance" will have to be extended to a full week after the start of his campaign of advertising. He adds that he has been wanting to experiment with red ink for some time, and that he thought this picture was one with which to put over that sort of an appeal. Only one of the three Johnstown papers permits the use of colors.

All other advertising except the color work which appeared on the back page of one of the papers and small announcements in the amusement columns was carried on the sporting pages where they were sure to be read by everyone interested in the big fight. These were based upon the question whether he was fit to retain the championship and cited that this picture was made since the title bout was arranged, and then there was a brief reference to the story.

Way to get the most out of your theatre is to put the most into it.

HERE'S J. A. Partington, of the Imperial theatre, San Francisco, with another one of his peppery advertisements. It is not so much what he puts in his displays as the turns that he gives the selling matter. In this case with the "Here at last" he leaves the impression that the people have been waiting eagerly for a chance to see this picture. And once you create this impression there is pretty apt to be that eagerness.

Henry Miller has a big following on the coast and it was the proper thing to refer to this as the great Henry Miller success. And then he has used the name of Marguerite Clark and Eugene O'Brien with equal prominence. There follows his selling talk, addressed as usual to "Mr. and Mrs. Public," and telling them that a large amount of money was spent on this offering, impressing the success of the stage offering and mentioning the appeal of the picture to the whole family. Space is three columns, ten inches.

He who advertises once and quits is like the fellow who expects to bring down a covey of birds with a single shot.

CAN you imagine anything more displeasing to a woman of refined character than to have asked her by a caller: "Have you ever suspicioned that your husband was untrue to you?" In such a case you would probably ask the "friend to leave the house immediately and fail to see her when you next met her on the street.

This same thing is true in motion picture advertising. The "You" idea is being played entirely too strong by many theatres ,and the Republic theatre, Jacksonville, Fla., presents a fine example of that. It used a quarter of a page in putting over the selling argument on this one, and, to our view, scares a lot of people away from the house. There is a line in the selling argument which says: "Have you, like the woman in this story, been tried in the fire of jealousy?" What woman wants to be confronted with a question like this? What man or woman wants to be invited to a theatre with the advance knowledge that there is a problem to be confronted. It's bad advertising, and of the sort that appeals alone to the sensational and tends to keep the better class of people away from the theatre.

Your theatre's trade mark should be your patrons' confidence.

THIS is pure "trick" stuff. Sometimes it goes over, more often it doesn't. We admit that we haven't seen Mary Miles Minter in "A Bachelor's Wife" and therefore we do not know how well this fits the picture, but certainly it appears to us to be only a suggestion of the fact that this one is full of laughs. It starts out with:

Question—If a bachelor can have a baby and a wife to boot—how old is Ann?

Answer—To be found in this charming picture.

corner we have something more of the selling argument, giving us the Irish spirit of the offering. We would have much rather brought this into the main display and have had a direct message to the patron instead of the effect resulting here of merely a drawing with no especial appeal.

"HEARTS AND FLOWERS"
KINOGRAMS

HERE is a striking four-column display of the Rialto theatre, Tacoma, Wash., and the main criticism of it is that the striking figure of Louise Glaum and her name were not brought out the stronger. We would have made the scene picture of her husband, now a victim of hasheesh the smaller of the two., if we used it at all and then have brought out the stunning gowns of the star. At the same time we would have reduced the musical program announcement somewhat.

The theatre has a splendid line in "Gowns and riches to whet the dreams woman who ever lived" and then the sentence, "The story of a love that whipped the strange devil in a beautiful woman, and sent her back to look her husband and the world in the eye unafraid.

That's good strong appeal and if the illustrations had been the more striking it would have reached about the top notch.

Don't worry about hitting something, but keep moving.

LOOKS to us like most of the theatres thought so much of the desert appeal of "The Man Who Turned White" that they insisted on making this the dominant one in their advertising. True enough, the Liberty theatre, Seattle, properly featured the name of Warner above everything else and then make prominent the striking picture of him as the Arab chief and also suggested the element of the Oriental dancing girls, and in that it is better than most of the displays on this picture that we have adversely criticized.

We do not believe that it is good policy to suggest too strongly the hot sands of the desert for a summer-time offering, especially since it is a fact that the scenes on the desert occur only at the opening and at the end of the picture. We would certainly play here the Oriental element and the love story and then the power of the characterization of Henry B. Warner.

Make your theatre known by the patrons who COME BACK.

R. H. DeBRULER, general manager of the Macon Photoplay Theatres Co., which controls all of the white theatres in Macon, Ga., sends us some specimens of his advertising with the comment: "I still favor plain black and white ads with plenty of white space. So many of the ads that I have seen lately seemed to me too cluttered up with reading matter." Mr. DeBruler is right in pursuing the policy of advertising that he is following but his case is a rare one. Since he runs all the theatres in Macon the newspapers turn their Saturday and Sunday pages over to him and he prepares the reading matter as well as the advertising. Therefore, he is not bound by any rules. He can get by with simply the name of the star and the title in his display space and then use a cut and the real selling arguments in the reading matter. But that is something that very, very few exhibitors can do.

And so we say that Mr. DeBruler is following the right idea so far as Macon is concerned, but with the exception of the "For Better, For Worse" display we would not call this good advertising in most communities, although the use of white space and paring of matter down to the fewest possible words, avoiding the "cluttered up" effect is always commendable.

Let's stop letting "well enough alone."

Simply another case of a nice looking display that means very little. We have pointed out that we believe that this type of advertising has been so generally adopted in Los Angeles is because of the great fine colony there and that the general public is so familiar with the stars themselves that it needs only their names to get the business.

Now this quarter of a page of Cluna's Broadway does thoughly suggest that this is a picture of the frozen north, that that is all. The line drawing background carries out the idea and there is a suggestion of the love feature with the picture of William

Desmond. To us the statement that this is a "thrilling drama" means absolutely nothing. It would never get us into the theatre unless we were first an ardent admirer of Desmond or we had no other place to go. We have seen a few pictures that are without any sort of an appeal, but they are mighty few, and it always pays to dig down and get the right one. In our opinion the day of selling generalities is fast slipping away.

The fellow who leads the procession doesn't worry about the others' dust.

PRINCESS theatre, Oil City, Pa., has achieved a splendid effect in this four column, nine inch display by the combination of two cuts that it got from the Universal exchange, or rather the combination of the three column advertisement in its entirety and then the cut out of another. The use of the second cut has put the mother element which is so essential to get the wider appeal into the sales argument.

Tendency on the part of exhibitors to use the matter just as it comes from the exchange is often too great and it is seldom that the local manager cannot add some little thing that will make the display all the more distinctive for his theatre. We repeat that the Princess has obtained a good effect and this display shows that the manager of this house regards the advertising as one of the most important things.

It's not telling your people that your theatre is the best that gets the business. It's making it so.

WE are dstinctly opposed to the syndicate or "trust" plan in advertising and this from a group of theatres in Wilkes-Barre, Pa, is just about as bad an example of that as we could cite Here five theatres have been grouped, the same style of announcement carried in all of them and with one exception there has been no cut used. There is almost a complete absence of selling arguments.

Now the fact even that one company had a city sewed up tight and was sure of the field would not warrant this sort of advertising. The wise manager is not figuring so much on getting the business as building more and more business. Now suppose that one man did control all seven theatres in a city and followed this style of advertising. Isn't it very easy to see that he is not selling each picture to the most possible people and that therefore his grown business by this plan is not going to be anything like as great as if he had tried to sell each picture and put just as much individuality behind the announcement of each theatre and if they were the bitterest of competitors? At least, that's our idea of the way to look at advertising.

THIS is a case where the exhibitor has relied upon the physical appeal to put over his picture—to a large extent. Colonial theatre, Toledo, Ohio, always does good advertising of the near sensational type and this twelve inch, three column display is no exception.

Here the figure of Theda Bara in South Sea costume is shown with the lady's bare legs in evidence. Something of the effect is lost with the use of the black background to the left. We would rather have omitted this and have allowed the form to stand out for its full advertising worth. The remainder of the advertising is well gauged with the exception of the fact that there is no selling argument on the specific production—which there always should be. Merely the fact that this picture "deals with the eternal question of the man and the woman," which the display cites, is not enough to tell people why they should come to your house.

Motion pictures may be the land of make believe, but you want the public to believe in you.

CERTAINLY the Lincoln theatre, Schenectady, N. Y., left "nothing to the imagination" in this one. Although it occupies fifteen inches five columns this amount of space does not save it. All of the possible selling arguments have been gathered together with the result that it is largely repetition, it overflows with adjectives and it has about all the superlatives backed off the board. For instance get this one in the box across the top of the display:

Funnier than Charlie Chaplin—More emotional than "The Birth of a Nation"—As spectacular as "Intolerance"—A greater love story than "Hearts of the World"—With the adventure of "Arabian Nights."

That certainly is going some. We haven't the slightest doubt that this picture did big business in Schenectady, but we believe that much wider attention would have been attracted to it by using one striking halftone of Mabel Normand and then trimming the selling talks down at least sixty per cent. No doubt lots of people read this, but there isn't the slightest doubt in our minds that a whole lot passed it, too.

Instead of merely skipping over the first chapter of Progress, THINK it.

THIS ten inches, three columns is a distinct case of cheapening a production. Turn back to last week's issue and read how S. Barret McCormick got this suggestion of the New York life into the ad and then see the brutal way that this is put "The Under World" featured in large type. This comes from the Midway theatre, Rockford, Ill.

We fail to see why two pictures of Anita Stewart were used except that the designer thought he had to have "balance" to the display and that this arrangement would supply it. As a matter of fact there would have been more punch with a single picture used and then the writer would have had the space for the selling argument that is so badly needed here to take away the conclusion that one is apt to reach that this is picture of the dens of vice, without mentioning any of the charms of the story.

All of the Rockford theatres seem to go to black type and heavy borders and they are out of place especially with a picture like this one where there should be charm and fascination put in the advertising.

A smile in time is worth more than a thousand letters after a patron lost.

UNDER the general heading of "Home influence of a morning paper" the Cleveland Plain Dealer is running a series of very instructive and interesting advertisements. The most recent of these is headed "The mirror of the movies" and then goes ahead to talk about pictures in this way:

"There he is, mama; that's Benny in the front rank there, third from the end"—as Pershing's doughboys march across the screen.

Sounds familiar, doesn't it?

The silent drama is talking today. Millions of movie fans are its mouthpieces.

The question of the evening in Cleve; and homes isn't, "Shall we go to a movie?" It is: "What movie shall we see?"

For there's a movie for every taste and pocket in Cleveland. Movies for red-blooded folk who want a picture with a punch—weepy movies for those who enjoy a good cry—funny movies for folks who have never grown up and educational movies for the serious-minded.

Yes, there are all kinds of good movies, and you may know exactly what kind you want to see. But do you know where to find them every day?

Then follows the general statement boosting the motion picture directory

If you don't it needn't take you long to learn. For THE PLAIN DEALER'S "Motion Picture Directory" tells every worth-while movie that's showing in Cleveland, and where.

Movies come and movies go. The only way to keep track of them—to know where the new and the old worth while ones are is in THE PLAIN DEALER. THE PLAIN DEALER movie page is itself a moving picture of movies—a who's who of screen plays in Cleveland. To answer those all-important questions, "Where to go"—"What to see."

columns of the Plain Dealer. Good stuff for any newspaper. It's a circulation building, it encourages the exhibitor to more advertising because he is assured that the newspaper is thinking of him, and it's real news to the subscriber. What more could a newspaper want?

Advertising is the yeast that makes the business rise.

A REALLY remarkable piece of exploitation has just been put over by B. E. Cornell, manager of the Eckel theatre, Syracuse, N. Y. He issued a four page "extra" advertising the coming of Douglas Fairbanks in "A Knickerbocker Buckaroo." However, this wasn't the ordinary fake newspaper extra that has been so often used, but a frank advertisement of the picture, with a good quality of paper used so that the best of effect could be obtained out of the huge half tones employed. There was a characteristic picture of Fairbanks used on each page and the four one was devoted to a straight display advertisement. The matter on the other pages was set in 12 point so that it could easily be read, told the story of the picture, the history of the star and recited some interesting facts about members of the supporting cast, most of this being taken from the press book. This stunt cost something to put over, but it is a sure way of attracting attention if the work is of the same high quality as that of Mr. Cornell.

The fellow who just staggers along gets the attention of scorn. But the one who pushes straight ahead has a lot of people following him to see what all the energy is about.

PRINCESS theatre, Sioux Falls, S. D., did good work in this two full column display, but it could have done better by telling something of the story. The theatre did the right thing, as was suggested in our Special Service Section on this picture by using the figure of the chorus girl, but we would have used a considerably larger one.

Just about all of the sales argument is based on the fact that this was such a success as a musical comedy, and to this Manager Updegraff has added his personal guarantee. This position of the matter should have been set in a different style of type from the rest of the display or given a box effect that would have been shown that it was something that the theatre wanted to stand out. As a matter of fact the typing is bad all the way through and leaves the impression that copy simply went to the printer and the printer did the rest.

Two full column displays are rarely anywhere near the hundred per cent mark and it is generally better to try the winder effects. A four column, ten inch, would have used the same space, would have permitted the large chorus girl cut to have been used and would have afforded a much better balanced space all the way around. This is shown by the fact that an eleven inch three column display of another theatre appearing on the same page absolutely overshadows the large space display of the Princess.

M'Cormick Makes Charlie Chaplin "Artist of Humor" in His Latest

MAKING Charlie Chaplin an "artist of humor" instead of a comedian by using illustrations and text that were classical in character enabled S. B. McCormick, manager of the Circle Theatre at Indianapolis, to recruit hundreds of new patrons from the most elite local society to rub elbows with dyed-in-the-wool Chaplin fans at his box office.

One of the few, if not the first effort of its kind on record, to exploit a Chaplin comedy with all of the dignity, refinement and wholesomeness of appeal that usually is confined exclusively to the big special feature attractions gives another credit to McCormick for the exploration of new fields of picture promotion.

McCormick analyzed "Sunnyside," the third of Chaplin's series of eight "million dollar" productions, as an attraction that offered unusual opportunities for novel advertising and a different kind of illustrated matter.

Instead of featuring Chaplin, the comedian, he featured Chaplin as "Pan," the God of Music, surrounded by a bevy of classical dancers. The insinuation of comedy was very subtley made by giving to Chaplin's "Pan" and the queens of the dance, a background of cactus plants. The contrast unmistakably pointed to situations offering untold possibilities for humor.

A new form of showmanship which points to the value of interpreting in the exploitation the motif of the producer bids fair to result from the success with which McCormick's exploitation of "Sunnyside" was received.

McCormick's campaign was based on the psychology that the regular Chaplin fans would attend regardless of the kind of exploitation, but that to reach the society element of Indianapolis it would be necessary for him to lift his exploitation into the "society" stage.

He connected the classical dance element in "Sunnyside" with the dance craze, the desire of society to trip the light fantastic, with hilarious effect. He put into his advertising the exact humorously-pathetic vein Chaplin intended to instill in his third million dollar picture.

Unquestionably, in his advertising matter, McCormick culled the funniest scenes from Chaplin's woodland dance situations. One of the illustrations was a picture of Chaplin in overalls, his hair unkempt, his shoes tattered in a pose with four graceful girls, in typical woodland dance costumes, and with tiny garlands encircling their brows. And the seat of Charlie's trousers in this picture is not quite two inches from the inevitable cactus plant.

The Circle Theatre's Sunday advertisement in the Indianapolis Star was printed in four colors. It depicted Chaplin as "Pan" dancing with a beautiful girl.

The attraction played one week at the Circle Theatre to capacity audiences.

Grauman Uses the Spanish Atmosphere in "Avalanche"

Spanish atmosphere of "The Avalanche" served as an inspiration to Manager Sid Grauman of Grauman's theatre, Los Angeles, who staged a Spanish dance act which was a number of the program immediately preceding the showing of the feature. Additional atmosphere of the house and serving as a reception for the feature was the costuming of the orchestra of thirty-five. All members appeared in Spanish dress. Six dancers—three couple—took part in the Spanish dance.

Margaret McKee, a whistler of note, furnished one musical number with Spanish music.

Franklin Shows How to Provide "That Cool Feeling" in Theatre

SO successful has Manager Harold B. Franklin, managing director, Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, been in producing an Alaskan atmosphere in his big house that now when the mercury starts to run out the top of the thermometer, residents of the city, instead of rushing to the lake shore beaches, burn the trail to the Hippodrome. There, as they pass through the front doors they find peace, contentment and coolness and the weather man's efforts to prostrate the populace gets a severe setback. Mr. Franklin knows the value of making his patrons forget all about sizzling, sweltering, saturant, scorching sunbeams that without are laying low the searcher for shade. He knows that this is necessary if he is to continue cracking box office records when most fun emporiums are laying back, taking things easy and waiting for the coming of the fall and winter season. With this knowledge, Franklin takes old Warm Weather by the seat of the pants, kicks him out of the Hippodrome and lands him unconscious on the pavement. He never re-enters.

With the first suggestion of collar crumbling days, Mr. Franklin begins to transform the Hippodrome into an out-of-doors summer garden indoors. As a rule one of the last things that a steaming citizen seeks for stimulant is a motion picture theatre. Franklin has introduced the exception to this rule. The exception is the Hippodrome. When warm days come he starts at the entrance and by the time he gets to the exit he has collected every bit of winter garb in which the house has been cozily dressed. In its place he puts the strikingly effective surroundings suggestive of the great land where the red gods reign.

In making this change Mr. Franklin begins at the "porte cochere" in front of the theatre. Atop this he places ferns, plants and flowers. Hanging from each side of marque are unique wooden cut-out figures showing a big corpulent person melting away with a cool looking attendant beckoning him into the theatre where it is 20 degrees cooler than outside. These figures are also reproduced on cards and used in the lobby display scheme and in all Hippodrome advertising, in fact the summer idea is worked out from the moment the patron reads an advertisement until he leaves the theatre.

"Bathing beauties," used as summer stage display

Proceeding into the lobby we find that the elaborate clusters hanging from the ceiling have been covered by beautiful indirect lighting system shades of light green cretonne. These shades were especially made for the Hippodrome by a local lamp dealer. Along each side of the lobby, suspended from the ceiling are fern baskets which always aid in giving a cooling effect.

Leaving the lobby and entering the theatre, the patron is greeted by a delightful breeze from countless electric fans placed about the house but hidden from view. There is a breeze from the gratings in the side of the walls, the outlet for the big mushroom cooling system in the basement. In addition to these gratings there are also "mushrooms" under each seat from which heat destroying winds come. Lattice work doors replace the heavy velvet curtains in the exits both upstairs and down. The ushers have donned their light gray costumes. All the lights have been dipped in inviting cool green. On the stage we find the heavy drapings gone and cretonne curtains in their place, while the personnel of the big symphony orchestra is now adorned in palm beach suits. Stairways have been laid with new light rubber coverings and everywhere one finds an effort made to eliminate any suggestion of warmth.

Coolness on the Stage

The stage settings, for which the Hippodrome is famous, have been changed to suggest coolness. The one illustrated here shows a scene on the beach which is certainly most appropriate. This same idea is carried out all through the summer months.

Contrary to the rule where most houses cut down their operating costs, Mr. Franklin increases his and shows only the biggest and best films obtainable. Samples of these are "Daddy Long Legs," "Mary Regan," "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," "Sunnyside," with Charlie Chaplin, and Griffith's "True Heart Susie." Instead of decreasing his advertising Franklin increased it both daily and Sunday. The result of this is that confidence is instilled in Hippodrome patrons. They know that they will see a quality show at this house every day in the year. No matter how hot the weather, it is never too hot to be used as an excuse to clip one iota off the quality of a Hippodrome program.

This cutting of advertising expenditures during summer months is one of the biggest mistakes that exhibitors can make for the moment one does it, it is an indication that business is poor. The patrons notice the elimination when they go through the paper to see what is at "your" house. Not finding your ad. and seeing that your competitor whom believes in advertising all summer is showing a good film, you lose a customer and "the man up the street" gains one. In the fall and winter the Hippodrome uses mostly two column ads. In the summer we find three column displays used.

Music Kept Refreshing

Another thing that helps one to forget the heat at the Hippodrome is the delightfully refreshing music program given by Director Alfred Moulton and his company of virtuosi. During the summer months at concert periods, one seldom finds heavy, classical numbers on the program. Instead there are the light musical comedy selections, the popular songs, and the rollicking instrumental solos. During warm weather few patrons care to sit through a rendition of a Moonlight Sonato or a Goldmark symphony. This kind of music doesn't help that uncomfortable feeling under the collar one bit. "Au contraire" when the orchestra strikes up a stirring Sousa march, a Victor Herbert selection or an "I'm Always Chasing Rainbows," type of song, it helps a lot in combating the work of old King Sol.

The coming of summer never means the coming of a slump in business at Shea's Hippodrome, because Mr. Franklin has found the secret of good business. Briefly it is, cool surroundings, better pictures and increased advertising.

Newman's Dream Comes True With Opening of Kansas City Theatre

FRANK L. NEWMAN, already proprietor of the Royal and Regent Theatre, Kansas City, Mo., has just seen his fondest dreams materialize with the opening of the Newman Theatre, one of the finest in the whole nation, including all of the best features that inspection of leading theatres everywhere by Mr. Newman and his architect suggested, and representing an investment of two million dollars.

Ceremony of dedicating the house, its exploitation and everything about its physical appearance is distinctly suggestive of class. Among the distinguished guests at the opening were Adolph Zukor, president of Famous Players-Lasky; Wallace Reid, Will Rogers and George Beban, representing the stars; A. H. Blank, president of the A. H. Blank Enterprises owning a large number of houses through the middle west; H. M. Thomas, manager of the Rialto, Omaha; Leo A. Landau, manager of the Butterfly, Milwaukee, an affiliated house; E. S. Porter, of the Precision Machine Co., and many others.

Kansas City newspapers describe the reception given Mr. Newman himself as one of the greatest ovations ever known in Kansas City. The people of the Western Missouri metropolis realize the high standard that Mr. Newman set in his conduct of the Royal and Regents and that with the opening of the Newman theatre that city has been placed at the very top of motion picture theatres. Mr. Newman made a brief speech and there were a few remarks by Wallace Reid, and then Will Rogers gave one of his characteristic monologues that soon had the audience in an uproar. It was necessary to give two performances on the opening night to care for a considerable per centage of the crowds, and after the second Mr. Newman entertained some two hundred business associates and guests at a dinner-dance at the Hotel Meuhlebach.

At four o'clock in the afternoon crowds began forming in front of the house and an hour later it is described by the newspapers as a raging mob seeking to obtain admission. A special reserve corps of thirty policemen were summoned to keep the traffic moving, but this was found impossible and even the street cars that usually pass in front of the theatre had to be re-routed. It was found impossible to escort the invited guests through the main entrance and they had to be taken in through one of the rear exits. At the end of the first performance, and the only one scheduled for that evening there were so many thousands in front clamoring for admission that it was decided to give a second performance to prevent wholesale disappointments. It was then necessary for Mr. Newman to ask the audience to leave through the rear exits. It is the policy of the Newman theatres never to admit anyone without a seat, and this causes thousands to be turned away even with the second showing.

Failure of colors to come out gives faint idea of the beauty of the cover of elaborate program

Institutional type of advertising adopted by the Newman. This is thirteen inches, four columns

The opening program included the "William Tell Overture," played by the orchestra of forty; Newman News and Views, including selections from the various weeklies; "The Spirit of the Dance," executed by Mlle. Rhea before a special setting; a comedy; "The Bell Song" from "Lakme," rendered by Mlle. Alys Michot; and the Cecil B. DeMille production "For Better, For Worse."

Newspapers estimated that the floral greetings received by Mr. Newman on the day of the opening represented an expenditure of $10,000.

Newman Theatre seats 25,000, and the architect was H. Alexander Drake of Kansas City, who also designed the Royal and the Regent. Italian Renaissance is the motif of the architecture and the exterior represents one of the stately Italian palaces, and adaptation of the facade effect with the relief of pilasters. These semi-balconies are beautiful in their own effect, but they will be all the more attractive when they have been planted with flowers and shrubbery.

One enters the theatre through a lobby thirty feet wide and twenty-four feet high, with an Italian vaulted ceiling and the side walls in polychrone terra-cotta. The ticket office accommodates three sellers. The floor is of marble in old Italian designs and the lighting fixtures are of bronze and of the same period. On either side of the lobby is a stairway leading to the balcony and mezzanine floor. The main auditorium is 96 feet wide and 100 feet from stage to entrance, seating 1,000 on this floor. There is a great lighting dome 54 feet across, which affords all sorts of possibilities in effects.

In the balcony there are 1,200 seats while the loges care for 350. Behind the balcony is a salon promenade 54 feet long and twenty feet wide with marble drinking fountains and returning rooms for men and women. Office of the manager, checking rooms and telephone booths are also on this floor.

The projection room occupies a balcony all of its own and it is said to be the model of the whole country. E. S. Porter spent several weeks in Kansas City installing the Simplex machines and other equipment, and as stated was present on the night of the opening.

In the basement which is reached by marble stairways on either side of the auditorium there are large lounging rooms provided for the patrons, including a Louis XV boudoir for the ladies. There is also a nursery decorated with Mother Goose designs and including cradles, chairs and toys for the amusement of the little ones. Nurses will be in constant attendance here.

A feature of this basement is a theatrette 32 feet wide and 50 feet long which will be the workshop of Mr. Newman and his staff in preparing the programs for the three theatres. Here all of the films will be screened, the musical accompaniments written and their presentation planned.

The "Class" of the theatre will continue to be carried out in all of the advertising. This will be along the line of listing the program and a special design has been prepared for this advertising like that of the specimen reproduced. Nothing of the sensational will enter into the advertising, but the entire program and the theatre itself will be the thing "sold" to the patron.

A fifty page program was issued for the opening week. This is called Newman Theatre Magazine, and is easily the handsomest publication that we have seen from any theatre. It carried a special design in blue and gold with merely a picture of the theatre. In the first issue there appeared pictures of Mr. Newman, Wallace Reid, Gloria Swanson, Elliott Dexter, Adolph Zulor, Mlle. Rhea, the dancer, and Mlle. Michot, the soloist, and of Milton H. Feld, house manager of the Newman. The second issue consists of thirty-six pages, the size to be maintained. Advertising occupies about half of the magazine which is 6 by 9¼ inches.

GETTING HIS GOAT

Worry About Little Things Upsets Whole Works

AN exhibitor whose name we are not mentioning writes: "I don't know what is the matter with the public that patronizes my theatre. I cannot seem to please them. I change the pictures around and get new services when they kick, but though I know I am showing the good ones, I can't seem to please. Can you tell me what is the matter?"

Simplest thing in the world. This exhibitor is listening to little things, magnifying the complaints that come to him, and, we feel pretty sure from the tone of his letter, arguing with his patrons when they differ with his opinions. Of course, the only correct theory is that the patron is always right. But that doesn't mean that every time you hear a little kick you should upset the whole state of affairs. Agree with the complainer and investigate, and see if everything is right. If it is go ahead. Possibly it was the case of a temporary grouch.

And remember that half of the battle is convincing your patrons that your theatre is the best.

Newman Cooperates with Fellow Exhibitors. Why Don't You?

Stage pageant at Boy theatre, Omaha, for "Auction of Souls." Only one of the "talk arousers"

Business Man Buys a Picture And Gives It Vast Exploitation

AN OMAHA business man voluntarily assumed the responsibilities of an exhibitor recently, and the results, in the scramble to make good, jolted the city to its toes. Looking back upon the variety of events that had marked his exciting experience James H. Shallcross gazed reflectively at the several packages of thousand dollar bills before him on his desk and commented:

"To be an exhibitor is not a business. It's a science."

The fracas was started by C. E. Holah, general manager of the A. H. Blank Enterprises, owners of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit franchise for Nebraska, Iowa and Kansas. With hot weather close at hand, and consequent rumored dire results to motion pictures, Holah was wondering whether to lease the City Auditorium for an indefinite run of "Auction of Souls," the screen version of the story, "Ravished Armenia," and for which the Circuit is the official distributor, or whether to sell the production to the largest theatre in the town and organize a parade to be led by the Mayor, to put it over. Holah pays about as much attention to hot weather pessimists as an ice man does to his scales.

The reverie was interrupted by the entrance of James H. Shallcross, Omaha business man and representative of the Nebraska Committee for Relief in the Near East. He wanted the production.

"All right," Holah replied. "We'll plaster Armenian relief all over it."

"No sir," responded Shallcross. "We want it as a straight, strictly amusement affair, without approvals, without a special society night, without anything but crowds. We want to jam the theatre at regular prices, and we want the entire city to go. Then—here's the secret—we're going to wage a city-wide campaign to raise funds for Armenian relief."

"We want to rent the picture outright. We want to buy the posters and other advertising supplies from you. We want your moral support, but that's about all."

Mr. Shallcross was insistent, and finally got his way. He went to the Boyd Theatre, arranged the rental details, and then he began to make discoveries about the art of being an exhibitor. He found that an orchestra was not stored with the props. One had to be hired. He learned that projection machines couldn't be started without an operator. He was given a gentle hint that ushers, too, were sometimes advisable. The next revelation was that the public is accustomed to purchasing admission tickets from a cashier. He learned that the lobby should be decorated; that a stage setting was a necessary adjunct. He learned fast. He had to. He had never exhibited a picture before, and he confessed to a sneaking envy for the exhibitor, who seemed to have such a soft time of it.

Literally buried alive under the mass of detail that accummulated from nowhere in particular, he called loudly and lustily for help. A director of advertising was engaged. The First National's press sheet for "Auction of Souls" was utilized from one end to the other. A private showing was given for newspaper men and the committee of women who were planning the money raising campaign. The papers took up the idea and started to boost the attraction for its entertainment values.

From a source unknown, but suspected, came a suggestion that "atmosphere" might be a good thing. How? Paint the canopy out in front to resemble a great Arab tent. This much exploitation progress suggested a quartet of fiendish looking Arabs, mounted on Arabian horses, and carrying Arabian spears with banners attached telling about the show. The horses were selected by a good judge of four-footed speed. The madly yelling Kurds of the Desert were given a dozen summonses each for speeding during the week they raced the streets of Omaha.

Somehow, suspected but unproven, came a hint that girl ushers would be more appropriate than men. They could be dressed in Armenian costumes, and this would give a definite atmosphere and be in harmony with the main theme of the story of the picture—the recital of the experiences of Aurora Mardiganian, who is the sole survivor of 500,000 Christian Armenian girls.

Somebody charges that a surburban exhibitor stopped in the lobby of the Boyd to light a cigar,

St. Louis Film Board Devotes Page to Telling What Pictures Have Done

ALMOST coincident with the signing of the peace treaty the St. Louis Film Board of Trade used a full page advertisement in the Star of that city telling the part that motion pictures played in winning the war.

Under the caption "How the Motion Picture Industry Contributed to Victory" it went ahead to tell their history during the time that America was in the big conflict. It is advertising that is bound to make every reader think and to establish in the minds of all the power of the screen. The matter is so good that we are reproduicng it all here:

While motion pictures did not directly supply any of the destructive materials that forced Germany to lay down her arms, it did supply a wonderfully constructive influence that aided materially in keeping up the morale of the people so that they would back up the soldiers at the front.

Propaganda pictures with plots that were written around press reports of German intrigues and of the torture that Germans inflicted on the helpless foe graphically showed in real flesh and blood form to what depths the Hun would stoop in his lust for world dominion—pictures that move us as no written or spoken word could.

The news pictures showing the American expeditionary forces in various parts of the world aroused us to a full realization that we were at war although the scene of battle was 3,000 miles away. Flashes of actual warfare showing the men in action kept our blood tingling with the spirit to win whatever the cost.

And what of the boys "Over There"? Each camp had its "movie" theatre. There 'mid the roar of the big guns they would view the latest releases and keep in touch with the rest of the world through topical news pictures—and so for a short time obtain relaxation from the strenuous duties of fighting men.

Indirectly the motion picture industry added to the manufacture of munitions by voluntarily curtailing production 25 per cent. so that the materials could be used in making explosives.

The motion picture theatres were the "camps" of thousands of Four Minute men. By this means the Government was enabled to come in direct contact with millions of people, with a multiplicity of appeals. The requests to buy bonds, warnings against German propaganda, the appeal for absolute labor harmony, the plea to "Hooverize" and other patriotic messages were thus spread broadcast.

To encourage the purchase of Liberty Bonds, pictures including some of the greatest stars were produced and shown in leading theatres all over the United States. The services of the stars were contributed, the making of the pictures was done without cost and the film was furnished to the theatres without rental charge.

Through the motion picture hundreds of thousands of dollars were poured into the coffers of the Government by the collection of a film rental tax from exhibitors and the collection of 10 per cent. tax from the public. The collection of these taxes was done without cost to the Government.

Very little has been said during the war about the part the motion picture was playing in the world strife. Silently the good work has been "carried on." But now that the curtain has been rung down on the greatest war that the world has ever known—and the boys are coming back—the motion picture industry feels that it is within its bounds to remind the public of its contribution to the cause—to again point out the elevating influence of motion pictures—to show that they occupy a place in the economic life of the nation—and that they are educational and inspirational as well as entertaining.

Now these are all plain facts and we believe that they will be believed by the general public and that such advertisements as this will do a great deal to stop moves for censorship and against Sunday showings.

Ready prepared stationery for writing "The Screen Letter Box"

Kashin Provides Even the Paper for Fans to Ask Their Movie Questions

MORRIS KASHIN has planned out some novel advertising for his newest idea, The Screen Letter Box.

Not content to simply put out a real screen novelty, one that is so full of human interest that it will induce patrons to go to a theatre time and time again, Kashin, with his thorough knowledge of theatre management, has evolved a novelty letter head which will be supplied to all theatres where the Screen Letter Box is shown. This letter head will bear the name of the theatre, give plenty of space for patrons to write their questions and on the reverse side appears the address of the Screen Letter Box. The edge is gummed, all that is necessary after writing the question is to fold and seal the letter head, place a two cent stamp on it and Uncle Sam does the rest. These letter heads will go a long way toward awakening interest in the Screen Letter Box, advertising the theatres and make it especially easy for the patrons to ask their questions.

Another novelty is a little vest pocket calendar which also bears the imprint of the theatre distributing it. Theatre managers can mark on this the days they show The Screen Letter Box. On the other side is the New York address to which questions must be sent. Thus the theatre patron will always have the address handy and never at a loss as to the proper place to send in the queries.

and casually remarked that the Armenian costumes were all right, but why not get a punch into the thing by dressing the ushers in harem clothes. The charge hasn't been proven, but the fact remains that the ushers were ostensibly beautiful harem inmates.

A local feminine vocalist, enjoying a vacation, called on Mr. Shallcross. She didn't say who suggested the call, but her idea of singing appropriate verses at different points in the picture promised novelty. She was engaged.

Big display space in the newspapers, supported by a liberal billboard and cooperative window display campaign gave the final touches.

Thus it was that Shallcross came to consider exhibiting a scie[illegible]e.

Strong Appeal Made to Spokane Women With "The Red Lantern"

OF the many artistic displays that have been made in putting over "The Red Lantern," none has surpassed that of the Liberty Theatre, Spokane, Wash., as the result of the efforts of Manager J. W. Houck.

In front of the Liberty there is a circular dome surmounted by a statue of the celebrated statue, and the interior of this is always brilliantly lighted. During the engagement of the Nazimova pictures Chinese lanterns and hanging basket effects were suspended from this dome.

Chinese effects were fully carried out around the ticket office, which stands in an island position to the front of the lobby. Cut-outs showing the star as she appears and in the shape of a lantern were employed on the sides of the ticket office and there was a bamboo effect used on the side with wisteria covering the top of the booth, while the lobby of the theatre is not deep there was a splendid effect obtained and everywhere the eye turned there was a suggestion of the Chinese atmosphere and Mahlee, the Eurasian girl. Effects were in orange and red.

In the outer corridor there was a novelty so far as Spokane is concerned through the service of tea to the lady patrons. Here a bamboo booth was built and a girl arrayed in Chinese costume "poured." The whole ceiling of this foyer was covered with a huge parasol in vivid colors that attracted much attention.

In the inner foyer there were more of the Chinese effects with huge decorated fans placed on the walls and numerous scene pictures from the production used. The lantern effects were still further carried.

While the Liberty has made many lobby displays in the past and is always counted on as a theatre that does things worth while when the opportunity presents, the reports from Spokane say that the general presentation of "The Red Lantern" called forth more word of mouth advertising than anything in the exploitation lines in months. The appeal made was particularly to the women, because Manager Houck felt that they were the ones to talk this picture to the best advantage, and in order that this be of the very sort to get the most attention the vivid colors were used and there was an avoidance of the appeal to the mystcal, but rather straight to the artistic sense of the patrons.

All of the girl ushers were costumed as Chinese maidens and through the auditorium and right to the stage the Chinese idea was carried out in the same manner as in the foyers and at the front of the house.

Striking heads of Nazimova and startling scenes from the production, in the form of line drawings, were used in the newspaper advertising and helped to draw additional attention to the front of the house, with the effect that the lobbies were crowded daily long before the opening of the ticket booths.

Clever Teaser Folder Issued for "Better Times"

One of the cleverest teaser announcements which has appeared in a long time has been put out by Roberston-Cole in advertising "Better Times" to exhibitors. The cover of the 3½ by 6 inch four-page folder bears simply the legend "Better Times Coming," and above this is an opening showing a new copper cent which is attached to the third page. Then on the second page there are such sentences as: "John D. Rockefeller has the first cent he ever earned—BETTER TIMES COMING." The fourth page bears an invitation to write to Exhibitors' Mutual and learn about the "Better Times."

This is an idea that can be adapted by the exhibitor by simply changing the wording of the last page.

BEAUTY IS ONLY SKIN DEEP

Very True, But It Gets the Real Sort of Attention, After All

AN exhibitor who does not agree with our criticism of one of his displays which we declared repulsive, writes us back his argument adding, "You know the saying, 'Beauty is only skin deep.'"

Yes, there's a whole lot of truth in that, but you have to admit that beauty gets the attention that counts. A repulsive-looking man may get just as much attention from you as the peachiest woman that you ever met on the street, but do you take into consideration your own thoughts when the vision has faded from view. We're mentioning beauty now, not the artificial sort of "prettiness."

We despise the advertiser who strives merely for the "artistic effect" and his work is generally poor. But if he gets the beauty that belongs there he has convinced. If he repulses he has no chance. There is no excuse for brutality and disgusting scenes in a newspaper display than in the furnishings of your own happy home.

Theatre Gives Autographed Photos as Summer Boost

All the New Lyric theatre, Minneapolis, had to do last week was to advertise "Wallace Reid Week," and it went over big. This idol of film lovers is an advertisement in himself and although the papers were chucked full of data and luring literature it may have gone over just as big had the advertising been conducted along a smaller scale.

As an added feature to the program every woman who purchased a ticket during the week or even if she were acompanied by a gentleman, was given an autographed picture of Reid.

He appeared the first half of the week in "The Roaring Road," and the latter half in "Alias Mike Moran." Both stories are of recent origin appearing in the Saturday Evening Post.

At left, the foyer decorated and tea being served women patrons of the theatre. At the right, the striking decorations that were used to get attention from the street. Chinese atmosphere was maintained throughout the theatre during the showing

Even St. Louis Butcher Shops Advertise "Daddy" for Sievers

BOX office possibilities to exhibitors in co-operation to be had from drug stores, book stores, drygoods stores, music stores, grocery stores, butcher shops, fruit stands and newspaper reporters not affiliated with dramatic departments, were demonstrated in a recent campaign on a special feature attraction by William Sievers, manager of the New Grand Central theatre, St. Louis.

The assistance of his publicity man and the most tactful and diplomatic aid of the other employees of the theatre to cover this variety of sources through which he hoped to obtain patronage and incidentally to set a new record for the theatre, was enlisted by Mr. Sievers because he knew that he himself could not arrange all the many things he wanted for his sensationally broad exploitation of "Daddy Long Legs."

The greatest and most important part of the campaign was the orphan element. Knowledge of the appeal of parentless children to practically everyone, whether a theatregoer or not, guided Mr. Sievers in making this one of the most striking features of his exploitation.

The big publicity campaign was opened with a flourish when Mr. Sievers invited the children in the scores of orphan asylums to be his guests at the showing of "Daddy Long Legs" on any afternoon except Saturday or Sunday.

And the kids came—flocks and droves of them from every section of St. Louis. The newspapers saw "copy" and pictures in this stunt and sob sisters were hurried out of the offices without having time to powder their noses.

And this exploit was but the first of a series that made St. Louis sit up and take notice.

"Don't overlook a single bet!"

This was the gist of instructions from Gen. Sievers when he called his army of employees about him for instructions on the big drive, with the result that:

Every book store in St. Louis turned over its display window to the book, "Daddy Long Legs." This was a popular sign in their windows:

"This is the book Mary Pickford paid $40,000 for the right to turn it into a movie. Is it worth sixty cents to you? See it in pictures at the New Grand Central."

Music stores got busy with a flaring display of the "Daddy Long Legs" song. Many of the stores featured the new tune before the request of the New Grand Central reached them.

St. Louis's leading grocery stores made a play on jam. In a window stocked with jams and jellies could be found a picture of Mary Pickford and this sign:

"This is the kind of jam Judy fed to the orphans. See Mary Pickford as Judy in 'Daddy Long Legs,' now playing at the New Grand Central theatre—and buy that jam here."

Dry goods stores displayed bolts of striped gingham with cards stating:

"This is the sort of material from which Mary Pickford's costumes were made for her latest play, 'DADDY LONG LEGS,' now showing at the New Grand Central theatre."

Half a dozen butcher shops displayed huge soup bones, absolutely devoid of meat, so hungry-looking that they forced their ways to public attention in the show windows. And big signs read:

"This is the kind of soup bones the superintendent of the Greer Orphanage bought to feed Judy, Freckles and the other children. See Mary Pickford portray Judy in 'Daddy Long Legs' at the New Grand Central."

Piles of big red apples, just out of cold storage and selling for a dime each, were stacked high on the show cases of the fruit stands and large signs informed patrons that:

"This is a sample lot of the apples from which was made the Apple Jack that tangled the legs of Mary Pickford as Judy in 'DADDY LONG LEGS,' now showing at the New Grand Central."

Illustrating the unique and intense advertising work that was employed in the exploitation of this attraction is the use to which Mr. Sievers put a benefit ball game between the New York Giants and the St. Louis Cardinals, and a demonstration by the anti-submarine flotilla.

The ball game was for the benefit of the St. Louis Tuberculosis Society. Score cards containing coupons for prizes were sold by St. Louis society girls. Included in the lists of prizes were seats to "Daddy Long Legs."

Within ten feet of the mooring place for the anti-submarine fleet could be found a large sign stating:

"This Whole Fleet Could Not Have Frightened the Superintendent of the Greer Orphanage Where Judy Was Reared. After Seeing the Submarine Flotilla go to the New Grand Central and See Mary Pickford as Judy in 'Daddy Long-Legs."

Who pasted those big heralds about "Daddy Long Legs" on the tails of the seaplanes? Who pasted photographs of Mary Pickford on the fuselage? And who induced the army fliers who were cavorting over St. Louis to drop thousands of heralds from the skies? That hasn't been announced. But it was no mystery to Mr. Sievers.

our theatre artist. He has the ability to put down in black and white the ideas the two of us together get up. While the drawing and special cut add materially to the cost of the advertisement, its distinctiveness and individuality will stand out in the paper and dominate the page and sometimes even the whole paper when placed in a good position. An advertising man should not be hampered by the cost of his cuts and his ads. I do not mean that he should be encouraged to spend more than a legitimate amount, but he should be allowed free rein.

The advertising or publicity manager who is worth the most is the one who puts over the most free publicity in proportion to the amount of money spent. In the last amusement section of the Dallas Times-Herald our publicity stories and cuts amounted to three thousand agate lines, while our advertising was a little more than one thousand agate lines. Mr. Hulsey is like any other exhibitor—he prefers paying for the one thousand and getting the three thousand gratis.

When I took over the advertising the Herald had the Sunday amusement pages sandwiched in behind the want ads. at the back end of the section. As a rule it all ran on two pages sometimes running over on the third with a mass or mess of outside matter between stories. That was less than four months ago. I took the matter up with the Herald and showed them how and why their attitude toward amusements was all wrong. Today amusements occupy the front end of the section and usually occupy five full pages.

Advertising for which the amusement rate is paid is worth more in the long run than commercial advertising. Publicity stories and cuts give patrons a short analysis of the play as well as a likeness of the star or a scene from the play. To try to get all this in an ad. would jam it up and it would lose its selling value.

The personality of a star is the greatest asset I believe that an advertising man has. Dimpled Dorothy Dalton in "The Homebreaker" carries more weight with the public than Dorothy Dalton in "The Homebreaker;" it is the personal touch. Because of the fact that Clarine Seymour was Cutie Beautiful in "The Girl Who Stayed at Home" it gave me something to work on in advertising her in "True Heart Susie." Patrons remembered her as "Cutie Beautiful," but forgot her entirely as Clarine Seymour.

Newspapers I think are more valuable than billboards on the regular run of pictures. But don't forget to hit them with a billboard campaign when you want to put it over big. Show the public you believe you have the goods and they will show you that they are with you. Lobby displays and co-operative window displays are exceptionally good when properly worked up, but they are only good on a special attraction or something out of the ordinary.

Above all things have confidence in your ability. If you haven't got confidence in yourself step out for the man who has. Some day your employer will find the man and you will be out, for you never get to be so great than there is not someone else a little bit the greater.

The exhibitor who has an advertising man, should not worry him with a request to see the copy before it goes to the paper. Let him work out the ad. campaign; that is what you pay him for. If he retorts that "it can't be done," fire him and look for the man who says "it can be done."

How New York Stages the Show

WOMAN stars have the call at two out of three of the Broadway motion picture theatres this week, and two of them are very tense dramas, though a happy ending is provided in one of them and in the other the patron is rather left to take his choice whether the mother or daughter should have died.

Louise Glaum, after a long absence from the screen is at the Strand in "Sahara," the story of a Paris favorite who finds real love after she had abandoned her husband and is able to win him back to her. There is an Egyptian-Parisian setting given this with a scenic prologue and song and a tableaux of the prayer to the sun during the showing of the feature. Comedy element is furnished by pictures of the ex-crown prince in Holland and "The Jazz Monkey," a Universal animal comedy.

Elsie Ferguson has really a triple role in "The Avalanche" at the Rivoli, and in this she may be said to have three roles. She plays first the character as a girl and then as a woman, and at the same time as her own daughter. Tragedy marks this most of the way through, but it is relieved by the music. A Harold Lloyd comedy and a Jeff and Mutt get in the comedy, and there is a Spanish turn to most of the music.

At the Rialto, all is happiness with Marguerite Clark in "Girls" and a Sunshine comedy reissue. "Merry Jail Birds," Silk Hat Harry in "The Breath of a Nation" adds still more laughs and Dr. Riesenfeld has written a special score for the Bruce scenic, "Sundown."

Next week's features are: Strand, Constance Talmadge in "The Veiled Adventure"; Rivoli, Irene Castle in "The Firing Line" and Rialto, Pauline Frederick in "The Fear Woman."

Rialto Theatre

COMEDY dominates the bill at the Rialto theatre this week and a scenic picture stands out on the whole program as the result of special music that Dr. Riesenfeld has written for this photographic creation of Robert C. Bruce. Comedy is the big element in the feature and one of the Sunshine reissues rounds out the bill, while most of the music is of the distinctly happier sort.

Overture is that from "Beautiful Galatea," a comic opera by Von Suppe, which tells the story of Galatea, a sea nymph, beloved of Acis. But he is pursued by Polypheum a giant and crushed between rocks, and then Galatea changes him into a river in Sicily which bears his name. It is played with the lights all in gold and a flood light from the projection booth. This is being used at the two theatres regularly now and remedies a summertime defect. The entrance of the two theatres are right on the street and with the outer doors kept open on account of the heat there is a constant series of flashes when the inner doors are opened that formerly caused a flicker, but the flood lights from the projection booth are doing away with that.

There are a few bars of the original music, a canzonetta, used as the lights gradually go down for the scenic, "Sundown." There are some wonderful snow scenes and cloud effects and then we have some shots of Bruce and his Great Dane en silhouette. There is a particularly fascinating show of the sun nearing the sage brush in its setting and another of the bare masts of a schooner standing out against the sky in the evening twilight. There is a final one of a great river near the sea with the glinting of the setting sun on the water. Combination of the beautiful picture and perfect musical setting brings a hand that few pictures receive.

With the house lights in red and the orchestra bathed in gold, Miss Julia Henry then sings Del Riega's "Homing." She wears a white evening gown and a black picture hat for this number, and there is not a special setting, merely the stage lighting and the curtains in red and the spot light upon her.

Rialto Magazine opens with International pictures of the American cavalry guard on the Mexican border, shown to "Here They Come." From the same source some views of the American flying men back from their efforts to fly across the Atlantic, with Lieut. Commander Read, the victor getting a big hand, the same music being continued through these. Then there follows some extracts from the Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement released by Educational, with first pictures of Elsie Janis after her return from war work and views of her at her country place, during which she gives an imitation of Mary Pickford. This same number includes views of Anita Stewart playing golf, and then with her husband, who fails to heed the command "Fore." "Marionette" is used for these.

Pathe supplish some striking views of the English Derby, renewed for the first time since the start of the war, at Epsom Downs, and attended by the king. "Mock Morris" is played for the first of the views, and then with the title "His Majesty, the King of England," there is a change to "Loyal Hearts" which bears counterpoint of "God Save the King." The pictures get as much applause as any American have done. Then at the start of the race itself there is a change to a galop. Gaumont supplies view of the yachting season opening at San Francisco, with races for the Lipton cup, and then International presents the Larchmont Yacht Club races. For both of these "Scenes du Bal" with cymbal effects is used.

Now the first big laughs come in with the Silk Hat Harry Stock Company, the third Educational Films product on the same bill, in "The Breath of a Nation," a take-off on prohibition. Effects are used through this and the music following through includes "Drinking Song," played with a burlesque touch, "That's the Kind of a Baby for Me," "Good Morning, Mr. Zip, Zip, Zip," and "Oh, Harry, Harry." Gaumont shows us the launching of a big tanker at Quincy, Mass. (Get the connection?) and this is shown to "Wedding March," and then there are some interesting Gaumont pictures of Brooklyn amateur strong men training for circus stunts with "Good Scout" used.

From the same source there are pictures of the Brazilian president-elect in Washington with "Brazil" the music, and then Gaumont gives us President de Valera of the Irish Republic in New York, with "Emerald Isle" as the accompaniment. It is a strange thing that when we saw these pictures at the Rialto Sunday afternoon there was scarcely a ripple of applause, and that barely three hours later when we saw similar pictures at the Rivoli the audience literally went wild with enthusiasm. We make no attempt to explain it. The idea of notable men is carried out still further at the Rialto with International Views of "The men who brought peace," and here we have pictures of Gen. Foch, Gen. Pershing, King Albert, President Wilson and Clemenceau and Lloyd George, all of whom get tremendous applause. There is a shot of men marching in review at the end. "Beau Ideal" is the stirring music for this climax.

With the lights in red except for the orchestra in gold and a flood light from the back, Rosa Lege'a and Eduoardo Albano than sing the duet from "Il Trovatore" with exceptional brilliance and to unusual applause.

Langaard's "Love Song" is played at the screening to a point indicated, and then follows through with "Fantasia" to action, and then "Woodland Dreams." That carries us through the scenes of the girls pledging their enmity to man, and then we have the title "The rooms above" and the married woman and her caller and here "Dreams of the Flowers" is played burlesque, changing to "Bluette" when Pamela is seen coming up the stairs. Then with the old maid in another wing of the building there is another burlesque touch used with "Sweet Forget Me Nots."

As the scene shifts back upstairs to Mrs. Dennett's apartment, "Dawn" is used and with the title "The end of a thrilless evening," "Love's Melody." At the scene where Dennett comes to the door "Under the Leaves" is used, and as Holt is shown the sign over the door "Fatasia" is played, following through with "A Springtime Ectasy." As Holt starts to climb out the window "Humoreske" is played for several minutes, and then at the point where the ironing board falls, there are effects with the organ taking up the music until the title "I've changed my mind" when we have "Love Song," brought in again, this being the theme for Pamela, and then when Holt is shown as the old maid's roomer "Impish Elves" is played.

Then with the visit of the office manager to the girl's apartment with their wages, and his observation about how cozy and homelike it is, "Salut de Amour" is used burlesque, and then when Pamela surprises the sweethearts kissing "Pleasing to Women," the man theme, is introduced, and this is followed through with "Un Peu d'Amour" played burlesque and where Pamela declares that she is left all alone the man theme is brought back and played very weakly with a change to "Flirtation" as she is seen embracing the flower and again to "Love Song" as Holt is seen entering through the window, and then to the man theme as she drops the symbol of her man hatred. There are five bars, from tempo primo with the muted brass predominating. It is a most effective musical ending.

"Merry Jail Birds" is the title of the revived Sunshine comedy that closes the picture bill. "Wild Jazz Knight" is played at the screening, and then with the title "It is safe to say" there is a change to "Frou Frou" and as the clothes are seen creeping away "Ghost Dance" is played softly with tremolo effect. At the title "Then it came to etc" "Cavalry Trot" is used and with the title "Union hours" there are burlesque effects of the factory whistle and bell, with "Step Lively," including the flute effect for the soup scenes, follows through.

Then when the prisoners drink to the health of their guard "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow" is used with frequent pauses, timed to action. With the title "Forbidden Fruit" "Umbrellas to Men" is played and at the title "Roads of Destiny" a few bars of "A Kidd For Cinderella," burlesque. At the title "After one year's travel" "Come Across" is played and then with "The copper's scent" there is a change to "Speed 'Er Up" and then we have the train effects and as the train stops "Bone Dry" to the end.

C. W. Henrich's "Vox Angela" is the organ solo.

Strand Theatre

ATMOSPHERE certainly marks the presentation of "Sahara" as arranged by Managing Director Joseph L. Plunkett at the Strand this week. It starts with the overture and is carried through the feature, even including a scenic setting and tableaux after the feature has started. The musical score for the feature is a remarkably brilliant one with Oriental, or rather Egyptian, music dominating.

Victor Herbert's "The Wizard of the Nile" is the overture and this is played with the house lights all down and the stage flooded in gold. This is a particularly crashing number and Musical Director Carl Eduoade sees to it that the brasses do not come up disturbingly strong, but are kept in rythem with the rest of the instruments.

Strand Topical opens with the Pathe pictures of the Epsom Downs races already described and at this house some of the more powerful bars from "Pomp and Circumstance" are used with splendid effect. There is a change made here, too, at the start of the race itself and "Fighting Tommies" is used. Pathe then follows with pictures of Dempsey in training at Toledo, with a view of his quarters, the fighters doing roadwork, rowing, bag punching and sparring. The same music continues through these.

Pathe pictures of the New York welcome to the American flying men follow, starting with shots of the transport coming up and the bay and then pictures of the various crews with Lieut. Com. Read at the end. "Sheridan Sabres" is played for these.

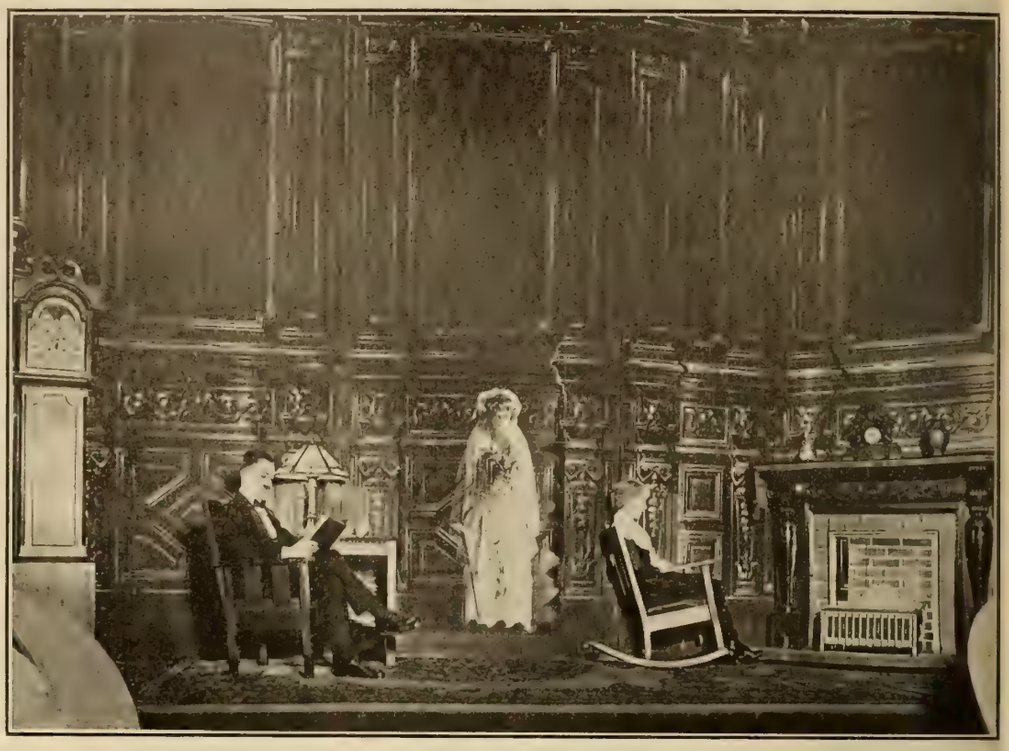
Under the title of "Hiding in Holland" Universal then shows pictures of the German ex-crown prince at Weirunger, Holland, from which island he recently escaped. There are introductory titles explaining how these pictures were obtained, they consisting mainly of view of the "clown quince" on his bicycle and talking to one of the residents of the island. The humor of the titles add greatly to the enjoyment of these. "Wooden Shoe Dance" is used at the start for the scenes of the island and then there is a change to Chopin's "Funeral March" burlesqued for the scenes where he is seen cashing a check and this is followed through with "Keep Your Head Down Fritzi Boy."

Final punch is put in the Topical with an International picture that is one of those striking examples of what motion picture camera men can accomplish on rare occasions, for "The Big Four," Wilson, Clemenceau, Lloyd George and Orlando are seen coming out at once of a door on a gallery at Versailles, posing together for the camera and then re-entering, with the President going in last. You can imagine the volume of applause that this brings, so great that it drowns the stirring music, "Hail America."

With the advent of "July the thirst" the Outing-Chester this week has been called "Mr. Outing Climbs the Water Wagon" and then we have a collection of most appropriate views. Mr. Outing starts out to see whether the water supply of the world will last with prohibition and we are taken to the Zambesi falls where there are some splendid shots. Then we have a study on the nervous system of the water diet and as the best example of this we are shown camels, young and old, including scenes in "camel busting." Organ music is used with effects for the falls.

Now comes the vocal prelude to the feature. This shows a view of Paris with the Eiffel tower in the distance, looking over the housetops of the French capital. The lights are in red at the start and gradually become blue and then the stars come out with the night. During this setting Miss Ann Rutledge renders a pleasing selection which unfortunately is not listed on the program.

Immediately at the end of this the screen curtain comes down and the feature, Louise Glaum in "Sahara" starts with "Secrets of Suzanne" played at screening. It's not our place to pass on features here, but we can't help remarking that since his two brothers have now become stars, Matt Moore is surely entitled to be one because of his work in this picture.



This artistic prelure was used at the California theatre, Los Angeles, during the showing of "The Woman Thou Gavest Me." The parlor of a home was reproduced and the solioquy of the son as brought to life through the use of a transparent panel in the rear wall where the bride appeared and sang "Mine." It was one of the most effective arrangements that has ever been seen in Los Angeles.

With the scenes showing her the idol of Paris a year before we have "Petite Tonkinoise" and then as husband and wife leave the cafe "Mam'selle Caprice" is used with a change to "Demoiselle Chic" for the scene with the baby. At the point where the husband tells Mignon that they will have to live in a tent for a long long time and here Fibich's "Poem" is played. Then with the scenes at the oasis in the desert "Iris" is played until the caravan scene is shown. Here the screen curtain disappears and we have a setting showing the sphinx and pyramids in the background and a group of Arabs going through their religious festival of the prayer to the sun.

Then immediately afterwards the screen shows us practically the same ceremony on the desert and when Mignon declares that she cannot stand that incessant ceremony of prayer there is a change to "In the Soudan" with No. 3 of "Les Orientales" played for Baron Alexis and then the organ taking up the music for six minutes. The orchestra returns with the scene where the baron is flattering the wife with No. 2 from "Les Orientales" and then when he says that it seems a pity that she should go to a fever stricken spot "Asra" is used and where they are seen seated in the tent "Arabian Nights" is used. For the scene where the husband returns there is a change to the prayer song from "Jewels of the Madonna" and then as she sees the Arabs at their ceremony "Bee Dance" is played first loud and then subdued.

Then with the scenes in Cairo several years later the organ again takes up the accompaniment for 12½ minutes the orchestra coming back with the fete that she has arranged for the baron "Dance of the Egyptian Maidens" is played with the tambourine and oriental drum effects for the actual dance scenes. Then when the wife goes to the door and sees her husband "Night and Love," the theme, is introduced continuing until she orders the servant to lock him in the room when there is a change to "Danse Arabe." At the point where she halts the celebration and the dancers stop "In Cleopatra's Barge" is used, once, following through with "Night and Love." At the title "Realization," "Ye Who Yearned Alone" is played.

As the count returns to the house demanding that she drive the beggar out "Reverie" is used and then when she tells the baron that the man is her husband "None But a Lonely Heart" from "Manon Lescaut" is used. When the servant tells her that they must flee to the desert after the husband has killed the baron the organ again assumes the burden, this time for 7½ minutes and comes back with the title "Talk not of Flight," when extracts from "Poem Roumaine" are played, with sandstorm effects accompanying and then at the title "The Peace of the Silken Dawn" there are extracts from "Thais" used with the theme coming back to the end when her husband tells her that he loves her after all.

Redferne Hollinshead, tenor, then sings "A Rose, a Kiss and You" and "I Dreamt I Dwelt in Marble Halls."

In striking contrast with the tenseness of the feature there is a screening Universal animal comedy in "The Jazz Monkey" which has to do with a stolen baby and introduced lions and an elephant as principal actors in support of the "star," Joe Martin, the wonderful chimpanzee. It's one of the funniest things in many a day. "Take It From Me" is played at the screening once through and then the organ comes in and the orchestra comes back for the latter half.

Rivoli Theatre

WITH the feature to a considerable extent in a Spanish setting music of that type is used largely through the program at the Rivoli this week, starting with the Chabbrier overture, "Espana." The feature is a very tense one with two suicides and an accidental killing in it, so relief is furnished by a cartoon comedy and a Harold Lloyd.

House lights are in red as the orchestra curtains go up for the overture and the orchestra itself in flooded with red from the proscenium arch and from the profection room flares. The number starts on the strings to a gay dance air and then there is a slight touch of the tambourine and then the horns come in, not too loud, but with the strings still predominating. Then a moment later the brass becomes clamorous and the drums loud. This is founded on two Spanish dances.

"Old Faithful" is a beautifully colored Prizma picture that follows. We are taken from the Yellowstone Park entrance through many of the wonders and are shown geyser after geyser, some of the freaks of nature such as Cleopatra's Terrace and finally come the views of Old Faithful. In very few of the Primza pictures have the colors stood out so well, but it would have been improved with less people walking around in it. "Woodland Echoes" is the effective accompaniment.

For the first solo number the house lights come up in red with gold on the orchestra and before the red curtains Martin Brefel most effectively sings the aria from "Faust." It gets a big hand.

Rivola Pictorial opens with a blare of trumpets and the first pictures are Internationals of "America's first line of defense," showing the Atlantic fleet in North River. There are some fine shots taken through the trees fringing Riverside Drive. "The Right of Way" accompanies them. We have already spoken in the Rialto comment of the way that the pictures of de Valera, president of the Irish republic were located here. We have rarely seen pictures given a wilder reception, and to the music of "Blarney Parade" Gaumont shows 450 youths taking part in a road race at Chicago, and International follows with pictures of the soldier boy's team race from Chateau Thierry, with Matthew Lynch of Newark winning. "Molly on the Shore" is played for both of these pictures, with a trumpet call as a wreath is placed on Lynch's head. International presents some interesting pictures of "Cowboys of the Pampus," a round up of wild horses and broncho busting, to "Porcupine Patrol."

Production Manager Joseph LaRose has split the newest number of Photoplay Magazine Screen Suppliment up between the two houses to give them each representation. Rivoli's share starts with some interesting pictures of James Cruze and his wife Marguerite Snow. Introduction of "To Thee" is played at the screening and then when we are shown the first pictures of a wedding ever taken, and now shown for the first time, organ music is used up the point where we are shown their child, Julie, when "To There" is resumed and continued to the point where Julie is three years old when "Spanish Andante" is used. For the final scene of the family there is "Fairy Tales." For some comedy scenes of " how to go wrong on a water wagon after July first," auto trick stuff, the chorus of "One-Two-Three-Four" is used and then for the scenes in making Mack Sennett's burlesque on "Uncle Tom's Cabin," "American Red Cross March" is used played with marked burlesque effect just as an "Uncle Tom" band composed of actors who "double in brass" would render it.

"From the Fields of Bohemia" is used to accompany International pictures of the huge junk heaps of war materials in France, and then we have the Pathe pictures of the welcome to the trans-Atlantic aviators, already described, shown to our boys. Gaumont presents some pictures of the German fleet which their own men sunk with "March to the Gallows" used and the same final punch described at the Strand is used with "American Festival March" accompanying.

Elaborate plans were carried out by McMahan & Jackson in connection with the showing of "Woman," for a week's engagement at the Grand Opera House, Cincinnati. An effective lobby display, intended to portray the Garden of Eden, and consisting of actual branches of apple trees, palms and other shrubbery was arranged Another feature was a prologue acted by ten people. The first tableau presents Eve; second, Massalina, of Rome; third, the Woman of '61; fourth, the Woman of the Street; fifth, the Woman of Poverty; sixth and last, the Woman of the Hour, the Red Cross Nurse The closing tableau is especially beautiful, and as added effect, the orchestra plays the national anthem

A thirty-piece, augmented symphony orchestra has been engaged for the week

For the second solo numbers the lights come up to blue and the curtains part, showing L. Van Dyke, 'cellist, seated before a setting consisting of a circular window with blue showing through and a huge column to either side, flanked by evergreen. Popper's "Spanish Serenade" is the selection.

"The Avalanche," starring Elsie Ferguson, is screen to "La Feria" and then when we are told of the gaming passions of the Spaniards, Moshowsky's "Spain" is played, changing to "Moraima" as one of the gamsters tried to kill Chicita's father. "Impressions of Italy" is used when we are told that Chicita and Delano are united by their passions for gambling. This changing to "Melancolia" when she begins to worry about the child. There is a tympany rumble when her husband kills himself in an adjoining room and then with the dawn "Melancolia" repeated. When we are introduced to the daughter as a convent inmate "Paysage" is played with "La Colm" when she goes to the inn where her mother was born, changing to "Spanish characteristic" and then to an adgaiatto as she appealed to her only friend.

Now with the change of scene to America and the mother married again, "Dolores Waltz" is played, and then "A fortnight later" brings "One Fleeting Hour" and with the title "In the Outer Office" "Prelude." With the title "Another month has passed," we have the theme, "Remembrance" used. As the girl is shown amid the surroundings of love "Adoration" is played and then "Remembrance," the theme, as the author tells the dog that he has lost his heart. With the fadeout the organ takes up the music with the scene, where the mother hands the girl the money to pay her gambling debts with Rachmaninoff's "Melodie." Then when the gambler confronts her "Constance" is used, played agitato, and then as he falls off the balcony there is a pause and "Constance" is resumed."

When the guardian asks her how it happened "Clematis" is used, and then with the title "Revelation" the theme is brought in again, and after the passing years we have some extracts from "Ansell Suite" and the theme at the end as the husband enters.

"Furs and Frills" is played by the orchestra with the lights gold, and then there is a Harold Lloyd comedy of a young married couple with their neighbors. "On the 5.15" is played at screening, then with the bride we have "Snooky Hollow" and "Chicken Cackle" as the dog turns over the chicken basket and with the title "Stay in your own back yard" we have the chorus of the song of that name. When the postman is seen "Trombine Man" is played and then as Lloyd plays there is a trombone solo effect burlesque, then traps as he stops, then resumes the trombone and after the second stop "Honeky Toneky" to the end.

Giraud's "Fanfare" is the organ solo.

William Fox Signs William Russell

Athletic Star to Make a Series of Stirring, Virile Subjects

WILLIAM RUSSELL, has been signed by Fox to appear in a series of red-blooded pictures. He will appear in the Victory series which also feature George Walsh and Gladys Brockwell. He will work at the Eastern studios.

William Russell is widely known for his athletic prowess. His rating as an amateur boxer is very high, and he has met some of the cleverest professionals in friendly bouts. For several years he attended a school of physical culture, where he acquired a fund of knowledge of the human machine and developed himself physically. As a swimmer he has won laurels, and has a record of eight miles. While living in the Borough of the Bronx, New York City, his favorite sport was swimming the East River. He swam through Hell Gate, the most dangerous point in that stream. He has given exhibition dives from a height of 85 feet in Indianapolis pool.

Mr. Russell was born in New York. At the age of eight he put in his spare time, after school hours, in the office of Julia Arthur, President of the Professional Women's League, checking hats and serving as water boy; also doing a Ghunga Din around the corner in Palmer's theatre. While his talent as a water boy was duly appreciated, his histrionic ability was sufficiently recognized to justify giving him an opportunity to appear in the third act in an impersonation of Jimmie Fadden.

Mr. Russell inherited a talent for acting from his mother. His father was a profound student and professor of languages at New York University. He received a fine cultural education, which reinforced his natural instinct for the stage and enabled him in later years to appear in the spoken drama with such artists as Ethel Barrymore, in "Cousin Kate," with David Higgins, Blanche Bates, Ezra Kendall, Chauncey Olcott and Roselle Knott. He was leading man with the Poli Stock Company in Philadelphia and for two years was starred in "St. Elmo". For several years he toured the vaudeville circuits with an act which was very successful.

Mr. Russell entered the motion picture field five years ago, and his popularity has increased steadily.

It was the fact that "William Russell stands high at the present time and is steadily adding to his followers" which influenced William Fox to sign this star.

Industry Must Look to Exhibitors

THE following treatise on the reforms brought about in the industry by exhibitors, and general analyzation of present day conditions was written by Jacob Fabian, owner of the Regent and Garden theatres, Paterson, N. J. In part his article follows:

"A new element has found its way into the motion picture industry. Without fanfare and trumpet blasts, it comes as an important epoch in the evolution of the business.

"Exhibitor consideration is its name.

"Its triumph has not been easy. Obstacles to its progress have been removed grudgingly. But it has been the logical and obvious outcome of a condition created and fostered by ostrich-natured film 'magnates' who buried their heads in the sand and gouged exhibitors wildly and blindly without reckoning the day of judgment.

"It is a curious and interesting commentary on the importance and influence of the exhibitor to consider the fact that many of the great reforms that are announced for the coming season are not voluntary, as some producers and distributors claim, but are instead the result of the individual and independent actions, opinions and recently conceived policies of hundreds of theatre owners, acting alone in each instance, and without any semblance of united effort. Were the exhibitors in every section of the country organized into some kind of association that would give them a solid front in their relations with the producers and distributors, the things that are forecasted for fall, and which bespeak the new era of exhibitor consideration, would have come to pass several seasons ago.

Jacob Fabian, holder of the First National Exhibitors' franchise for the state of New Jersey

"No matter how it has come, the important thing is that the day when the exhibitor will receive consideration is really here.

"The advent of exhibitor consideration is bringing with it several radical reforms that affect the producers and distributors. In the past individuals associated with sources of film supply, from scenario departments to exchange shipping rooms, have gone blindly ahead, grinding out and renting footage, irrespective of its value to the exhibitor. The condition is different today. It is greatly improved. Exhibitor consideration has become the predominant factor in the mind of the scenario writer, the director, and the others who follow along with the product they create. This thought for the ultimate consumer is becoming greater. It will continue to grow.

"Every movement that is started in the industry today must be held up until its effect upon the exhibitor is determined.

"What will the exhibitor think of this?"

Before an attraction is attempted, exhibitor consideration now demands that the following exhibitor assets be represented in the production:

A story that has either a specific appeal to a given class or a broad general appeal to all classes.

A star with a proven, known box office value.

A theme and a title that afford opportunities for many exploitation and promotion stunts.

"The time is still within the memory of many of us when the chief object the producer had in making a production was to gratify his own whim or to please his star. That is an ancient chapter in motion picture history now. Today every one affiliated with production, from the presidents of the companies down to the extras who stand at the rear of the mobs, may do well to realize that theirs is a common goal—the exhibitor.

"The manifestations of exhibitor influence will be several and helpful. The new doctrine of exhibitor consideration will react with benefits not only to the theatre owners, but to every branch of the industry, and of greatest moment, to the public upon whom all of us depend for our existence and success. As a conservative surmise the following four sources of benefit will be almost immediate.

Willard Sees Himself as Picture Actor

Jess Willard's seven-reel production, "The Challenge of Chance," opened within a stone's throw of the big fellow's headquarters in Toledo, O., and, according to reports from Fred L. Wilke, producer of the Willard picture, who left New York, with a print for the Alhambra theatre, there, where it has been booked for an extended run, every person in Toledo attempted to get into the theatre on the opening night.

Willard, himself, took a couple of hours off from his regular training schedule to see himself in pictures, and is reported to have remarked after the showing that, although he doesn't profess competition with William S. Hart as a screen hero and Western good-bad man, he does think that a good many more could have done lots worse as an actor.

At the Park theatre, Columbus Circle, the New York showing is playing to big business at every performance. The Willard picture is now on its second week here.

Foreign Rights Sold

Bech, van Siclen & Co. announce the sale for Spain and Portugal of "A Romance of the Underworld" starring Catherine Calvert and Eugene O'Brien; "Out of the Night," with Catherine Calvert and Herbert Rawlinson; "Marriage," and "Marriage for Convenience" featuring Catherine Calvert; "Calibre 38," with Mitchel Lewis, and four subjects featuring Doris Kenyon, "Wild Honey," "Twilight," "Inn of the Blue Moon," and "Street of Seven Stars."

Zellner With American

Arthur J. Zellner, a well-known New York production man, is the latest addition to the Santa Barbara film colony. Zellner has been appointed head of the scenario and editorial departments at the American Film Company studios.

Billie Burke Works on New One, "Twin Souls"

At the Fort Lee studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Billie Burke is now engaged, under the direction of John S. Robertson, in the production of a new Paramount-Artcraft picture based upon Avery Hopwood's play, "Sadie Love." The working title of the production is "Twin Souls." The Hopwood play, it will be recalled, enjoyed an extended run on Broadway with Marjorie Rambeau and Pedro de Cordoba in the leading roles.

Playing opposite Miss Burke, in the role of Count Luigi, is James L. Crane, and among those in the supporting cast are Helen Montrose, Hedda Hopper, Jed Prouty, Shaw Lovett, Mrs. Wiggins, May Rogers and Charles Craig.

Every available foot of space at the Fifty-sixth Street and Fort Lee studios is at present occupied. George Fitzmaurice, director of Elsie Ferguson, is using the greater part of the 56th Street studio for "A Society Exile," Miss Ferguson's next picture.

New Ford Educationals Are Announced

The Goldwyn Distributing Corporation announces the three latest Ford Educational Weeklies as ready for general distribution. They are "At the Crossroads," a story of the life led by the prisoners in the Federal Prison at Leavenworth, Kan.; "School Days," a trip through a modern industrial school, where vocational training goes hand in hand with academic high school work; and "The Fable of the Olive and the Orange," in which the culture and marketing of the olive and the orange are presented in full detail.

Change Title of Universal Production

The new Universal production starring Monroe Salisbury will not be exploited or sold under the title first used, the new caption being "The Man in the Moonlight." The story was written by Elliott J. Clawson and after the west coast reviewers and critics of Universal had seen the first print it was decided that the name was much better for the exploitation of the picture.

Albert A. Kaufman, who has gone to England to take charge of production for Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd.

Contributing factors to the success of the Hodkinson product: Left to right, Theodore C. Deitrich, head of the newly formed Deitrich-Beck Company; W. W. Hodkinson, president of the corporation bearing his name; Doris Kenyon, who will star in Deitrich-Bech productions, and Louis Joseph Vance, the author, who is contributing screen material

New Author Unit for Hodkinson

Dietrich-Beck, Inc., Is to Star Doris Kenyon in Features

THEODORE C. DIETRICH, announces the formation of a new company, Deitrich-Beck, Inc., which will produce annually from four to six pictures from the novels of Louis Joseph Vance, starring Doris Kenyon, and release them through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Deitrich-Beck, Inc., was organized at Albany and Mr. Deitrich has been elected president and production manager of the organization and Arthur F. Beck, well known in motion pictures and treasurer of the Artco organization, the producers of Augustus Thomas' dramas, has been elected secretary, treasurer and business manager.

The entire North American rights of all Deitrich-Beck productions will be in the hands of the Hodkinson organization while the foreign rights will be controlled by J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., of which Sidney Garrett is president.

The first of Louis Joseph Vance's stories to be produced will be "The Bandbox," one of America's "bust sellers" both as a serial in Munsey's Magazine and in book form.

The second of the Vance stories to be screened by the new organization probably will be "Cynthia-Of-the Minute" and other Vance stories, which are the exclusive property of the new producers. Mr. Vance is now at his summer home in Connecticut and will give his complete attention to the adaptation and continuation of his stories, making the author a directly interested factor in the translation of his stories to the screen.

This new author-producer-star unit possessing all of the assured elements necessary to successful productions gives the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation distribution control over a remarkable array of author productions for the coming season.

Benjamin B. Hampton, releasing through W. W. Hodkinson, is the head of two splendid organizations, both with achieved and completed productions, the Great Authors Pictures, Inc., which has just released Stewart Edward White's "The Westerners" and, in association with Eltinge F. Warner, the Zane Grey Pictures, Inc., which has just completed and has ready for release Zane Grey's story, "Desert Gold." Other notable writers whose works are controlled by Great Authors Pictures, Inc., are Emerson Hough, Winston Churchill and others to be announced.

Harry Raver's Four Star Productions offer the famous play and stories of Augustus Thomas' starring Leah Baird. William Parsons is reverting to the author policy and seeking the best of the market's available literary output for Billie Rhodes and Sunset Pictures Corporation has begun its House Peters productions with Sir Gilbert Parker's "You Never Know Your Luck."

The Hodkinson plans through these powerful units contemplate in excess of thirty big productions during the year, each offered to exhibitors singly on the basis of individual merit.

"No living writer produces more gripping and fascinating stories than Mr. Vance," said Mr. Deitrich in making his announcement of the new company. "His 'False Faces,' 'The Lone Wolf,' 'The Brass Bowl,' 'The Black Bag' all have had wonderful screen popularity until today his stories command the top prices for screen composite of all Vance heroines —youthful, vivacious, beautiful, daring and truly American. I shall give Mr. Vance's stories and Miss Kenyon the most elaborate production advantages and contribute a recognized quality product to the screen.

First Cosmo Production Is Offered

Marion Davies in "April Folly" Announced by F. P.-Lasky

AFTER five weeks of hard work on the part of Director Robert Leonard, Miss Marion Davies and the cast, "April Folly," the five-part feature released by Famous Players-Lasky as a Cosmopolitan production, has been finished at the Biograph studio.

"April Folly" gets the title from Cynthia Stockley's novelette of the same name, ran serially several months ago in the Cosmopolitan Magazine, and attracted wide attention. The story is that of an aristocratic girl, the petted daughter of an English earl, who balks at family traditions and slips away to meet the man her family refuses to allow her to marry. Before she goes she annexes a family heirloom, a valuable diamond secreted in the head of a Buddha. She expects this to be her dot to her future husband.

A secret service sleuth of international reputation and a gang of criminals are also interested in the diamond, and when Lady Diana Manisters gets into a London railway coach, interesting developments ensue. She decides to swap places with a young woman less fortunately situated than she, and the rest of the action of the story then takes place aboard a ship bound for South America; then on South African soil, where the mannish aunt of the real Lady Diana lives—also very far removed from family traditions, but this unknown to her brother, the earl.

Director Leonard has put on "April Folly" with a lavish hand, it is said, and two balls, one a costume ball, and a number of games on the deck of the steamer bound for South Africa, lend interest to the production. Three hundred people were employed for the costume ball, and it is declared that their costumes are among the most effective seen this season on the screen.

Marion Davies is said by those who have already viewed the picture to do the best work of her screen career as April Poole and Lady Diana Manisters. The parts that she portrays in this single production are widely divergent: one, the tenderly brought up young Englishwoman; the other, the exceedingly shrewd Secret Service agent. Romance also enters when April meets on board ship a man who wins her regard but not her hand until after a great many struggles.

Conway Tearle plays opposite Marion Davies in this production, and by his work in it adds to his list of screen and stage successes. Esther Marshall is seen in the early part of the story to advantage, and Hattie Delaro essays the part of the dowager. Miss Delaro will be remembered as one of the original Madges in "In Old Kentucky." J. Herbert Frank, who plays the villain, was formerly with Richard Mansfield, E. S. Willard, Wright Lorimer, and in the support of a number of screen stars. Spencer Charters, who plays the detective, will next season be seen in "Oh, My Dear!" He is well remembered in the "Wallingford" plays; as the hermit in "Seven Keys to Baldpate" and in "It Pays To Ad-

James Young to Direct Elsie Janis

Elsie Janis will be directed in her first Selznick Pictures production by James Young. This information was received by telegraph this week from Myron Selznick in Los Angeles, the young president of Selznick Pictures Corporation having gone to the Coast largely for the reason of engaging the best director available for Miss Janis. Mr. Young and Mr. Selznick will start back for New York together in a few days.

The plans for the Elsie Janis production are so elaborate that it has been decided to hold a conference of the heads of the producing department before Mr. Young arrives in the city, in order that the long conference may not be interrupted by other matters. Consequently Mr. Selznick and Mr. Young will be met in Chicago by Harry Rapf, general manager of the Selznick Studios, and Edmund Goulding, superintendent of continuity. They will remain there until they have laid out all details concerning the production, so that as soon as they arrive in New York work can begin and be continued without interruption.

Exhibitors Aid Pathe's Sales Drive

Motion picture exhibitors throughout the United States are continuing their effort in behalf of the members of the Pathe sales force, who are striving to break all sales records this month which has been designated Pathe Honor Month in honor of the recent visit to America of Charles Pathe.

Telegrams of congratulation to Mr. Pathe continue to pour into the Home Office of Pathe Exchange, Inc. The five salesmen who make the biggest showing on new business during Pathe Honor Month will be brought to New York in July as guests of the House.

Tourneur on "Victory"

Maurice Tourneur has commenced the production of the photoplay version of Joseph Conrad's book "Victory." This feature is being made at Mr. Tourneur's studio in Culver City, California, but many journeys to far-off locations will be made. Mr. Tourneur has engaged a cast which includes such well known names as Jack Holt, Seena Owen, Lou Chaney, Wallace Beery and Bull Montana.

Realart Signs Miss Alice Brady

Popular Players Will Make a Series of Eight Pictures; "Sinners" First

FOR the third consecutive week, Realart features the news with announcement of the acquisition of a big star, this time in the person of Alice Brady.

Negotiations leading up to the deal have been going on for weeks, and it is said Realart secured Miss Brady's signature in the face of keen competition, and at a figure in keeping with the present day demand for stars of the first water.

Eight pictures will be made by the players. Her assignment will be carried out during the summer, and later when she goes on tour in the stage success, "Forever After," which has been creating records on Broadway for months. Miss Brady's friends are alive to the fact that even her big following has been enhanced by the successful run of this production.

Now, it is declared, the time has arrived to give Miss Brady the advantage of really big vehicles and titles. To this end a fortune has been spent to secure the opening number for her Realart Pictures. This is none other than the great Owen Davis play, "Sinners," which made a record run two or three seasons ago at the Playhouse, New York City, with the young star herself in the leading part. It is worthy of note that Owen Davis, author of "Sinners" also wrote Miss Brady's present stage success, "Forever After."

"Sinners" was produced by her father, Wm. A. Brady, at one of his own theatres, and went on the road the following season playing the entire year with Miss Brady and a notable cast which included Robert Edeson, John Stokes, Charles Richman, Florence Nash, Gertrude Dallas, Emma Dunn and William Walker.

The screen production of "Sinners" will be under direction of Kenneth Webb. The story itself is said to have a broad appeal.

Miss Brady is rightly considered one of the most versatile actresses on the American stage. Her twenty-four years of life have been crowded with the concrete rewards of great industry and greater talent. She began her speaking career in musical comedy, appearing in "The Mikado" and "The Balkan Princess." She then forsook the lighter field for the so-called legitimate drama, making her first early success in the leading role of "Little Women," which ran for a full year. She also played leading parts in "Things That Count," and in "Sinners," as noted above.

Miss Brady herself tells in sprightly fashion of starting on her professional career. She said:

"I went on the stage without my father's knowledge or consent. He has a wild idea that I was to train and study to become a grand opera star. But one can't walk from a convent into grand opera, and I was impatient. So without father's knowledge or consent, I found a place in musical comedy in Boston. He didn't like it one little bit when he found it out, either.

Wide Pioneer Exploitation

Brighton Beach Music Hall Leased to Show Company's Films; Big Publicity

IN order to effectively advertise and bring before the attention of the public both the names of the Pioneer Film Corporation and the long list of high class pictures recently made for, or acquired by the Pioneer, this firm has assumed the management of the Brighton Beach Music Hall for summer months.

The executive staff of the Pioneer is emphatic in its statement that this is not a move to enter the exhibiting end of the business, but it is in line with its announced policy of exploitation.

The sole purpose in first placing the Pioneer Attractions before the people in this fashion is to exploit the name of the Pioneer, and to identify it in the public mind with the best of productions.

This is but one of the moves in the working out of the policy recently adopted. Already several of the big Pioneer pictures have been nationally advertised in conjunction with the firm's name on the bill boards of the country.

The Brighton Beach Music Hall opened on July 2nd, with Blanche Sweet in "The Unpardonable Sin," and will be followed by Henry B. Walthall in "The Boomerang," "The Sins of the Children," "The Long Arm of Mannister," and other of the productions now being made for the Pioneer.

While running at this house these pictures will be given wide publicity which will redound to the benefit of the exhibitors as soon as they are ready for general release.

Many unique and novel departures will mark the presentation of the program, the music will be furnished by Francesco Colosant and his band of fifty pieces. A list of soloists of reputation have already been engaged and other attractions on the bill are being selected with care.

Jean Paige Signs Again with Vitagraph

Jean Paige has recently signed a two-year contract with Vitagraph with an option renewal for a similar period. She will play opposite Harry T. Morey in his next feature as her first work under the new agreement. The rise of Miss Paige in motion pictures has been fast, but her early work in the O. Henry subjects was so excellent that no doubts were held as to her adaptability to the screen and her certain advancement.

Goldwyn Pictures Now in All Countries

THE conclusion of peace means that Goldwyn Pictures will be distributed throughout the world, with the exception of Russia. The Foreign Sales Department has thus stretched its hands to all parts of the globe, as indeed it had done seven months after its formation, with the exception of the countries cut off by the war. The existing financial conditions in Russia make it impossible to successfully distribute there.

Arthur Ziehm, in charge of the foreign department has secured by extensive travel, acquaintances throughout the world.

Arrangements are now under way, whereby the foreign market will receive still more consideration in the future than it has in the past. A service and publicity department destined to create a closer co-operation between Goldwyn and the foreign distributor as well as the exhibitor is being established.

Goldwyn's chief distributor in the United Kingdom is Sir Oswald Stoll. The list of nations served by Goldwyn Pictures is a list of peoples of the world; India, Egypt, Australia, Japan, South America—all of these countries see the same stars, the same stories that daily divert the millions of America.

Two Comedians Engaged by Bulls-Eye

After six years with Universal and recently suporting Nazimova in the "Red Lantern," Harry Mann, has been engaged by the Bulls-Eye Film Corporation to step into the limelight of Bulls-Eye publicity, to take the place of Billy West.

Charles Dorety, who rose from the ranks of extra man to stardom on both the Sennett and Sunshine lots, has signed contracts with Nat H. Spitzer of the Bulls-Eye Film Corporation for an indefinite number of pictures, in which he will be featured.

Censor Causes Change of Picture Title

Another instance of censorship mysteries saw the light this week, and overtime was the order in the United offices when a telegram from H. W. Given, the Philadelphia branch manager of United Picture Theatres, Inc., reached the home office with the notification that the Pennsylvania Board of Censors, or more correctly, the Attorney General of that State had ordered the title of the latest Kitty Gordon feature play "Playthings of Passion," to be changed, and that "Playthings of Fate" had been substituted as the title to the satisfaction of the powers that be in the Quaker City.

United Exploitation department immediately set to work to arrange for the changes necessitated in all Pennsylvania printing and letting, and the substitution of "Fate" for "Passion." The necessary changes were made in lobby display, new slides were put in hand and within a few hours of receipt of the telegram everything was set for the regenerated service to Pennsylvania exhibitors.

Amazing Air Accident Caught by Camera

One of the most amazing air accidents in the history of aviation, in which two machines collided at a height of 2,200 feet and with their three airmen, one dangling at the end of a rope fastened to one of the planes, crashed to earth, wrecking the machines but only slightly bruising one of the aviators, was all photographed from a third airplane and recorded in motion picture film.

The accident happened during the filming of a stunt for the Houdini picture, "The Grim Game," which is being produced at the Famous Players-Lasky studio at Hollywood, Cal. The airplanes, of the Curtiss type, were chartered from Cecil B. DeMille's Mercury Aviation Company.

Arthur Sees New York

H. C. Arthur, the Seattle and district manager for United Picture Theatres Inc. has arrived in New York for consultation with United officials regarding the Fall season.

He states business is wonderful on the North-Pacific coast and looks for the biggest year yet.

"American Films Lead,"–Hammons

Educational Official Hints of Company's New Plans

"AMERICAN pictues dominate the foreign market, and American ideas, efficient business methods and general up-to-dateness must be adopted abroad before film manufacturers of England France or other foreign countries, may hope to compete in the picture market."

Such is the impression gained by Earl W. Hammons, official of Educational Film Corporation of America as a result of a six week study of conditions on the other side. Mr. Hammons does not conceal his slight disappointment in finding unsatisfactory scenic material on the other side; he does not pretend to place any seriousness on attempted or rumored boycotts of American film; nor, most important of all, does he hide his satisfaction in the plant of plans for the broadening of Educational. He wants the best short subjects in the world, intends to have them, and sees his corporation publicly looked up to as the creators and possessors of such pictures. Details of the coming enlargement of Educational's interests must wait Mr. Hammons' announcement the latter part of July.

"There is no material, or practically none, of the kind we want, in Europe now," said Mr. Hammons telling of his quest for subjects. "Out of 50,000 feet viewed, possibly 1,000 feet met our standard.

"I have left five men behind to work in England, France and Italy to secure suitable film. Agencies have also been established in London, and Paris and other centers.

"But frankly, the foreign market has not got material, nor can it produce it. The war of course curtailed all the film manufacturers over there. But the fact remains that Europe must import American ideas and efficiency before they can hope to have "a place in the sun" of this industry.

"We make pictures at one half the cost it takes an English manufacturer—and the pictures are better than theirs. Talk of an English boycott of American films can amount to nothing. There are five thousand theatres, approximately, in England. With their costly methods, a manufacturer can not find a paying market for his pictures among them. We in America can make money without selling to the foreign market. We can do without those over there, but they cannot do without us. Practically all that is seen in English or French theatres are American pictures.

"In the second place, suppose some film men did band together with intent to force the American product out. They couldn't succeed. The public would not put up with it. It has been educated to the American production. There are no substitutes of calibre sufficient to take the place of the United States product."

Speaking specifically of France, Mr. Hammons said:

"The French like the American picture. Despite very high admission prices, due to enormous taxes, the theatres do a good business. Of course prices are high in England also, but the theatres there are not of the class of the average French house."

While Mr. Hammons said his announcement regarding the broadening of Educational's activities must wait, he did outline tentative points in his plans.

"We are going to add many new releases of high class order," he stated. "As many releases as the market will stand, but we do not intend to glut the market. There will be an expansion of our activities that will be, I think, surprising to the trade. We want the best in the world in short subjects, and we want to pay the best for these pictures."

One representative of Educational has been sent into Germany and Austria to take scenes of present day conditions. Many offers emanating from these countries have received no consideration from this firm. The eventual ratification of peace and the lifting of the bans at present observed will be time enough, Mr. Hammons said to consider commercial relations with concerns in the countries of our former enemies.

Peers See Robertson-Cole Picture

English Nobility Pass Laudatory Comment on Feature

THE successful launching of Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas" in England, according to the distributors, Robertson-Cole, marks the breakdown of the barrier heretofore existing between the cinema and the elite of the British Isles, which has regarded films as a pastime for the masses only.

Last month, the Ideal Film Renting Company, which controls the British rights to the pictures, exhibited them before one of the most distinguished gatherings of personages ever assembled in any amusement house in the United Kingdom, an audience that includes Peers, parliamentarians, diplomatists, representatives of the Colonies, artists, doctors, scientists and educators

Even the reception accorded the pictures in the United States under the direction of Robertson-Cole was outdone by the manner in which "Adventures Amongst the Cannibals," as the attraction is known abroad, was received by the leaders of British life.

The showing was given at night in the West End Cinema and according to the Kinematograph, Britain's leading film journal, this is the first time on record that a motion picture theatre in England has been devoted to a private exhibition when the doors should have been thrown open to the public.

In spite of the fact that Ideal engaged the biggest available theatre in all London, hundreds of prominent persons were unable to gain admission. As soon as it was known that Ideal planned to respond to the demand for a private exhibition of the films, which came from all sources and from people in all stages of society, requests for tickets virtually flooded Ideal's headquarters, according to Kinematograph. The demand was so great that Ideal endeavored to arrange two showings but found it was impossible to obtain a theatre, so had to abandon the plan.

Commenting editorially on the good accomplished by the exhibition, Kinematograph said:

"Most surely the Kinema, not long ago the Cinderella of the Arts, is coming into her own. If anyone only a few years ago had prophesied that a day would come when the highest in the land would give Kinematography their personal benediction, the prophet would have been laughed to scorn, yet in the past few months Royalty has shown its unqualified approval and appreciation of the camera's value and only the other day a brilliant gathering consisting of the Aristocracy, Diplomacy, Politics, the learned Professions, etc., crowded a picture theatre to its utmost capacity, not to hear a noted orator, not to swell the coffers of some charitable organization, but for the simple purpose of seeing a picture. Naturally the attraction had to be far beyond the usual to create the interest in it, and undoubtedly Mr. and Mrs. Johnson's cannibal pictures are of the type that are wanted to raise and maintain the standard of a practically new industry."

Pershing Picture Is Going Strong

Many Exhibitors Take It as Fit Subject July Fourth

MANY exhibitors in various sections of the country booked "The Land of the Free" for the Fourth of July, as a patriotic demonstration, says the Exhibitors Service Bureau of the Fox Film Corporation.

This is the picture based on the life and adventures of General Pershing. The Bureau also reports that the "The Land of the Free" has been booked by a great number of theatres for later dates in July, as General Pershing is expected back during the month and public interest in him will be at white heat, with the newspapers carrying volumes of matter about him and public welcomes being arranged for him in many cities.

Among the theatres showing "The Land of the Free" on are: Opera House of Edwards, N. Y.; Casino, Waterford, N. Y.; Princess theatre, Gibson City, Ill.; Fairy, Knox, Ind.; American, Welch, W. Va.; Opera House, Stanford, Ky.; Reel, Catletsburg, Ky.; Pastime, Adena, O.; Waldo, Fredericksburg, O.; Texas Grand, Delhart, Tex.; Home, Honeygrove, Tex.; Iris, Wheatland, Why.; Star, Nashville, Mich.; Liberty, Brawley, Cal.; Princess, Grand Marias, Minn.; Wilson, West New York, N. J.; Rivoli, Rockaway, L. I.; Holland, Rockaway, L. I.; Majestic, Missouri Valley, Ia.; Fern, Oxford Junction, Neb.; Colonial, Olen, Ia.; Keystone, Stoyestown, Pa.; Forris, Hayti, Mo.; Widley, Edwardsville, Ill.

The new one-sheet on this production displaying a portrait of General Pershing, is considered by the Fox officials not only one of the finest pieces of pithographic work ever turned out by its service, but a strong invitation to the public to satisfy its curiosity as to the life of the great General and to honor the victorious commander of the American Army abroad by thronging to see him in "The Land of the Free." The portrait of the General on this poster shows his intensely human side-with a good-natured smile on his face in place of the stern expression of the Commander in the field.

General Pershing was recently honored by Oxford University in England with the degree of Doctor of Civil Law—an honor highly valued. Many celebrities were present at this ceremony. An official welcome had been prepared for him in London, but he was forced to hurry back to France. The Pershing Stadium, just dedicated near Paris, is witnessing some big athletic events under the sponsorship of the American commander. The newspapers are constantly reporting the movements of the great American general. All of which is regarded by the Exhibitors Service Bureau as of tremendous box office value to exhibitors who book "The Land of the Free."

"The Brat" Released on Sept. 1

Nazimova Opens Metro Season of Bigger Plays

NAZIMOVA'S next production, "The Brat," will be released on September 1. Announcement to this effect was made to the convention of Metro exchange men at the Hotel Astor by W. E. Atkinson, General Manager of Metro.

As Mr. Atkinson at the same time set the first of September as marking the beginning of Metro's new policy of "fewer and better" productions and the discontinuance of its program pictures, the Nazimova feature will be the pioneer of a greatly enlarged campaign for leadership by its distributors.

"The Brat," which was seven weeks in the making of the Russian star's studios in Hollywood, was completed so far as the actual filming was concerned on April 3; but the star and Maxwell Karger have been busy for weeks on it in the cutting and titling, with a view to compressing into its seven parts the very best of the dramatic action photographed on nearly 100,000 feet of negative film.

Since completing her work in "The Brat" Nazimova has paid a visit to New York, where she signed a new contract with Messrs. Rowland and Karger guaranteeing them her services for two years. She is now again at the Hollywood studios and about to start work upon another production in the new series, which, it is announced is to be "The Native Born," from an original story by Charles T. Dazey, author of "In Old Kentucky," that perennial success of the speaking stage which is now to find its way to the screen.

In addition to "The Native Born" a number of other exceptional stories have been acquired for Nazimova's use, some of them of French origin and all dealing with the complexities and struggles of the human soul, in the delineation of which Nazimova has shown herself to be so adroit and convincing. Among these are "The Heart of a Child," from Frank Danby's widely-read novel of that name; "The Wholly Innocents," and from French pens, "L'Homme de Riche" (The Rich Man) and "Maison de Dance" (Literally, The House of the Dance).

"The Brat" is the immediate successor to "The Red Lantern" in the Nazimova series. The star herself, in association with Charles Bryant, made the screen adaptation of Maude Fulton's phenomenally successful play which, with the author in the name role enjoyed a long run on Broadway and was enthusiastically received on an extended tour of the road.

From the adaptation made by Nazimova and Mr. Bryant, June Mathis wrote the scenario for "The Brat" and Herbert Blache directed the production, with Al E. Kelley as his assistant. In their adaptation the collaborators took not a few liberties with Miss Fulton's story, although of course adhering to the chief deevlopment of the plot. But Nazimova makes no secret of her belief that "The Brat" as presented on the screen will possess many attractive and wholly original incidents and "twists" that were not shown in the stage production when the well known star appeared in it a few seasons ago to big success.

Vitagraph Takes Pains on Griffith Feature

Something of the extent to which Vitagraph will go in getting perfection of detail, especially through the aid of perfect lighting, and regardless of expense, is exemplified in several scenes in a new picture play by Nalboro Bartley in which Corinne Griffith will star. Much of the action of the play takes place both inside and outside the shop of a fashionable dressmaker. To obtain the exact and proper atmosphere for these particular scenes Vitagraph secured permission to use the famous atelier of Madame Frances in West Forty-sixth street, Manhattan.

The exterior scenes were taken without difficulty, but when it came to "shooting" through large plate glass windows Director Tom Terriss decided that the interior, large as it was, did not lend itself to perfect lighting. The same condition obtained regarding the interior sets. Although it meant time and expense Mr. Terriss promptly arranged to have the interiors of two large rooms, one opening into the other, reproduced to the minutest detail at the Vitgraph studio in Brooklyn.

Popular Film Man Head of Triangle Office

The announcement has just been made by Mr. J. Unger, manager of the twenty-three exchanges of the Triangle Distributing Corporation, of the appointment of Mr. M. C. Hughes, as manager of Triangle's New York Branch.

Mr. Hughes is well known and popular with exhibitors and film men throughout this part of the country, having been associated with the picture business for a number of years with the General Film Company in their New York and Atlanta offices. In 1916 Mr. Hughes became manager of the Universal office at Pittsburg, and later joined the forces of the Metro Film Corporation as their district manager in Canada.

Taking Short Vacation

Eugene O'Brien and Ralph Ince are both enjoying brief vacations before renewing work at Selznick Studios. "The Perfect Lover" which they recently finished is now going through the cutting and editing department.

Ingenue in Seven Successes in Brief Year

With the completion of her work in the ingenue lead opposite June Elvidge in her latest World picture, "A Tangled Romance," Lillian Hall, credited by the critics as one of the screen's most accomplished ingenues, has to her credit seven of the leading ingenue parts of current films. She has been seen in such successes as "The Safety Curtain," with Norma Talmadge; "Little Women," in which she played one of the star roles; "Wanted For Murder," with Elaine Hammerstein; "Taxi," as Taylor Holmes' leading woman; "My Little Sister," with Evelyn Nesbit.

Miss Hall is a product of the stock company, conceded by all to be the best school for those in the theatrical profession. It is less than a year ago that this little English actress entered the silent drama.

Tyrad Feature Nearing Completion

Matthias Radin, president of Tyrad Pictures, Inc., announces that the finishing touches are now being put on "The Red Viper," in the way of closing photography, and the work of cutting and titling will be rushed to permit of a showing and release within a fortnight.

Jacques Tyrol is directing Gareth Hughes, Irma Harrison and Ruth Stonehouse in this feature, with the former in the star part. A number of exterior scenes have been taken in New York City, notable among these being the Victory Arch, in Fifth avenue.

Good Assortment on the July 6 Pathe List

Pathe's July 6 program is ushered in with the second of the Frank Keenan productions "Gates of Brass" a dramatic story of the love of an unworthy father for a daughter who believes him honorable. Lois Wilson, George Fisher, Clyde Benson, Edward Tilton Lillian Langdon and Frank De Loan are in the cast.

Episode No. 12 of the Pathe serial, "The Tiger's Trail," entitled "The Two Amazons," throws Ruth Roland into further perils.

"Billie Blazes Esq.," a Harold Lloyd comedy and the Pathe Review No. 13 completes the week's offerings.

F. Hall Controls all Fight Scenes

Has World Rights to Pictures of Big Title Fight

FRANK G. HALL who controls the world rights to the picture of the Willard-Dempsey boxing contest had six cameramen at the scenes of the big sporting event under the direction of Harry P. Diggs, Charles Miller and Leon Britton. Six days before the bout, Mr. Hall had scenes of the two boxers in training showing on the screen of the Park Theatre, Columbus Circle, where Jess Willard's big special production, "The Challenge of Chance" is playing as the main attraction. New film was sent daily from Toledo and these scenes were shown the night of the same day at the Park Theatre, as an added attraction.

Mr. Hall has the exclusive rights to the motion pictures of this contest and all stills, plates and everything taken in connection with this event has been copyrighted. Every important detail from the time the contestants began serious training in Toledo until the big crowds left the arena after the bout is included in the pictures controlled by Mr. Hall. Intimate shots of the Governor of Ohio, the Mayor of Toledo, Tex Rickard, the promoter of the event, both contestants in training and in the ring, the crowds in the arena and hundreds of human interests, scenes that are always characteristic of a big sporting event, are seen in the reelage that represents Willard and Dempsey in training and contesting the championship heavy-weight title of the world.

The cameramen used by Mr. Hall in chronicling the events at Toledo are all experts in this branch. Louis J. Simons, one of these, was formerly director of cameras with the Bureau of Information, Division of Films and he is credited with having photographed the Willard-Johnson bout in Havana and Willard-Moran bout in Madison Square Garden as well as many of the World Series.

With the pictures of the contest, Mr. Hall says that Willard's big feature, "The Challenge of Chance" which has been running to capacity business wherever shown, has been in great demand. It is reported that this picture did the biggest business of any feature picture that ever played at the Alhambra Theatre, Toledo. And according to reports from exhibitors throughout the country who have shown it, the same big business has been done elsewhere.

More than 114 bookings in the leading theatres throughout the United States are reported on "The Challenge of Chance." In all these instances the bookings were for one week or more. Many one, two and three day bookings have been noted in the smaller towns.

At the Park Theatre, Columbus Circle, New York, the picture is playing to capacity business at every performance. With the addition of the short subjects showing Willard and Dempsey in training, the patronage at the Park has increased a good percentage, it is reported.

Mr. Hall states that in these pictures of this big sporting event and in Willard's big feature "The Challenge of Chance," produced by Fred. L. Wilke under the personal direction of Harry Revier, from the story by Willa H. Hamby, scenarioized by Roy Somerville, he has as two of the leading motion picture attractions of the current year.

Bolsheviki Subject Fills Houses

THE exploitation possibilities of Select's special attraction, "Bolshevism on Trial," seem to be beyond count. Every week brings a report of some new advertising device, which has brought the concrete results of crowded houses during the run of this timely Special at some particular theatre. From East, West, North and South, Select says the word is always the same: "'Bolshevism on Trial' played to capacity houses."

Among the most striking bits of exploitation which have come to the attention of the home office officials of Select Pictures Corporation, is that which was employed by the T. & D. theatre at Oakland, Cal.

Mr. and Mrs. Public throughout the city of Oakland were handed a subpoena to appear in the Screen Court of the World in the case of the People Versus Bolshevism.

This handbill was printed on the same paper as the subpoenas for the courts in Oakland, and had every appearance of the real thing. Another factor which added greatly to put over "Bolshevism on Trial" was the insertion of a two-column advertisement headed by the photograph of a beautiful girl in an artistically nude pose, which was captioned, "What Bolshevism Would Tear Down—the Virtue of Womanhood."

To support the entire advertising and exploitation campaign on this picture, which was also augmented by a lavish display of window cards, one-sheets, three-sheets and twenty-four-sheets throughout the city, Mr. E. L. Perry, manager of the T. & D. theatre in Oakland, and Mr. H. L. Knappen, branch manager of Select Pictures Corporation at San Francisco, co-operated to secure the endorsement of this picture by the Central Labor Council of Oakland. This move was highly important, because of the strength of organized labor in Oakland.

Clara Kimball Young seen in "The Better Wife." Released by Select Pictures Corp.

The experience of the T. & D. theatre is in no way unusual nor individual except in the nature of this particular exploitation work on this Select Special. The Loew theatres in New York City are said to have had a similar experience, and in fact throughout the country, wherever theatre owners and managers realize on the co-operation which is offered them by Select branch managers and local exploitation men, the S. R. O. sign is dusted off and hung up to stay during the run at that theatre of "Bolshevism on Trial."

Telegrams are being received at the home offices from all over the country, telling that the picture is crowding houses to capacity, and applications for bookings and rebookings are reported to be coming in by the score.

Chester Cameraman Out of the Signal Corps

Willard Vander Veer is another C. L. Chester cameraman to be out of the army and back on the job. He was in the photographic service of the Signal Corps in France, and has just obtained his discharge and reported for peace time work. Vander Veer will be sent out immediately to film an important series of subjects for C. L. Chester Productions, on a journey into far countries that will keep him away for a year.

Larger Bulls-Eye Home

Having outgrown its present location the Bulls-Eye Film Corporation will shortly move from the Gordon-street lot, in Hollywood, Cal., to a larger and better equipped studio. Three companies are now working on the Bulls-Eye releases, with three additional companies to follow.

After the big night at the Strand, June 30th, the New York Times said: "The Crown Prince has succeeded Charlie Chaplin at the Strand. But he is not nearly so good as Chaplin."

NOW—We Ask You

Is that any way to treat a Great General? Is that any nice thing to say about that gigantic intellect that burned London, captured New York, reversed the Gulf Stream—and then made this comedy? We asked Luke McLuke, and that well known critic said: "If he makes any more, I'll shoot him—I might just as well do that as die laughing. Chaplin? Say—Charlie's is sob-stuff compared to this."

Monroe Salisbury in a Story of Northwest

One of the cleanest and yet grippingly dramatic photo-plays recently produced according to Universal's belief, is that of "The Man in the Moonlight," the Universal production starring Monroe Salisbury. The story was written by Elliott J. Clawson and was directed by Paul Powell.

The locale of the feature-picture is in the Canadian Northwest, and many of the scenes were made in the California mountains with the purpose of giving the play exceptional realism. Salisbury, the star, will be remembered for his work in "The Light of Victory" and "The Sleeping Lion."

The entire story is said to abound with thrilling scenes in connection with the operations of the Canadian mounted police and the outlaws which have infested that neighborhood for years.

Supervises Picturing of the Big Fight

Charles Miller, Charles Miller Productions, Inc., left New York early in the week for Toledo, O., to assist in the direction of the taking of the scenes of the Willard-Dempsey contest. Mr. Miller was accompanied by his cameraman, still photographer and an assistant.

In addition to Director Miller, Frank Hall's interests in Toledo, consisting of the exclusive rights to the motion pictures of the big sporting event, are represented by Harry P. Diggs, exploitation manager, Leon Britton and five cameramen, in addition to the one accompanying Mr. Miller.

Margarita Fisher in a Three-Part Role

The cast of the American production "The Hellion" as just announced will have Margarita Fisher as the star. She will have three separate characterizations, one of which, that of a madwoman, calls for a make-up and presentation of an order that will surprise her admirers. "The Hellion" is merely the tentative title of this production.

Emery Johnson, Henry Barrows, George Periolat, Lillian Langdon and Charles Spere are in the supporting cast.

Screen Work Taken Seriously

Harry Rapf of Selznick Says Authors Realize Value of Scenario Writing

THAT the big authors are at last beginning to have a greater respect for the silent drama and are now writing stories that come nearer to fulfilling the demands of the screen is the belief of Harry Rapf, General Manager of Selznick Pictures. Mr. Rapf has been bending his efforts of late to persuading the foremost writers of the country that if they will only give as much thought and study to the technique of the photoplay as they have to fiction, they will find that their work will be appreciated and most profitable.

"I have talked with several of the big authors recently," says Mr. Rapf, "with a view to influencing them to write original stories for the screen and I find that many of them are seriously considering doing this. The trouble is, however, that some of them do not feel like giving the proper time and study to the photopaly. One prominent exception to this is Laura Burton Wells, who is not only anxious to do original work for the screen, but is willing to devote her time exclusively to it.

"Miss Wells, who first became interested in the silent drama through our picturizing her story, 'The Naked Truth' into 'The Perfect Lover' for Eugene O'Brien, is probably the first well known author who is willing to desert a successful career as a fiction writer and devote her efforts bettering the photoplay. Quoting Miss Wells, she says:

"I want to do my own continuity writing, and be able to use all the thoughts that come to me—so many of my thoughts in regard to a thing are lost if another does it. I have felt that the screen is the medium through which I can gratify my pictorial sense and love of dramatic complication. I have always struggled with a feeling of being restricted in writing fiction."

Argonne Film Gets Ovation

MacManus Production Acclaimed by Those Who See Private Exhibitions

NO VERDICT could be more unanimous than that which the National Press Club and official Washington is reported to have rendered, when perfect approval was accorded the first showing of the screen reproduction of "The Lost Battalion" by Edward A. MacManus. It was the approval of the ultra conservative official set who seldom venture within the portals of a Moving Picture theatre but who nevertheless are ever on the qui vive for the unusual in the way of entertainment. That Mr. MacManus entertained them all with "The Lost Battalion" was fully verified not only by the almost continuous applause that greeted every one of the thrilling incidents of the eight reels of the picture, but more so by the praise bestowed upon the production by the Washington critics, all of whom agreed that it was the biggest advance made so far in photography, action and originality.

Major General Robert Alexander the night following gave a reception at the Ritz-Carlton to several hundred of his friends including military chiefs and subordinates, and a large sprinkling of Society folk, as well as the survivors of "The Lost Battalion," all of whom, including Lt. Col. Charles W. Whittlesey, Major McMurtry, Captain Cullen, and Lieutenant McKeogh; the quartet of hero officers who led and sustained the men in the forest of the Argonne, were present to see themselves for the first time in the re-enactment of the greatest battle in American history. The picture is said to be everything that is claimed for it by Edward A. MacManus, its producer and that it will prove a sensation when presented to the public seems certain judging by the interest it has aroused in the Trade by those who were privileged to be at either of the two preliminary showings.

Kerrigan Heads Own Compay

With Robert Brunton Production for Hodkinson Release; One Film Ready

J. WARREN KERRIGAN has taken the step that enlarges his future plans for the screen in keeping with the enlarged plans and policies of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, the distributors of his pictures. He has not only formed his own producing organization as was recently intimated from Los Angeles, but will appear in newly created Robert Brunton productions, each of which will be a special producton from well known novels and previously published stories.

The first of these bigger productions has just been completed and shipped to the Hodkinson organization in New York for July release. It is a melodramatic story, "A White Man's Chance," from the novel of Johnston McCulley, published by Frank A. Munsey Company, and directed by Ernest Warde.

Mr. Kerrigan's leading woman in "A White Man's Chance" is Lillian Walker, and in his supporting cast there are such well known players as Joseph J. Dowling, Andrew Arbuckle, Howard Davies, Joseph Hazelton, George Fields and Joseph Ray.

For the past year through the Hodkinson organization J. Warren Kerrigan had a further opportunity to prove his popularity and when the time came for the expansion of the Hodkinson plans with the adoption of the sales policy of pictures booked singly on their individual merits, he was the only star Hodkinson desired to retain.

Simplex Notes

National Cash Register at Simplex Plant

Two very interesting visitors made the rounds of the Simplex plant last week and after their visit had been completed were unanimously of the opinion that the National Cash Register Company had acted wisely in designating Simplex as the official projector for the various road shows conducted by this progressive Cash Register Company.

Mr. Floyd H. Abbott, projectionist, and Mr. W. H. Farley, lecturer, are two active members of one of the five road shows which the National Cash Register Company maintains. These shows being brought to the various communities through the efforts of the various Chambers of Commerce, Boards of Trade, Merchant Associations, Rotary Clubs, etc. Each show carries an advance man, a lecturer, a projectionist, a large number of stereopticon slides and a minimum of 3300 feet of motion pictures. The equipment comprises seven (7) trunks, Simplex projectors, with aluminum pedestals and all of the electrical apparatus and fixtures which go toward making a high class road equipment possible.

The particular show to which the Simplex visitors are attached has been working during the last summer and fall in Eastern Canada and since February 14th have been playing engagements throughout New England and New York.

Mr. Floyd H. Abbott, the projectionist is a charter member of Dayton, Ohio, Local No. 248, and is responsible for some very important innovations in the way of quick set-ups and effective exhibitions.

The National Cash Register shows deal entirely with the manufacture of the product of that company and show the average merchant the many benefits to be obtained through the use of this product. The story following an interesting scenario which shows the difference between the unprogressive merchant using an ordinary cash box and the progressive merchant using the highly efficient cash register. An hour and a quarter is consumed in these shows which in all communities have been well attended.

HARRY CAREY

Sixty years ago the people of America began reading a certain short story by Bret Harte—and they haven't stopped yet! More millions know "THE OUTCASTS OF POKER FLAT"—more millions want to see it than any short story ever written. For these millions, the dream has become reality—the marvelous realism of Harry Carey and the artistry of Jack Ford. They and you will live again in the golden days of '49.

Special Service Section on

Harry Carey in "Outcasts of Poker Flats"

THESE Special Service Sections are written with the purpose of suggesting to exhibitors how to get the most out of pictures that they have booked. They are prepared after studying the pictures and the best way of exploiting them. Won't you let us know any use that you made of suggestions printed here and the original ideas that you have used in putting over this picture?

MOST of the screen stories in which Harry Carey has appeared have been by authors who are little known, but here is a case where the name of Bret Harte may be used with strong effect and exhibitors who are going to show "The Outcasts of Poker Flat" should not for a moment overlook the chance to get into the theatre a lot of people who do not care for the ordinary western.

That does not mean absence of action in this picture, for it has all of that and the curse of the unhappy ending of the Bret Harte story is removed by a story within a story, the outer one having a happy ending that will be pretty sure to please your audiences. The love interest is especially strong and that should be played in a manner that will appeal to the feminine element.

Because there is a chance to make new friends for your theatre we would advise surrounding this picture with a high class program, set with good music, and to avoid anything of the ultra sensational or stunt stuff in the exploitation. You can count pretty much on getting the Harry Carey fans with the use of his name and would certainly go after the other in a way that is calculated to get a hundred per cent. results.

Your sales argument should show that this is not merely a gambling story, as might be suggested to those unfamiliar with the story by the title, but a big human work by one of the most fascinating of American authors.

THIS is the way it runs: "Square Shootin'" Lanyon is proprietor of a gambling house in Arizona and is in love with the ward of his late partner, but he believes that she loves Billy, Lanyon's adopted son, and when Billy starts away on a gold seeking expedition he asks the girl whether she is not tired of the western town, and she replies that she likes it now because she is in love. Of course, he takes her to mean that she is in love with Billy, but it is plain from the girl's expression that Lanyon is the one that she cares for.

But Lanyon decides that he is going to hide his own great love for the girl that the youthful pair may be happy together. It is then that he picks up Bret Harte's "Outcasts of Poker Flat" and as he reads he pictures himself as the hero of that story, John Oakhurst, "a favored wooer of fortune, but always a gentleman." We have the scenes where "Cherokee Sal" dies after the birth of a son and then some comedy scenes as all of the rough men make their contributions in Oakhurst's hat. He is finally decided upon as the guardian.

Action then transfers to twenty years later when we see Oakhurst gambling on one of the California river steamers, and on the same boat is Ned Stratton, lady killer and his latest dupe, a sweet young thing of about eighteen. He has led her away from her home under promise of marriage, but she has not yielded to him and when the boat makes a landing Stratton leaves, abandoning the girl. There is a dramatic scene in which Oakhurst prevents her suicide.

SOPHIE, the girl, is unable to bear the disgrace of return to her home and Oakhurst assumes her guardianship and takes her to his place at Polka Flat, currupted by the uneducated into Poker Flat because of the gambling house which Oakhurst conducts. There are under his protection the Duchess and another woman who have been dance hall girls in the decade before and for whom Oakhurst in his generosity is caring.

Tommy, the adopted boy is now grown to man's estate and it is plain from the first that he has fallen in love with Sophie. Tommy is a faro dealer in his guardian's place and this is the only life he has ever known and the girl fascinates him from the start, Oakhurst looking on with a pang in his heart for he himself has fallen in love with the girl.

Then comes to Poker Flat the lady killer and when he recognizes the girl he accuses her and there follow a struggle which Tommy oversees. He goes to the rescue and Stratton shoots him. Oakhurst quickly overpowers the villain and tells him that he had better start praying for if Tommy dies Stratton, too, must pay the penalty. There is another tense scene with the news that the boy will live, and then Oakhurst decides that this is no place for a lady and tells the girl that. She replies that she does like it, for she is beginning to fall in love, and he at once jumps to the conclusion that Tommy is the one.

THROUGH the period of the boy's recovery he sees his affection for Sophie and persuades her to agree to marry him. And then, though a few moments before the wedding she sends the older man a note saying that he is the one that she really loves, he sacrifices both himself and the girl to what he thinks will be her ultimate happiness and Tommy's.

Married they start on their honeymoon and insisting that the two shall live a clean life and in other surroundings he persuades Cameron, leader of the Vigilantes to burn the gambling house and to drive him, Oakhurst, out of the town. Cameron finally yields to his pleas and then we see Oakhurst, the two painted women and some of the other attaches fleeing.

Tommy and his bride return only in time to see the smoking ruins and confronts Cameron and drags from him the truth that the plan was all Oakhurst's own. Declaring that his place is with his guardian, Tommy and his bride go in pursuit and overtake them only to be caught in a terrible snowstorm without provisions. It is then that Oakhurst decides to make the final sacrifice and under the guise of going out for help he does go outside and shoots himself.

NOW to have the happy ending we see a great change coming over Lanyon and he begins to ask himself what about Ruth. He approaches her cautiously and mentions the fact that Billy is going away and that she is probably worried. "Billy doesn't care," she replies, "so why should I?" And then to the amazed man she reveals that she loves only him and we have the final fade-out with Lanyon observing "That fellow in the book was a durn fool."

We would advise against the use of anything tricky in the lobby. Both the three sheet and the six sheet will supply excellent cut outs and we would place these strikingly, leaving out anything suggestive of the violence. Heads of Harry Carey can be used liberally and we would display scene pictures which will bring the love element out strong.

Story and Star Should Be Played In About Equal Strength

WE have illustrated several scenes showing Carey and the girl and the youth in the two stories together and we would much prefer to use one like these in the advertising to the scenes carrying suggestions of violence.

You will play the name of Harry Carey strong, of course, and we would also make the name of Bret Harte just about as strong as the title and refer to it as that author's great American classic of love in the old west. That in itself should bring a lot of people to the theatre, but we wouldn't pass up those few who may not ever have heard of the story and therefore we would get into the selling argument right away.

You should make it clear that the ending of this story is a happy one and that is very easy to do. Let's try this one:

"'Square Shootin' Lanyon was in love with his pretty ward, but he misinterpreted her remarks and thought that she loved the youth that he raised. Then he got hold of Bret Harte's 'Outcasts of Poker Flat' and pictured himself as the hero of that story.

"That man sacrificed his own self because he believed that the girl loved a youth—just in his case—but then he read on of the sacrifices that John Oakhurst made, how he turned a deaf ear to the girl's plea that she really love him, how he had himself driven out of town and his gambling house destroyed and that the young couple might go to a cleaner life—and how in the end he took his own life, thinking that he would leave them happy. It's one of the most dramatic roles ever filmed.

"Then as 'Square Shootin' Lanyon closes the book he observes 'that fellow in the book was a durn fool,' because he now realizes that the girl loves him and he has found true happiness. It's a wonderful story and Harry Carey is just the man to play it, you'll agree."

HERE is one based more directly on the Bret Harte angle.

"If you have read the Bret Harte masterpiece, 'The Outcasts of Poker Flat,' you know what a wonderfully dramatic story it is. If you have not read it you have a chance to see it picturized with none other than Harry Carey in the star role.

"It is one of the most amazing stories of the old west that you have ever seen—of a gambler who was always a gentleman and protected the weak and the poor. You will grip your seats with the powerful tale of love and self sacrifice. There's action every minute, now a laugh and then a tear, but it all brings you through to a most happy ending.

"We believe that this is Harry Carey's greatest picture. Certainly he has one of the greatest stories that this country has ever produced in this one. And we believe that in film form it is more powerful than in print—and you have here the happy ending that sends you all away delighted with the evening."

Then here are some of the shorter ones that get in the various elements:

"John Oakhurst is one of the most famous characters of American fiction. He was a lucky follower of fortune, but always a gentleman. It is a wonderful story of love and self sacrifice, of the rough and ready days of the old west, but with a wonderful girl and a marvelous man. And it all ends happily."

"If you've read this story, we need to say no more because you will recognize its great possibilities on the screen. If you do not know this strong character of the old west you cannot afford to miss it on the screen. We believe that Harry Carey does the best work of his career? Certainly no actor could ask for a better opportunity."

"Try to recall the most striking character in all the books that you have read. If Bret Harte's 'Outcasts of Poker Flat' was one of them you are pretty apt to reply 'John Oakhurst.' And that is the character that Harry Carey plays, a fighting man with a heart like a child's, a man who loves with a terrible passion and then sacrifices himself. Yes, it ends happily and you'll chuckle often, get a lump in your throat now and then and all of the time will grip your seat with the tenseness of the offering."

THERE are so many striking exteriors that we would not have a scenic on the same bill. The balance of the program should be a very lively comedy and the musical numbers should be of the lighter type or the old fashioned songs.

For the overture we would suggest selections from "The Girl of the Golden West." This is particularly beautiful music with lots of liveliness about it. In keeping with the old time story "Gems From Stephen Foster" may well be used.

As a musical introduction we would suggest that a girl in the hoopskirts be used to sing "Listen to the Mocking Bird" just before the screening and this can be carried into the feature. A fitting selection for a male voice is "Girl O' Mine" and we would have the singer garbed in the costume of the seventies which you can reproduce from the stills. Heavy mountain settings with the effect of the setting sun or rising moon can be effectively used here.

There is a scene in the picture where the congregation of the little church is seen singing "Lead Kindly Light" and here it should be played on the organ and then with the scene before the fire where the girl is seen singing the same song, we would have this rendered from behind the scenes by a girl, timed just to the scenes in the picture.

"Jealous Moon" is suggested as the theme and this is introduced many times starting with the first love scene between Carey and the girl.

Room for all sorts of effects is given here, but we would not make them too blatant. There are the steamboat sounds as the river scenes are shown and if you can get a good male quartet you can add to the enjoyment by having some of the old time river melodies sung here, but be sure that they do not conflict with the tense scenes.

This cut out from a 3-sheet will get attention of all in your lobby

COOPERATION

Bookstores, Schools and Literary Clubs Should Aid

IT OUGHT to be easy to get the co-operation of bookstores, for they doubtless have a stock of the works of Bret Harte. Ask them to display these in the window together with a picture of the author and some of the scenes showing Harry Carey as he appears as John Oakhurst.

Your local library can give you a list of those who have taken Bret Harte stories out in the past year or so and we would advise a special circular letter to all of these. They will all want to see this story on the screen. Similarly you should notify the officers of all the women's and literary clubs and have the announcements made at the meetings.

If you can give an advance showing of this picture to the school teacher you are pretty apt to get them to aid by telling the children that this is one of the greatest stories ever written by an American. You can stimulate this interest by offering a prize through the teachers for the best essay on Bret Harte and his works. Newspaper cooperation will add to the interest in this.

William Desmond, Robertson-Cole star in popular pictures

Western Head of United Picture Theatres

Albert W Eden has been appointed Western Division Manager of United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., by President J. A. Berst. Mr. Eden succeeds William Alexander, who is being transferred to the Eastern Division.

Mr. Eden is considered one of the most experienced film men on the Pacific Coast, where for the last six years he has been actively engaged in motion picture work. He has previously acted as North Western Manager for Select Picture Corporation, resigning to occupy a similar position for Fox Film Company, and subsequently handling features on a states right basis.

Mr. Eden's division headquarters are to be in the Los Angeles Branch of United with supervision of other branches including San Francisco, Denver and Seattle.

Manager of Pioneer's Buffalo Exchange

Israel Cobe has been placed in charge of the new exchange recently established by the Pioneer Film Corporation in Buffalo.

Mr. Cobe has long been looked upon as a specialist on the New York territory. He is said to not only known every exhibitor personally, but also the individual needs of each of his clients.

The chief assistant to Mr. Cobe will be Howard S. Hummel, who for several months past has been handling Pioneer attractions in New York State west of Utica.

Mr. Hummel is a man of long theatrical and film training. At one time he owned and operated a chain of popular priced houses with headquarters in Cincinnati.

Selznick Signs Another Ziegfeld Beauty

The Selznick propensity for Ziegfeld celebrities seems to be taking on mammoth proportions. Their first star, Olive Thomas, was once a Follies' favorite. Next they engaged Martha Mansfield of the Midnight Frolic, to play a prominent part in Eugene O'Brien's production, "The Perfect Lover." Now comes the news that still another Ziegfeld beauty, Miss Vonnie Shelton, has been engaged by the Selznick company and will play in support of Miss Olive Thomas.

Lauds Rothacker's Material

Exhibitor Declares They Provide Good Entertainment and Augment Revenues

SCREEN material that entertains, appeals and enlightens is claimed for the Rothacker Photoplaylets issued through the Merchant's Service Department of Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, Chicago.

As compared to many styles of screen exploitation for industrial, merchantile, and other commercial enterprises the "Rothacker Photoplaylets" are said to be registering heavily as an entertaining factor in hundreds of theatres that strictly barred out advertising and forfeited the revenue rather than commercialize their screen by displaying material produced for other than purely entertainment purposes.

W. L. Crow, Lake Forest Park, Seattle, Wash., says: "If an advertisement appears on the screen in the form of a still subject, attention is not so keen as might be desired.

"If the advertisement is in motion in form less attractive than the regular program, attention is not so strong as desired. I like 'Photoplaylets' because they impress me as being 100 per cent attractive and can therefore bear frequent repetition."

C. S. "Doc" Crews, manager of the Liberty Theatre of Walla Walla, Wash., writes: "The Liberty, without doubt, is the best theatre between Spokane and Portland and between Spokane and Seattle. For many years we have permitted no advertising of any kind on our screens.

"We have felt that some day the Moving Picture Industry would evolve a plan of screen advertising that would be acceptable to the better class of theatres and we are indeed pleased to learn that the Rothacker Film Mfg. Co. who maintains such a unique position in the Industry are sponsors of the plan of Moving Picture Advertising that is almost ideal.

"We believe that your service will become universal."

Novelties in "Firing Line"

Paramount-Artcraft Offering Starring Mrs. Castle Has Two Unusual Effects

THE unusual and novel effects have been obtained in "The Firing Line" in which Irene Castle is introduced as a Famous Players-Lasky star. This picture will be released July 6.

One of these is essentially photographic, being a representation of daylight fog over water. Several directors have been successful in obtaining realistic fog effects, but in nearly every instance they have entailed darkness, with artificial lights to accentuate the illusion. In "The Firing Line," however, Mr. Maigne and his cameraman, Al Liguori, dared to attempt a reproduction of a fog that his settled down on the surface of the sea in the broad light of day without the use of lights, and they are said to have so succeeded in preserving the effect of a real, heavy atmosphere as to make the spectator feel that a few feet, or at the most a few hundred feet, above the misty haze, a Summer sun must be pouring forth its scorching rays. It is the first time, it is claimed, that a fog effect has been produced in pictures that looks exactly like the real thing. These scenes were taken at Miami, Fla., where the entire company spent several weeks at work. The other effect is said to be not only striking but dramatic. It comes at the time one of the characters attempts suicide. Taken at Lake Placid, in the Adirondacks before the wild game had acquired its seasonal timidity, deer are seen in startled leaps, and does and fawns bounding away in terror as a revolver shot ends the character's life.

The cast includes avid Powell, Isabel West, May Kitson, Jane Warrington, Anne Cornwall, Gladys Coburn, J. H. Gilmore, Frank Losee, Rudolph de Cordova and Charles Craig.

Scenic Portrayer Voyaging

Robert Bruce, Educational Films, Is Heard from After Months of Silence

THE first letter from Robert C. Bruce, who left New York in April to begin a ten-months' trip in search of new picture material, has been received by Vice-Preesident E. W. Hammons, of the Educational Films Corporation of America, and some announcement may be made as to his destination and plans.

The indications are that the pack horses and steep mountain trails that have been associated with the Bruce pictures in the past are to be replaced next season with new backgrounds—as his letter was written on the deck of the 35-ton schooner "La Viajera"—somewhere in the Gulf of Georgia, British Columbia—bound from Seattle to Skagway, via "the inside channel." The "Le Viajera," which means in Spanish "The Lady Wanderer," is seventy-five feet in length and was built in 1907 to compete in a race to Honolulu. It carries 3600 feet of canvas and has an auxiliary engine of twenty-five horsepower—ideal equipment for a "scenic shooting" party.

Scores of cameramen have made pictures of Alaskan scenery, but almost without exception they have made Skagway their first stop—passing by a great section that has far more scenic beauty than the territory farther north. In the past four years Mr. Bruce has roamed through every mountain range from Mexico to the Canadian border—this season he expects to film the beauty spots of the Canadian Northwest, and will travel by water rather than by land. He says that he hopes to catch the spirit of the sea, and portray it on the screen as he has the spirit of the mountains in his earlier pictures.

Several months have been allowed for the voyage along the British Columbian Coast, after yhich the scenic-shooters will start for a more remote destination that has not yet been announced.

Wallace Reid, who will soon appear in "The Valley of the Giants," a Paramount-Artcraft feature

Locale of Morey's Play Is the Wide World

"The Man Who Won," Harry T. Morey's new feature, has provided Director Paul Scardon unusual opportunities in selecting his settings. The locale jumps pretty much all over the world. Starting in Russia, the action takes Mr. Morey, as Christopher Keene, over a considerable portion of that unfortunate country, across the Himalayas to the Malay Peninsula, and then, in a roundabout route to Oregon, in our own United States, where the major part of the action takes place.

If concerted action by leaders in their profession insures success, then Mr. Morey has reason to be congratulated on having a story by Cyrus Townsend Brady, which has been picturized by Edward J. Montagne. The supporting cast is more than adequate. It includes Betty Blythe, Maurice Costello, Bernard Siegel, Robert Gaillard and Denton Vand.

"Open Your Eyes" Draws Large Attendance

The State Health Films Inc., producers of "Open Your Eyes," the propaganda feature now being displayed at the Central Theatre, New York, inaugurated a daily policy continuous from 11 a. m. to 11 p. m., beginning with the opening performance yesterday.

The popularity of the picture, with its message of precaution to impressionable young men and women, is evidenced in the fact that upwards of 15,000 people saw the picture in a few days. Many prominent ministers, social workers and others interested in the curtailment of the spread of social indiscretion have evinced a keen interest in the picture.

"Exhibitor Wants Only Fair Play"

World Official Talks of Various Systems of Booking

"JUST about this time every year the film industry is all agog," said a prominent official of the World Film Corporation last week. "It has become a matter of habit to resort to spread-eagle arguments to stimulate the exhibitor to the point where he believes there is a crying need for a new deal. The old cards have become dog-eared and sticky and refuses to shuffle with a smoothness that permits of adroit manipulation. There are various forms of stimulating influences, or, to use the more familiar expression, 'sales policies.' But the one that seems to have the quickest effect deals with the exhibitor in his efforts to secure a certainty of bookings. Star System—Single Unit—Special—Selective—Supers are but a few of the thousands of words and phrases employed to bolster up the new arguments why you should use one service in exclusion to the other.

"After all, what does the exhibitor want?" continued this official. "This question is easily answered. Good pictures at a price that permits him to obtain a decent return on his investment of time and money. A certainty that his bookings will come through at the appointed time. Absolute surety that the producer will keep faith in observing the contracts entered into with the exhibitor.

"There is no difference in the relations between the United States Steel Corporation and its customers and the exhibitors and the distributors, or in fact any large manufacturer and his trade. If a picture company has sufficient capital to make a certain number of pictures and contracts with the exhibitor to deliver a certain number at stated intervals and agrees that the exhibitor has a right to cancel the contract without prejudice, he is in the same position as the customer of any large manufacturing company occupies, who buys on representation and cancels at will.

"It is all right to speak of selecting beforehand the pictures you want to run, but what about the exhibitor who lives a hundred or more miles from the branch exchange and changes his booking every day? How can he spare the time each week or month to see hundreds of pictures from which to select his needs? Suppose, for instance, that the choice of exhibitors centers on a certain star, author or director, what will the producing company with its hundreds of prints of other stars, authors and directors do? Will not this condition create another wherein if you take one kind you must also include in your purchase a different group? If, for instance, there is no cancellation clause in your contract and you plunge on one certain star for three or six pictures and your distributor comes to you and says: 'Brown, I have just had a talk with your competitor down the street and he is willing to take another series of our pictures if we give him the star you have selected when your contract runs out.'

"Of course, you don't want to lose the result of your hard work in making this star a winner in your house after running six pictures to hand the efforts of your labor over to your competitor. What is the most natural thing for you to do? Shut off your competitor by taking on the added load in order to hold on to the sure-fire money getter. You sign up for your certain standby star for another six or twelve pictures and try to do the best you can with the group you are forced to contract for. This is the Star, Single Unit, Super, Selective bookings, if you want to call it so, but it seems to me to be as near like the old line program as you could possibly get with none of the advantages of the program where you could cancel if you wanted to on giving notice.

"It is the same old sales bait with new hook, line and sinker."

Billie Rhodes, in "The Blue Bonnet," distributed by W. W. Hodkinson

Shares Offered to F. P.-Lasky Stockholders

DIRECTORS of the famous Players-Lasky Corporation have decided to offer to stockholders of record July 5 the right to subscribe to the 25,000 shares of stock now held in the treasury at $100 a share. This will bring the outstanding capital to 200,000 shares, the total amount authorized; stockholders have subscription privilege in the ratio of one new share for each seven shares now held.

Warrants are to be dated July 12 and will be issued on or before that date, while payment for new tsock is to be made by July 26. Dominick & Dominick, in conjunction with Hallgarten & Co., are underwriting the offering.

In connection with the offering, President Adolph Zukor has sent a letter to stockholders stating that in his opinion world conditions, as related to the motion picture industry, are ripe for legitimate and healthy extension, which can best be provided by increase in capital.

Improvement Always United Aim

J. A. Berst Confident of Continued Quality of Productions

WITH announcements being made by many producers, and men prominent in the business giving their varying opinions for the future, J. A. Berst, president of United Picture Theatres, Inc., has come forward with a quietly confident statement.

"With hundreds of congratulatory telegrams and letters received at our executive offices from United members expressing satisfaction at the excellence of its output United is under no necessity to join others in issuing apologetic excuses for the past and repentant promises for the future in the line of production," says Mr. Berst.

"From the days of United's first release "The Light of Western Stars," we have made it an invariable rule never to hurry the course of production of any picture to the detriment of its quality. Neither time nor expense has ever been spared in the direction of turning out one-hundred per cent productions, whether for Dustin Farnum or Kitty Gordon at the Coast Studios, or for Florence Reed here in the East.

"With the same end in view no picture has been released until the advisory board and the executive officers of the United have decided that everything humanly and technically possible has been done to turn out a high caliber offering. In other words we have always endeavored to 'make haste slowly,' preferring quality to speed and setting perfection before haste. For this reason United releases have been made with a frequency commensurate only with excellence of finished product. Consequently United need make no apologies for its product to date. On the contrary, we have every reason to be proud of the service given and the progress made.

"For United to aim at 'better pictures' is no new policy and no change of face, for the reason that from its very inception better pictures have always been United's objective in productions, and for the coming year, with the United Picture Productions Corporation specially organized for producing for our exhibitor-members the best that time, skill and money can supply, United will continue to keep its product well in the front rank, while adding to its releases from this new source and from those already in operation.

"With more than 2,700 theatres now served by United, and the number daily increasing, so that our goal of 5,000 theatres will become an accomplished fact, United will continue to pursue during the coming year the same careful progressive policy. For the service of this greatly increased number of exhibitor-members United's output will be correspondingly increased, but always as in the past, with close regard to quality of product, and while our releases will gain in frequency the same considerations will obtain as formerly, whereby each release is made only after United's officials and advisory board are confident that the maximum of excellence in each individual picture has been attained."

Mrs. Sidney Drew as an Individual Star

Mrs. Sidney Drew has staged the last scenes of "Bunkered," her initial individual starring effort and is now cutting this subject which will be released as a Paramount-Drew Comedy in July.

Mrs. Drew feels confident that the public will be pleased with "Bunkered" as she has exerted her best efforts to make it rank as high as previous Paramount-Drew comedies. Starting with a real story of human interest, written by Emma Anderson Whitman, the author of "Romance and Rings," the first Drew two-reeler, Mrs. Drew has contrived an enjoyable comedy full of mirthful situations and action.

"Bunkered" is a real comedy of the out-of-doors as all but three or four scenes are exteriors.

Sunset Official Comes to View Production

"You Never Know Your Luck," starring House Peters, the Sunset Pictures Corporation's production of Sir Gilbert Parker's powerful story is now in the assembling and cutting stage, Director Frank Powell having completed the final scenes on the new W. W. Hodkinson release at the Solax Studios, Fort Lee, N. J., co-incident with the arrival of Phil. F. Webster, secretary and general manager for Sunset Pictures, at whose San Antonio plant the picture was filmed for the most part.

The director has received from London a set of interiors and exteriors of the Brooks' Club, the famous gambling palace in the British capital, with which the Gilbert story deals, "You Never Know Your Luck," having England and western Canada as its locale. These London scenes will supplement those taken in a duplication of the noted gaming house built by Mr. Powell at the Solax plant.

Maxwell Karger, Metro director-general, was caught unaware one day by the camera, and as a consequence appears in support of Bart Lytell in "One-Thing-At-A-Time-O' Day."

Officials who make the Goldwyn wheels go round, and who have established the high standard of its product. Left to right: Abraham Lehr, vice-president, at the Culver City studio; Felix F. Director Has Grudge at Outdoor Locations

"Everybody who has had anything to do with the taking of a motion picture knows something of the trials and tribulations of the director," says Tom R. Mills, of Vitagraph's directors, "and how they keep their temper and good nature, notwithstanding. But I wonder if they ever stopped to think of the general perverseness of things inanimate, which have no control over themselves and which should not be expected to upset well laid plans. I am speaking of outdoor locations in particular."

Mr. Mills said that the director never could depend on outside locations. What was an admirable location one season would be completely changed when re-visited a year later. Man and nature had gotten in their fine work. Frequently a spot suggested by a friend looked promising but a visit disclosed that the entire scenery was completely at variance with what was described.

Pioneer Subjects Still Selling Fast

The Pioneer force of special representatives on the road continue to report sales in spite of the hot weather depression in the film field.

Last week three of the Pioneer pictures were sold to the Pearce Films Corporation of New Orleans. The productions effected in this deal are "The Girl from Nowhere," "Suspicion," and "Virtuous Sinners."

This sale was made by Jerry Abrams who is now swinging through the south. Owing to the unusual interest displayed by the buyers in this section Mr. Abrams has been obliged to revise his itinerary, placing his visits to the other centers on his tour at a later date than originally contemplated.

Dr. William Greene and Mr. George Haynes have just returned to New York from Guatemala with several thousand feet of negative for Prizma Natural Color Pictures, the result of photographing what remains of the evidences of the early Aztec and Toltec civilizations.

Every Picture Strictlyon Its Merit

MERIT, and merit alone, will sell the Goldwyn pictures of the season of 1919-1920.

Boiled to one word, that is the sum and substance of the policy announcements issued by Samuel Goldwyn. So sure is Mr. Goldwyn and the officers of the corporation of the superior quality of their productions that no contracts for sale will be entered into until exhibitors have seen the pictures on the screen. In such manner full responsibility for the sale of Goldwyn productions falls on the ultimate merit of each picture in itself.

The entire Goldwyn producing, creating, and distributing organizations have been reconstructed, strengthened, and greatly increased in scope in preparation for the new service which Goldwyn now plans to give the motion picture exhibitor.

Four pictures a month will be released by Goldwyn during the coming season. Each picture, so far as the Goldwyn company can make it so, will represent the very highest art in photoplay production. The genius of American authorship contributes its finest blood to the novels and narratives on which Goldwyn pictures will be based. The most widely-recognized of American dramatic artists will present Goldwyn picturizations to the people of America.

Goldwyn executives feel that, of all motion picture producers, Goldwyn alone can afford to let each picture rest entirely on the drawing-power of its own excellence and high quality.

What this policy means to the exhibitor has been clearly described in a statement by Felix F. Feist, Vice-President of the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation and Manager of Sales.

"The Goldwyn policy means that no longer will the exhibitor be given any opportunity to feel that a good picture must carry with it a bad one, or that the quality of production can be compromised to meet a specified sales price. The exhibitor will no longer, at least when buying Goldwyn pictures, be placed in the position of a blindfolded man who puts out his hand and takes whatever he finds in front of him. As producers we voluntarily choose to give the exhibitor the widest possible power of selection. It is impossible to club an exhibitor into spending money for pictures that he doesn't want and shouldn't have. The Goldwyn policy makes it impossible for the exhibitor to do anything except follow his own discretion. What he wants he can have. What he doesn't want he discards.

"We have not taken this step merely on our own initiative. For almost a year Mr. Goldwyn and his associates have been discussing, planning and testing out this new plan. Now that we bring it out in its entirety, with a widespread organization keyed up to make it successful, it is in response to what we feel is the wholesome demand of exhibitors everywhere for a new deal. The poor picture must go its way. Our new policy is the most definite guarantee we can give that every production we offer will be of the highest possible character.

"For the exhibitor this means a new avenue to profit. It assures him that the Goldwyn organization will concentrate on every picture in production, advertising, exploitation and publicity to the utmost.

"This is not mere rhetoric on our part. In preparation for this new service we have organized in each of our branch offices, covering the motion picture field of the United States, an entirely new method of putting the picture over for the exhibitor. A specially trained exploitation and publicity expert has been attached to each of these branch cities, whose sole duty will be to establish a closer relationship between the public and the exhibitor who shows Goldwyn pictures.

"A sweeping national campaign of poster and newspaper advertising will give irresistible strength to every Goldwyn exhibitor. Pictures for the next season are at this very moment in the possession of branch offices for first trade showings under the new plan. All the great pictures of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation and the Eminent Authors Pictures, Inc., which are listed in the new Goldwyn announcement will go to the exhibitor fearlessly and openly, standing each on its own merit, under the revolutionary condition of the new Goldwyn system."

Four Goldwyns a Month to Stand or Fall on Their Value

Educational Views of Turbulent Mexico

George D. Wright, producer of "What is a Mexican?" "A Day with Carranza," and other single-reel subjects of the moving picture series, "Mexico Today," has returned from Mexico City, and is in New York at the offices of the Educational Films Corporation of America, who are the distributors of his films.

Mr. Wright says that the first-page news from Mexico which he finds in the papers is news, indeed, to any one who has just arrived from Mexico City, where all the truth and a greater part of the fiction is suppressed by the Carranza government.

His negatives have been practically the only motion picture records to be secured in any part of Mexico since 1913, and more than fifteen short subjects have been completed. Each has been given international circulation through the "Educational" Exchange centers in this country, and in eighteen foreign lands.

Lease Studio to Make Briggs Comedies

To accommodate the increasing activities in the production of the Paramount-Briggs Comedies, Briggs Pictures, Inc., has leased the Ideal Studio, in Hudson Heights, N. J., for a term of years, and assumed occupancy this week. No time was lost in the course of moving from Yonkers to New Jersey, the company, under the direction of John William Kellette, working on location while the physical properties of the concern were being moved.

Ten Paramount-Briggs Comedies, which are to be released next season by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, already have been completed.

Business Democracy Goldwyn Aim : : : : : :

Head of Great Corporation Summarizes His Company's Ideals

AS a foreword to, and summary of the policy announcements of the organization bearing his name, Samuel Goldwyn issued the following statement:

"On the threshold of the new producing and distributing season, which will be characterized by a tremendous outlay for star great novels, direction, equipment and exploitation, Samuel Goldwyn, President of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, made this statement:

"The great strides which the motions picture has made in the last few years demand an entirely new procedure on the part of producers, for both creating and distributing their pictures. Hereafter only great productions and organizations will be adequate to the great hunger of motion picture audiences everywhere for significant pictures.

"The executives of the Goldwyn Company have seen for the last eight months that an entirely new attitude must be formulated by producers if they intend to keep pace with the stride of exhibitors and the public. Everything that has been done in this company since last Fall has been accomplished with that end in view.

"Our development in the last eight months from day to day has followed in every step taken, a logical and consistent plan. The announcement that we are now making is not news to us, however much it may be new and striking to the exhibitors everywhere in the United States. It is for Goldwyn the culmination and climax of an idea that has been growing, evolving, and has itself taken shape in the mere process of growth.

"Six weeks ago this company purchased the largest single studio property in the world in preparation for the great future of Goldwyn pictures. I, myself, have spent months in the effort to secure for us the finest array of brains in the producing and directing world.

"This great structure of equipment and brains enforces on us necessarily an entirely new policy in the means of bringing our pictures to the attention of the public. Hereafter no picture issued by Goldwyn will rest on anything except its own merits. It is a point of considerable importance and pride with us that by one swift blow we abolish any opportunity for any of the evils in the Goldwyn Company which have grown up generally in connection with motion picture distribution. We aim here at a democracy of business to keep pace with the democracy for which we stand in American life, we do not intend ever to force any exhibitor to accept any of our wares, unless they are so meritorious and attractive that he feels he must have them. The old system in which the good product carried the bad is gone forever. Unless our product is fine enough and powerful enough to stand by itself in this new and more open competition, it will fail.

"Organization alone is worth nothing unless you have a product which is equal to it in power, quality and meaning. It was not long ago that I said that this company, for one, would cease hereafter to make pictures merely to see how many it could turn out. Quality and imagination is what we are striving for. Our stars are the very pick of the screen. But great actors and actresses alone are powerless unless with them is allied the understanding, the penetration and intuition of great creative artists.

"No novelist can any longer complain with cause that he is unrecognized by the motion picture producer. I cannot speak for others, but for ourselves 'the great novel,' 'the great narrative' stands foremost. It is for that purpose that we have put our energy and a considerable part of the wealth at our command into the organiaztion of Eminent Authors Pictures, which has tied to us for a long term of years the genius of the most eminent novelists in America. The introduction into the motion pictures of such conspicuous pictures and famous writers as Rex Beach, Gertrude Atherton, Mary Roberts Rhinehart, Rupert Hughes, Gouverneur Morris, Basil King and Leroy Scott marks a new stage in development of this art. art.

The "Goldwyn Girl" at the St. Louis convention in June was another example of Goldwyn enterprise

J. G. Hawks, chief scenario writer, Goldwyn Pictures

"Oh, Boy" in Film Form Goes Big Everywhere

"Oh, Boy!", Albert Capellani's first offering as an independent producer, is earning enthusiastic commendation and being steadily booked at the first class houses. The novelty of the "filmusical comedy" with the tuneful settings from the original New York success, makes a strong appeal, while the work of the young stars, June Caprice and Creighton Hale is warmly commended.

The 24-sheet widely has been commended for its beauty, its feminine attractiveness and general attention-getting quality. The campaign book, with its exploitation aids to exhibitors, is one of the most complete in plan and suggestion. But what most enhances the story and brings out its very spirit of mirth and gay-heartedness is the music. In each place in which it has been shown so far, there has been an informal "Oh, Boy" week of popular melodies.

"Story is a Big Factor of Today"

J. G. Hawks, Chief Goldwyn Scenario Editor, Tells Reasons Why

"A NORMAL child inevitably grows tired of the inane toys of his first years and in its progression to manhood reaches out for more imaginative things to stimulate the commonplaces of life. It is a genuine paradox that with this intender imaginative stage there comes a correlated sense for fidelity to truth, to conform with reality. The boy or girl soon becomes tired of the Cooper Indian who is forever starting something by stepping on a dry twig, and wants characters and situations which are less naive. In this respect the public may be likened to the intelligent child in its reception and subsequent attitude towards the motion-picture. At first the novelty was sufficient to carry the new medium of joy to popularity. Mushroom stars sprang up, mostly of the fluffy-ruffles type. Ingenues inexperienced in the world were set to interpreting the wide passions of men and women. Sentimentality ran rioting around the benumbed forms of Logic, Strength and Fact.

"The motion-picture could not endure forever on such a basis. The time has come when it is impossible to sell a picture to an exhibitor on the mere prestige of a real artist being the star of the production. Yet the very introduction of such artists into the motion-picture was a step subsequent to the elimination of the ingenues and a step preceding the present condition when an exhibitor, and his public, demands a story as well as a name.

"More even than on the stage the element of freshness of youth, needs to be incorporated into film stories. Personality and youth will always play a predominant part on the screen. The great trouble for a number of years was that this vital factor was regarded as the only necessary factor. The element of strength, that is, of a theme sustained by its own sane power was completely negated.

"And withal, the great point was missed that a motion-picture is a story in action and not a play. Now you cannot portray fundamental drama without portraying sex. And the themes of the times were in the hands of immature blond young things incapable of giving an intelligent rendering of the passions of the world.

"A change subsequent to this condition was when artists with reputations began to take their places in the new art, the public, maturing, demanded more reality of expression and less mush. And today that public still more mature, is demanding a back ground to the personality flashed before it—a background which shall be balanced in the right proportions and shades, which shall show up the characters in the foreground in their correct patterns.

"Writing a five-reel feature is not by any means, a simple task. This will be more readily realized when the fact is considerd that the film of a five-reeler is approximately one mile in length, and contains from one hundred and fifty to two hundred and fifty scenes. The mechanical difficulties of keeping straight the thread of the story during the shifting and changing film is thus great, but it has been done, is being done, and will continue to be done in greater proportion. We of Goldwyn recognize this as inevitable and therefore bend all our efforts to meet the 'fait accompli'—the accomplished fact; in other words, we are determined to get the best stories for the best stars.

"The best illustrations of my thesis that come to my mind are two Goldwyn pictures lately released—'The Crimson Gardenia,' by Rex Beach, and 'The City of Comrades,' by Basil King. Mr. Beach's film is pitched in a melodramatic key, but once its premises are granted, development follows development with precision and effect. "The City of Comrades" lacks the carnival background of the other; it is a realistic theme realistically carried out. So far as the serious side of screen drama is concerned, these two pictures concern themselves with its two main departments, the melodramatic and the realistic. Yet they are each as effective as the other in their own spheres. 'The Crimson Gardenia' proves that melodrama can be a valid thing if it does not become too exaggerated, while 'The City of Comrades' is a graphic story told in action without sacrificing heaven and earth to make way for a star.

"A last word. A new organization, Eminent Authors Pictures, Inc., has just been organized on the basis that the authors shall cooperate in the picturization of their themes. I believe that this marks the final point of the progression of the story to a leading place on the screen. It means recognizing that the author has something to say in his works just as the actor has something to express in his personality. The linking of these means much, the day of the story is here."

Beach Says Eminent Authors Set New Mile Post in Films

Product Is Aimed to Answer Exhibitors' Cry for Pictures Living Up to Author's Record

REX BEACH, who with Samuel Goldwyn organized Eminent Authors Pictures, in discussing his ideas and aims on that company's pictures, stated the demand of exhibitors was that pictures live up to the name of the author, and that Eminent Authors Pictures intent was to do just that thing. Mr. Beach then told of the points which determine the success of an enterprise.

"Seven points will determine the success of the enterprise as a money maker for the exhibitor and ourselves, and I believe they are all as plain to the public as to the exhibitor," he said.

"1. What the Public wants are consistently good pictures. They may want to see a spectacle now and then but they want to be sure week in and week out of a good entertaining photodrama.

"2. To get a good photoplay, the producer must have a good story to start with. The most popular authors are writing the most popular stories, and the Eminent Authors are the featured writers of the magazines and books of greatest circulation in America.

"3. The industry of motion pictures needs the new brains and the active imagination of the authors who have good stories to tell. I will go so far as to state that the future of the industry depends upon the active cooperation of creative writers.

"4. The motion picture industry becomes an art when it enlists the active aid of men of imagination and genius who have the story telling gift.

"5. Stories must be distinctive. The production of pictures has got in a rut, because too many pictures were too much alike. The great appeal of Eminent Authors Pictures grows out of the wide range of interest the seven authors have. They write stories peculiar to themselves. Where I have made Alaska my field and adventure my specialty, Rupert Hughes plays up the city life and the social struggle. Gouverneur Morris is a master of the unusual and psychological tale. Gertrude Atherton puts the modern woman through her paces from California to Perch of the Devil.

"6. The continuity of stories in preparation for the screen is of recognized importance. The author is needed here to see that his big scenes are included and his characters kept true to the spirit of the story.

"7. This is the day of wholehearted cooperation between author, director and actor to make consistently good pictures out of the best stories of the most popular authors. The director of the new order will dominate in Eminent Authors Pictures because he welcomes all the help he can get.

"In a nutshell we are engaged in quality production for Eminent Authors Pictures. The author and the story stand up with the director and the actor to guarantee a photodrama that is well-conceived, well-thought-out and well-balanced.

"It is a fine thing for the authors and for the exhibitors that Eminent Authors Pictures will be developed in connection with Goldwyn. Samuel Goldwyn is young and progressive and fair-minded. His organization is energetic and alert to the needs of the exhibitor. The service department that will show its hand in the first trade book on Eminent Authors Pictures will match the keenest work of any exploitation department in the business.

"In presenting to the screen the best brains of the writing world, Eminent Authors Pictures set a new mile post on the path of the motion picture profession.

"Perhaps the newspaper crowd realize even more than the exhibitors what a tremendous public is interested in our authors; Gertrude Atherton, Mary Roberts Rinehart, Rupert Hughes, Basil King, Leroy Scott, and Gouverneur Morris."

Woman Joins Bartola's Sales Force

Miss Rena I. Larson for some time past connected with the Bartola Musical Instrument Company as secretary to H. J. Terry, Chicago manager, has reecntly been appointed a member of their sales organization.

Miss Larson's thorough knowledge of the instrument and her possession of the company's entire confidence coupled with her selling ability, has proven most successful and enabled the lady to close sales of the highest class and produce results most gratifying.

Nine New Releases are Announced

Goldwyn Names Some Big Dramas to Come in the Fall

ANNOUNCEMENT of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation's fall releases discloses the promise of several powerful dramatic and many varied comedy productions in which the Goldwyn stars will be given the chance to reveal their individual talents in exceptional roles.

Among the first productions to be released are "Upstairs" and "Empty Paradise," in which Mabel Normand will play the comedy leads. "The Peace of Roaring River" and "The Stronger Love," which present Pauline Frederick in strong emotional parts; "Heartsease" and "Lord and Lady Algy," which will add to the artistic reputation of smiling Tom Moore; "Almost a Husband," a serio-comic story cut to the measure of Will Rogers; "The Golden Song," a spectacular story of modern social conditions in which Geraldine Farrar supported by her husband, Lou-Tellegen, will play the role of an opera singer; and "Strictly Confidential," a screen version of Jerome K. Jerome's "Fanny and the Servant Problem," a perfect vehicle for dainty Madge Kennedy.

Mabel Normand in "Upstairs," is a nonentity in the sub-kitchen of a large hotel; yet despite her humble position, she has a keen desire to play the lady in the hostelry's parlor. Her prayer for a moment of luxury is granted in a most romantic way, for that moment is drawn out for the rest of her days. In "Empty Paradise," the Goldwyn hoyden is a circus rider, whose manager takes advantage of her innocence and places her in the position of shouldering the blame for a theft which he engineered. The town judge sees the 'man behind' the case, and condemns the girl to the position of caretaker in the town's orphan asylum. Here her interest in the son of the sheriff grows; and when her former manager returns to kidnap her, his plan is frustrated in red-blooded manner.

Pauline Frederick is the victim of a cruel matrimonial hoax in "The Peace of Roaring River," in which a vicious postmistress lures a poor Eastern girl to the West with forged notes. But her terrible dilemma is finally solved by the magnanimous attitude of a fine son of Nevada. In "The Stronger Love," a drama by Louis Sherwin, Miss Frederick plays the second wife to a man who idolizes the memory of his first wife's overwhelming affection. His relatives help to maintain the legend of the first wife, when the second discovers a series of letters which she had received from a lover. The second wife's attempt to shield the reputation of her predecessor and to return his letters to the writer arouses the suspicions of the husband, who surprises his wife when she, in desperation, attempts to burn the incriminating correspondence. On learning the truth, he forgets the past, and begins to live in the shining present.

"Heartsease," from the play by the late Charles Klein, is Tom Moore's next release. The title is the song in an opera by an unknown musician, which was stolen and presented as original work by the aristocratic thief. The development of the story includes a strong and tender love story in which Tom Moore has a chance to disclose his ability to portray intense emotion in a suppressed way. His later release, "Lord and Lady Algy," which Maxine Elliott and William Faversham played on the stage, introduces Tom Moore as the younger son of an aristocratic English family with sporting proclivities. A famous horse race is shown on the screen, the result of which impoverishes the young lord and enriches the girl whom he loves. Intriguing relatives furnish many counter motives to embarrass the young people, but they reach the end of the final reel hand in hand.

"Strictly Confidential," Madge Kennedy's newest vehicle is now the fourth form of Jerome K. Jerome's story, "Fanny and the Servant Problem." The plot revolves about a girl of the stage who marries a lord, and discovers that all her servants are relatives. Accustomed as they are to the conventions of their master, they attempt to train their relatives in the duties of a "lady." The actress-lady rebels to the point of leaving her husband, when the entire household seems to grow warm with understanding and an impending rupture ends in a promise of lasting happiness.

"Almost a Husband" falls in loose creases about the outdoor personality of Will Rogers. He isn't a brawny hero of the west, but he sacrifices his own best interests unobtrusively for the benefit of others. The character creates the same sympathy for Will Rogers that won him an army of friends in "Laughing Bill Hyde." Will Rogers on the screen will be supported by Peggy Wood, who made a sensation in New York last year in "Maytime."

Geraldine Farrar's next release will be a super-production in which the star will have the devoted support of her husband, Lou-Tellegen. "The Golden Song" is the name finally decided upon for the picture which will present Miss Farrar as a Russian opera singer who is the unhappy pawn of events over which she has no control. The story is replete with dramatic incidents, culminating in the triumph of an unknown American girl in the opera house of Petrograd.

Rex Beach, the writer, who has formed, with Samuel Goldwyn, Eminent Authors

Rex Beach and Samuel Goldwyn Announce First Seven

Eminent Authors Organization Well Under Way on Productions from Popular Novels

REX BEACH and Samuel Goldwyn announce the first seven productions of the seven authors who have united in the most ambitious undertaking of the motion picture industry in the organization of Eminent Authors Pictures. The vast audiences that these authors command by their written word will be able to identify these pictures because each one will carry the name of the author. They will look for "a Rupert Hughes picture" or "a Mary Roberts Rinehart picture," and so forth.

Lou Tellegen and his wife, Geraldine Farrar, Goldwyn stars

The continuity is well under way for the first Rupert Hughes picture, which will be called "The Cup of Fury," after the name of the novel which is now having tremendous sale in book form following its serial publication in the Red Book. It treads right on the heels of current events and presents a heroine of unusual personality in amazing American scenes. The humor of Hughes will be kept in the spirit of the story.

"Perch of the Devil" will be the first Gertrude Atherton picture based on one of the most successful novels of the foremost of women novelists. The story has two great heroines, the figures of women you can't forget. The hero is a mining engineer in Montana and the town of Butte is the scene of the struggle. "Perch of the Devil" will undoubtedly make a memorable photodrama and the script of the production is already on its way to the Goldwyn studios at Culver City, Cal., for immediate production.

"Partners of the Night" will be the first picture for Eminent Authors by Leroy Scott. This master writer of detective tales and the whirling life of the underworld contributes the characters and plot that made his stories one of the best serial features ever published by the Metropolitan Magazine. His crooks are real crooks, his heroes hit hard in the clinches and the situations are full of the suspense and zip that make the movie fans thirst for more.

Mary Roberts Rinehart will contribute "The Amazing Interlude," one of the two great novels of the year and a story of international popularity which was published in the Saturday Evening Post, and then in book form by Harper, and again is being reprinted by Grosset & Dunlap, publishers. Mrs. Rinehart is a master of mystery and mother love and romance in village streets, and she paints with laughter and tears the fine young men and their sweethearts in love's young quarrels. "The Amazing Interlude" is a story of youth, courage and devotion in an American girl innocently daring.

"The Street Called Straight" will be the first Basil King picture and one of the best by an author who commands the tremendous audience of the Saturday Evening Post, Cosmopolitan and Harper's. These magazines count their readers by the million and so does Basil King. He is noted for his pictures of ambition and genius in triumphant struggles with fate and faith. His experience as a clergyman naturally leads him to emphasize the spiritual conflict in men's lives.

"The Wild Goose," now running serially in Hearst's Magazine, will be the first Eminent Authors' production by Gouverneur Morris. This is the most crackling shot that has been fired at the burning question of divorce. In this novel Mr. Morris has pictured New York artist life vividly. He has also created four characters who will live in the memory of those who see them on the screen and that is the final test of a good picture.

Rex Beach surpasses his previous productions in his first release for Eminent Authors' pictures which will be called "The Girl from Outside." The Beach power and tremendous punch are there and something more. The heroine is an appealing figure as she comes from death's door on board ship to the cabin of three crooks in the Alaska town of Nome. Beach paints his canvas with big sweeping strokes—full of color, and his figures stand out of the pictures, human and appealing. There is no bunk about Rex Beach and the public look forward with great eagerness and satisfaction for the pictures that bear his name and those of his associates in Eminent Authors Pictures.

Good Advertising and Publicity

Ralph Block, director of publicity for Goldwyn Pictures

Goldwyn Builds Up Powerful Department for Exploitation

DURING the las six months, the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation has been building a powerful advertising exploitation and publicity organization in preparation for the great pictures which the Goldwyn Company plans to put out this coming season.

Samuel Goldwyn and his associates have long realized that the most important factor in the motion picture industry outside of first-class pictures and inspiring actors, is the aid that the producer gives to the exhibitor in helping him get his pictures before the public. Goldwyn publicity and advertising have been distinguished from the very beginning of the Goldwyn Company. Upon this basis of extraordinary service, the company has built a machine which exerts its influence in every corner of the motion picture world. Through Goldwyn publicity, the name of Goldwyn is known wherever human beings live.

The new system which is now in process of formation will give the Goldwyn publicity and exploitation department, representation all over the United States. A broad and extensive exploitation service has been developed for the successful promotion and presentation of the Goldwyn output. Twenty-two exploitation publcity experts are now being installed in each of the Goldwyn exchanges in the United States. The men chosen for these important posts have been selected because of their broad experience and practical knowledge of all phases of showmanship, publicity, advertising and exploitation. They will devote their time and efforts to first-hand co-operation with Goldwyn customers. They will prepare and place newspaper advertising and publcity throughout their territories; they will devise and arrange effective lobby displays and stage settings; they will create and put into execution "exterior promotion stunts," publicity and merchant-co-operative drives; they will compile and edit house organs and programs; suggest ways and means to build up patronage in towns and cities where interest is lax.

The aim of the Goldwyn executives is to have these men work in close harmony with Goldwyn exhibitors and Goldwyn resident managers. Goldwyn's plaform for the coming season is built solidly upon the actual requirements and wishes of the exhibitor himself with the dominant idea of providing personal service that will assuredly increase the box-office drawing power of Goldwyn productions. These exchange experts will work under the supervision of the Home Offices in New York. By this method the Goldwyn policy will be tied up and unified throughout every section of the United States.

A systematic investigation has been carried on in the past year to determine exactly what Goldwyn exhibitors need and desire. Goldwyn service experts have repeatedly organized research campaigns and their campaign of next season will be based on their analysis of these results. A complete understanding of what is practical along publicity and exploitation lines will underlie every move.

In the last three months the publicity and exploitation departments of the Home Office have been more than doubled in size. One of the reasons for moving the Goldwyn executive offices to the new quarters at 469 Fifth avenue was to provide ample facilities for this new growth.

The exploitation and advertising departments have a staff now of more than fifty persons. No opportunity will be lost to convey to the exhibitor in the season that is to come that this widespread organization was formed entirely for his benefit and to bring to him the prosperity which new conditions promise on every hand.

The Director of Publicity at the home offices is Ralph Block, a newspaper writer and editor of long experience in the eWst and New York and former dramatic critic of the New York Tribune. Hunt Stromberg, Director of Service, is also a former newspaper man and has had an extensive experience as an advertising agency owner. Kenneth Macgowan, Director of Advertising, is well known in the motion picture field, both as a critical writer on the motion picture and as a publicity expert.

The important department heads working in these three sections of the Goldwyn organization are Howard Dietz, chief assistant to the director of publicity and well known as an advertising writer and expert; Harmon Yaffa, chief assistant to the director of exploitation, and wide known throughout his identification with national advertising in all its branches. Albert W. Sobler, exploitation expert and assistant editor for the exploitation department of production press and service books; George Ingersoll, publicity manager for Eminent Authors Pictures, Inc., and Rex Beach productions and formerly associated in an advisory capacity with the Charles Frohman Company; Edwin Justus Mayer, former associate editor of Munsey's Magazine, now in charge of the Goldwyn publicity service; Jerome Lachenbruch, assistant editor for the publicity department of the Goldwyn Production service book; Miss Lucy Huffaker, in charge of publicity in New York newspapers and national magazines; and Miss Christine Valleau, head of the Goldwyn Bureau of Photography.

The Goldwyn art staff is headed by Art Manager Lionel S. Reiss, a versatile and creative brushman. The art service given by Goldwyn is conceded to be superior in every point of creation and practability.

Will Buy Short Tales at Double Prices

In order to secure the very best stories for production as two reel comedies, Amedee J. Van Beuren of 220 West 42nd Street, New York City, announces that he will pay five reel prices for superior stories accepted for either of his stars, Mrs. Sidney Drew or Ernest Truex.

Writers should bear in mind that the Drew and Truex comedies are of the polite type and questionable situations and slap-stick action are tabooed. Just the idea will be sufficient in submitting stories, but if the author can develop the idea it will be more welcome. Detailed continuity is not desired, as Mrs. Sidney Drew writes the working scripts for both Paramount-Drew and Truex Comedies.

Realistic "Red" Scene

Director Frank P. Donovan succeeded in staging a novel scene a short time ago at Broadway and 45th street, New York, when he had a mob of actors garbed as Bolshevikis make speeches right on this busy corner for a forthcoming Bolsheviki propaganda comedy special with Marguerite Clayton, now being made at the Paragon Studios for special release.

Enormous Model Plant is Big Goldwyn Production Asset

Recently Purchased Triangle Western Studio, Enlarged, Is Second to None in the Entire World

IT was the big production plans before it that necessitated Goldwyn's purchase of the Triangle Studios in Culver City, an outright cash transfer said to have been the largest of its kind recorded in the motion picture industry. As a result Goldwyn has now studios second to none, and capable of caring for the enlarged productions in view.

The Triangle studios were built and equipped at a cost of more than a million dollars. They cover a forty-acre tract of hills, valleys, plains and woodland, giving every known variety of scenic background to picture directors. The buildings and equipment, including two complete miniature theatres and six huge production stages, comprise one of the most elaborate establishments devoted to motion pictures in the world. Since the studios were first leased the Goldwyn campany has made all of its productions there and now has eight companies at work.

The new studios will give a splendid equipment for the great productions that are being planned. They are more than a producing center for motion pictures. They are actually a large city, city parks, librairies, theatres and long striking highways. The glint of the sun on the huge steel and glass production stages can be seen for miles around.

The store houses and wardrobes, housed in separate buildings, are complete in every detail and surpass those in the production centers of Italy, Germany and France. A chemical laboratory in a building set apart, to eliminate danger from fire, is fitted out to the last detail with all the refinements of modern photography. Among the other buildings are a complete portrait studio, a garage with room for thirty-five cars, an extensive swimming pool, and a massive steel and concrete vault to assure the safety of the costly equipment used in producing.

To give authoritative historical value to Goldwyn productions, Mr. Goldwyn has been steadily acquiring a library which now numbers many hundreds of volumes.

A complete hospital and relaxation ground for the employees completes the equipment.

Except for the glass-roofed production stages, the studios and their surroundings seem more like a landed estate than a producing plant for one of the largest enterprises in the world. Notwithstanding this almost perfect production center various ramifications of the gigantic studios were begun as soon as they passed into Goldwyn's hands. New stages were erected and the dressingrooms extended. Every device known to the science of stagecraft must be handy with the consequence that several new mechanisms were added to the originals. A large portable electric plant, the first of its kind to be installed in a motion-picture studio, was perhaps the most important addition.

Both time and trouble are obviated by this plant, which was perfected, incidentally, by the Goldwyn electrical staff. The big machine was first used in the Madge Kennedy production of "Through the Wrong Door." It is a marvel in lighting equipment constructed along the most practical lines. A 90-horsepower Wisconsin special marine automobile engine drives directly a 50 generator of 110 volts. This is set on a cast iron base, eliminating vibration. The plant is mounted on a specially built 4-ton auto trailer. The weight complete is 9,000 pounds. Pulling full load, it supplies sufficient power for broadsides, banks, spots, and many small lights.

Ford Weekly Shows Much Progress

Plans to Present America to the Entire World

SINCE the Ford Educational Weekly began to entertain and instruct motion-picture patrons of American theatres, one hundred and sixty different subjects have been presented pictorially and graphically. The early plan of Mr. Ford to bring the wonders of the world within the view of millions of stay-at-homes is succeeding more rapidly than even he surmised.

Mr. Ford set out to dramatize the facts of daily life, the wonders which we read about in magazines and in books of travel, and the development of great inventions which have added the touch of luxurious comfort that is one of the outward signs of civilization. His cameramen have succeeded in telling many of life's secrets, of unearthing fantastic and unusual stories of nature, and in showing man's ingenuity vying with the unseen powers that rule the universe.

No finer tribute to the Ford Weekly has been expressed than the unsolicited approval and endorsement of colleges and scientists of repute. The Weekly is now being shown 6000 days per week, and the millions who view it are presented in an entertaining way with some information which will add to the fullness of their lives.

The Ford lieutenants have brought back to America views of the wonders of different lands; and now Mr. Ford has completed arrangements to present America to the world in a definite way. Every country in Europe, South American States, Asia and Africa will soon come to know American institutions and geographical regions as well as we know theirs. The mission is filled with unguessed possibilities, but with warm promises of success.

Among the most recent Ford releases, "At the Crossroads," presents the life of the inmates in the government prison at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, and shows that here the men are taught useful trades without being made to feel that they are under surveillance. The well-known prison costume is laid aside for the universal garb of the workingman and the men work as they would in a shop.

Their cells are clean and their movements not hedged with the constant reminder of the lock-up. In short the picture presents a school for grown-ups rather than a place of confinement.

The facilities which the Goldwyn distributing organization in America has placed at the command of Mr. Ford, together with the far-reaching foreign organization which Goldwyn is now developing, will soon result in stretching an educating band of celluloid around the world.

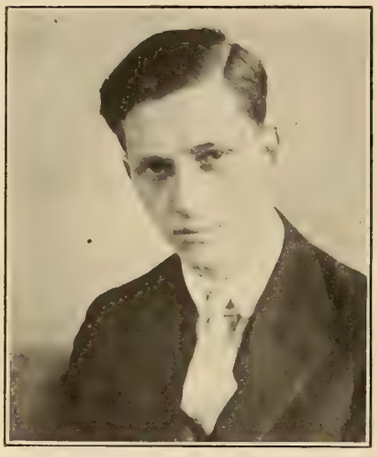
Stars Will Represent Every Phase

THOUGH the play may be the thing to catch the conscience of the king, as Hamlet wisely surmised, modern theatre and motion picture patrons are not so easily led to disclose their intermost thoughts and partisanships. Today, with a far more critical audience than the untutored mobs whom the blood and thunder tragedies of Shakespeare appealed to—and they came for the blood and thunder and not for the beauties which later ages discovered—the cast is almost as important as the play itself.

This close relationship of actor to play, of character type to the part to be interpreted, was appreciated by Samuel Goldwyn when he secured the services of actors and actresses of such diversified temperaments and methods as Geraldine Farrar, Pauline Frederick, Mabel Normand, Madge Kennedy, Tom Moore, Will Rogers and Lou Tellegen. Nearly all have made enviable reputations on the dramatic, and in the case of Miss Farrar on the operatic stage.

Geraldine Farrar's career is almost as well known as the voyage of Columbus. The meteroic success of the demure girl from Melrose, Mass., whom Melba wished to "mother" and present to the great opera world as her protege, has left a trail of light for other gifted American girls to guide their way to artistic eminence. She made her operatic debut in Paris as Marguerite in Faust; and four years later, sang "La Boheme" for the first time at Monte Carlo. At this performance a young Italian tenor also made his debut with overwhelming success. That tenor was Enrico Caruso. After Miss Farrar returned to America to be acclaimed by her countrymen, the possibilities of the motion picture were presented to her by Mr. Goldwyn. He realized that Miss Farrar was a rare actress as well as a singer; and the result of his conviction was Miss Farrar's appearance on the screen. With the formation of the Goldwyn organization, Miss Farrar, whose personal letters from admirers reach the amazing total of one thousand a month, was presented in powerful dramatic roles, ranging from the story of frontier life, "The Hell Cat," to her latest picture, in which modern social and political affairs form the background. In this picture, her ledaing man is Lou-Tellegen, the star's husband. As the romance of their marriage is one of the beautiful idyls of the American stage, this latest production in which they will appear, will not lack realism.



Hunt Stromberg, director of service, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation

When dramatic roles which present a social problem form the subject of the Goldwyn plays, Pauline Frederick is usually asked to interpret the leading role. On the stage the beauty of Miss Frederick caught the spotlight of the public eye; and later, when she rose superbly to the task of living the difficult part of Potiphar's wife in 'Joseph and His Brethren,' the dramatic critics as well as an adoring public found another American actress to apostraphize. Since Miss Frederick's association with Goldwyn, she has played the principal part in such plays as 'The Woman on the Index,' 'One Week of Life,' and 'The Fear Woman,' the latter a psychological of the effect of a weird, uncontrollable fear on the life of a sweet American girl.

In a lighter vein, Madge Kennedy is the favorite of both theatre and screen patrons. Whoever laughed himself to tears over the stage successes, 'Twin Beds' and 'Fair and Warmer,' has a warm place in his heart for the comedienne whose portrayal of the innocent heroine with the penchant for skirting the most serious of domestic difficulties without realizing her danger. Though Miss Kennedy intended to become an artist with the brush, destinty took a hand in her life and saw to it that she gravitated to the Cleveland stock company of Robert H. McLaughlin who wrote 'The Eternal Magdelene.' After two years of solid training, her Broadway success became almost a matter of course. And now, Miss Kennedy has surpassed her stage reputation with a far wider popularity on the screen. She will soon be seen in the Jesse Lynch Williams' cinema play, 'Through the Wrong Door,' which is a picturization of the novel that was published serially in Collier's Weekly.

Allied in temperament to Miss Kennedy is Mabel Normand. She too, came to New York to study art. And like Madge Kennedy, her beauty and her talent as an actress, soon diverted her energies from the brush to the comic mask. As a comedienne, she has earned her title of the female Charlie Chaplin. Agile and free in her movements, Mabel Normand is never so happy as when she can cavort about on the grass with a dozen kids. Her beautiful expressive eyes carry a touch of pathos when her hoydenish roles give her the chance to express the tragedy in the heart of a country heroine. However, in her newest Goldwyn production, 'Upstairs,' Miss Normand will play the part of a kitchen girl, who for one short hour, masquerades as a lady. For the first time in a long while, her many followers will get a glimpse of the lovely star as God fashioned her beauty, before she returns to overalls and her kitchen duties.

In his own free Western way, Louis Bennison, whose pictures are released by Goldwyn, is quite as young in heart

Territory Sells Rapidly on "The Hushed Hour"

Reports from the Harry Garson office state that territory on "The Hushed Hour," featuring Blanche Sweet, is selling very rapidly, three-fourths of the entire territory of the United States being already disposed of. The latest territories purchased are:

First National Exhibitors' Exchange, Inc., of Illinois, for the State of Illinois; Big Feature Rights' Corporation of Louisville, Kentucky, for the states of Kentucky and Tennessee; Pioneer Film Corporation of New York City for the State of New York; Pearce Film Corporation of New Orleans, Louisiana, for Mississippi and Louisiana and the First National Exhibitors' Company of Cleveland for the State of Ohio.

"The Hushed Hour" is from a short story by Gertrude Brooke Hamilton, which was printed in one of the national magazines a short time ago and which excited much comment because of the originality of its theme and the depth of its feeling. Charles Maigne made the adaptation and Edmund Mortimer directed.

Supporting Blanche Sweet are Wilfred Lucas, Milton Sills, Mary Anderson, Rosemary Theby, Harry Northrup, Edward M. Kimball, L. T. Steers, Winter Hall, Wyndham Standing, Gloria Hope and Master Bennie Carpenter.

Mr. Garson is very enthusiastic over this production and considers it in every way as good a feature in story, cast, direction and the numerous other details that go to make a production successful, as "The Unpardonable Sin." He also says that it will be just as big a success financially.

Former Scenario Writer Joins Ince's Staff

Luther Reed, formerly with Metro and other companies where he did excellent work in the scenario field, has joined the Ince staff of scenarists and will soon be heard from in forthcoming productions for Paramount-Artcraft release. He recently returned from the service of Uncle Sam, in which, after being drafted, he won his commission as second lieutenant before the end of the war.

"No Limits to Field of Pictures"—Goldwyn Art Director

Hugo Ballin Always Considered Pictures a Serious Medium of Artistic Expression

HUGO BALLIN, art director extraordinary, whose settings have ever been considered almost beyond improvement by picture followers, will care for the settings and "interiors" of Goldwyn pictures in the future as he has in the past.

"Whatever success I have achieved as art director for Goldwyn," he says, "is because I have from the beginning taken the motion-picture as a serious medium for artistic expression. Here at last was something that promised to become a popular art! Since the days of the minstrels who went about ancient lands chanting the glories of bygone days and heroic exploits, there had been no medium to which the great masses of the people had an opportunity to respond. The theatre, through all its stages, remained an urban institution frequented more by the middle-classes than by any other. But this new thing, this original medium, was not limited as the 'legitimate' theatre is.

"Here we have every chance to make our scenes perfect. Our limits are only financial; and it is gratifying to be able to say that Goldwyn has never hesitated to outlay any money which seemed to make realistic the picture under production. For instance in our present work on Miss Farrar's new picture we have built a street scene in Petrograd which cost $35,000. In one sense this was extravagant; but in the sense of creating the ultimate reality we were capable of, the money was well spent. And this should be and is the sense of all our creations. To erect beauty and reality in our settings is our final function. It is a worthy one."

Hugo Ballin has been awarded many distinctions, not the least of them in his opinion having been that of being nominated to The Hall of Fame by "Vanity Fair." Born in New York on March 7, 1879, he quickly gave evidences of his surprising talent. He studied at the Art Students' League in the city of his birth, where he was awarded a scholarship, and completed his artistic education in Rome and Florence. His list of awards is an imposing one.

In 1905 he won the Shaw Prize Fund. The following year his merits were rewarded by the Thomas B. Clarke prize and the Architectural League Medal. The latter was again awarded to him a year later, when he was also awarded a medal by the Buenos Aires International Exposition. That same year 1907 was indeed a year of triumph for him; in addition to those already mentioned, he won the Hallgarten Prize, the Isidor Gold Medal, and the Anthony Dyer Prize, R. I.

His work has been reproduced in the Critic, Century, Kunst and Kunsterwerke (Vienna), International Studio, etc. Before he began to design motion-picture settings his specialty was mural decorations, his most noted efforts being the executive chamber at Madison, Wis.; and in the Home of Oliver Gould Jennings, N. Y. City and E. D. Brandegee, Boston. His decorative pictures are in many private collections, and he is represented as well in the National Museum, Washington, D. C.; Montclair Museum, New Jersey, and Ann Mary Memorial, R. I. He is an associate of the Academy of National Design, a member of the Architectural League, the Society of Mural Decorators, the National Club (Rome), the National Institute of Arts and Letters, the American Water Color Society, and the Society of Arts and Letters, Paris. In addition to all these he is art director for Goldwyn Pictures and when not at work in California he makes his home in New York City.

as Miss Normand. His rapid-fire adventure tales of the West present him as the cowboy, the sheriff, or the unsophisticated farmer lad who 'packs' a punch where other men wear sleeves. His next picture will be 'High Pockets.'

Speaking of Westeners, none is more real than Will Rogers, who has just begun a series of comedies at the Goldwyn studios with Peggy Wood, of 'May-Time' fame, as his leading lady. Rogers, the lariat thrower of the 'Follies' broke into print recently with a book of funny sayings, one of which President Wilson used in his Boston speech, giving due credit to Will for its originality. At the beginning of his career, Will Rogers was a lariat thrower, and used his unique 'patter' to fill in gaps. As his popularity grew, the lariat throwing became secondary to the 'patter.' He has one Goldwyn picture to his credit, 'Laughing Bill Hyde,' which proved that an ugly man can be a sympathetic hero.

Smiles of a different sort than Will Rogers' countenance, have won the hearts of Tom Moore's followers. Perhaps the Irish in him has endeared him to the millions who never miss a Tom Moore picture. When 'A Man and His Money' was succeeded by 'Just for To-night,' 'Thirty a Week,' 'Go West, Young Man,' and 'One of the Finest,' Tom Moore seemed to have reached the limit of his powers. But in his latest release, 'The City of Comrades,' he will astonish those who know him best by one of the tensest bits of dramatic acting seen on the screen this year.

High Standard for Goldwyn

Vice-President Lehr Tells of the Progress Made by Organization

"Goldwyn Pictures have brought an entirely new standard of excellence into the field of picture production," says Abraham Lehr, vice-president of Goldwyn. "Upon Mr. Goldwyn's retirement from one of the early producing companies, he carried with him the ideal, fostered by his youth and his experience in production, of advancing the art of the motion picture. He combed America for big minds with large vision to help him in the mission that he had undertaken. He succeeded in gathering together a nucleus which led to the formation of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation in November, 1916.

"At a sacrifice of time and money many experiments were made with this ideal in view. When Samuel Goldwyn could easily have produced the type of picture then popular, he put aside the advantage and resultant gain from making mere commercial pictures to advance the ideal he had in mind. For example, when "Polly of the Circus" was made, the cost of production was three times that of the ordinary cost for making a picture of similar magnitude. But the experimentation was worth the money, and the result was a step forward in the art of making motion pictures.

"While the Goldwyn Company was formed in November, 1916, it did not release a picture for public exhibition until September, 1917. But during that time all of its energies were bent to perfect the quality of production in Goldwyn Pictures. Almost overnight, after the showing of Goldwyn's first picture, the name of Goldwyn was recognized as that of a producing company that spared neither time nor money to attain the results that it sought.

"As an example of the lengths to which Samuel Goldwyn went to obtain what he thought was necessary to under the management of Frank Bruner. The Serial Publicity Department specializes, as its name indicates, on serial publicity and is entrusted with the exploitation of every Pathe serial in the way of trade paper, fan magazine and newspaper publicity. George A. Gray, another New York newspaper man, is Mr. Bruner's assistant. This department also gets out the Pathe Sun the intra-mural house organ.

The Exploitation Department is the newest of the Home Office departments, and was created by Mr. Brunet to give to exhibitors and to the Sales force every assistance in the way of ample material to help "put the show over". Edgar O. Brooks, formerly Sales Manager with the Mutual and at one time an exhibitor, has charge of this department. This department compiles the campaign books with their extensive exhibitor helps.

Who Gets New Chaplin?

News that the stork is expected to visit Mr. and Mrs. Charlie Chaplin within the near future has started the rumor pendulum to swinging between New York and the West Coast as to the probable individual or firm which will secure the screen services of the expected youngster.

From some quarters it has been whispered that Louis B. Mayer has a contract for the coming baby's screen appearance, to begin at any age from one to fifty.

Mrs. Chaplin is scheduled to begin her film contract with the Mayer Productions, Inc., the early part of September, her first production being based on a well known book.

Capital Film Presents First Production

With the release of "A Knight of Western Land" featuring Neal Hart, the Captial Film Company will make its bow to exhibitors as a producing organiaztion. It is said everything that can possibly be done to insure merit in a subject, has been done in this production to make it a foundation stone upon which success may rest.

A strong cast supports Mr. Hart in the story which is said to be of a virile and red-blooded nature. Feats of daring which will, according to the claim of the producers, open the eyes of even the most hardened picture goer, run through the film. Western life as it is, the locations faithfully produced, will be seen.

The special music prepared for this production has as a basis, the melody of the song "Western Land" written by Byron Gay, author of "Honeymoon Town" now in a successful run at the LaSalle theatre, Chicago. The fact that the song "Western Land" alone was made a special feature, with elaborate stage settings at Graumanes Los Angeles theatre, on a recent date expressed in a degree the possibilities presented the exhibitors of this country for the successful exploitation of the production "A Knight of Western Land."

Creation Films Formed to Produce Serials

The Creation Films, Inc., a new producing company capitalized at one half million dollars, purchased the Kalem studios at Cliffside, N. J., over a month ago.

The officers are K. Hoddy Milligan, president; B. D. Biggerstaff, vice-president, and C. C. Shively, secretary and treasurer.

Alterations, repairs and improvements to the extent of $25,000 worth have been made in the studios. The ceremony is to maintain its own releasing organization, arrangements already having been made to open offices in the large film centers throughout the country.

The policy will be to produce high class serials which will be released three reels at a time instead of the customary two. Two reel comedies are also included in the program. Roy Sheldon will have charge of the production department.

Pictures Reflect Personality

Directors Cannot Change Personality in Production, Says Goldwyn Official

"MOTION PICTURE directors can no more dissociate their personalities from their productions than can a screen or stage star," says an official of Goldwyn. Close observation of the work of the Goldwyn directors, Clarence Badger, Reginald Barker, Harry Beaumont, Frank Lloyd and Victor L. Schertzinger compels conclusion that directors are no Gods of sudden magic, but very likeable people who bow to the eternal truth of "By their works, shall ye know them."

"Gentle and diplomatic in method is Clarence Badger, who directed Madge Kennedy in some of her notable pictures, "A Perfect Lady," "Daughter of Mine," and "Strictly Condential." He gives his players few instructions, but by suggestion and discussion—sometimes over a cup of tea cultivates sympathy for the effects he is trying to achieve, with the result that the players working for him see his point of view and try to make it real.

"Reginald Barker has lived his life within the shadow of the calcium. Born in Scotland and educated for the stage, he wrote and produced a play at the age of sixteen. In all this work Mr. Barker's interests and temperament centered on plays of a markedly dramatic nature. Consequently, when he was chosen as the director for Geraldine Farrar, he insisted on building up every dramatic situation by every means which his long training suggested. The success of his methods find their justification in "The Hell Cat," "Shadows," and "The Stronger Vow."

"In contrast to his ideas on the essential in cinema productions are those which Harry Beaumont successfully introduced in pictures featuring Tom Moore. His ten years of stage experience and seven years as a screen actor with the Edison company have produced such pictures of charm and delicate humor as Tom Moore's "Thirty a Week," "Go West, Young Man," "One of the Finest," and "The City of Comrades."

"Entirely different in method is Victor L. Schertzinger, who directed Mabel Normand in "When Doctors Disagree." From the hoydenish character of the heroine, and the galloping speed of this comedy, one would suspect Mr. Schertzinger to be a man of extremely gay moods. But on closer view, it will become evident that Mr. Schertzinger has remarkable ability to dovetail scenes of totally different context so that the structure of the story to be presented is unbroken.

"Frank Lloyd like Reginald Barker, was born in Scotland, and received his stage training in a stock company. Some of the pictures which made this youngest of great directors famous are "Les Miserables," and "A Tale of Two Cities." In his present work, Mr. Lloyd is directing Geraldine Farrar and Lou-Tellegen in their new picture, whose title has not yet been announced.

Buy "Mickey" for Trio of Southern States

F. M. Sanford and L. C. McHenry, who have been associated in various film enterprises and road shows throughout the middle west and southern states for past seven years and the organizers of South-Western Film Corporation of Dallas, have disposed of their interests in that concern and established offices at 126 West 46th Street, New York, where they are arranging for a number of feature productions to exploit as road shows.

After nearly a month of negotiations they have secured Mack Sennett production, "Mickey," featuring Mabel Normand for Georgia, Alabama and Tennessee. Arrangements are now being made to tour three "Mickey" companies, opening early in September.

Florence Reed Modest in Picture Desires

"Give me a part that offers me a fighting chance, then build up the other parts as much as they will stand, get me the best actors you can engage to play them, make them give you the best that is in them, and it's up to me to prove that I am the star of the picture. If we haven't something to make us extend ourselves to the utmost, we all go stale."

The words are Florence Reed's. With them she at once throws a bomb into and explodes the theory, as far as she is concerned, that stars of the screen and stage insist on the subordination of all parts but their own. At the same time her utterance explains the excellence of the supporting cast which have surrounded her in her series of United Picture Theatres, Inc. feature photodramas. Miss Reed has no fear that the work of good actors in her support will dim the splendor of her own performance.

Goldwyn Sets New Standard

bring his pictures to the standard he had fixed for them, he surrounded himself with such men as Hugo Ballin and Everett Shinn, whose artistic worth was immediately recognized by the vast motion picture going public. To-day Goldwyn Pictures are taken as standard for comparison in production.

"The position so rapidly attained by Goldwyn in so short a space of time has not alone been strengthened since the beginning, but has to-day placed Goldwyn in the position of the leading producers of the world. While it does not make as many pictures as other producers, its pictures are recognized as those of the highest quality and the vision of Goldwyn of two years ago has been materialized in the recognition by the exhibitors to-day of the achievement of Goldwyn's ideal."

Expand World Film Exchange

Owing to rapid growth of business, necessitating more spacious quarters, the Salt Lake City branch of World Film Corporation has moved to No. 60 Exchange Place, that city. Hadden Stephens is local manager.

Herbert E. Hancock, president and director general of H. and H. Productions, now making "Love Wins"

Bessie Love a "Sweet Young Graduate"

Many of the friends of Bessie Love who live in the East are in receipt of invitations to be present at the commencement exercises of the Los Angeles High School this week when Bessie Love, one of the most popular of the Vitagraph stars, will be among the sweet girl graduates. While it was generally known that Miss Love was still a school girl in her 'teens, even if she were a picture star, there were a few doubting Thomases. Now their doubts are set at rest. Miss Love couldn't very well graduate from the high school unless she had been a pupil there.

Miss Love's new picture, "Cupid Forecloses," will soon be released, and the little Vitagraph star has already started on the one to follow, a picturization of Millicent Evison's story, "Over the Garden Wall."

The second of the Albert Capellani productions starring June Caprice and Creighton Hale, will be released under the title of "The Love Cheat." It was adapted from the French stage success by Tristram Bernard, "Le Danseur Inconnu," but in the American spirit and locale given to the story in translating it to the screen, the new title more completely expressed the romantic comedy.

Director George Archainbaud, working under the supervision of Capellani, is now cutting and "painting up" the story, in which the stars are supported by Alfred Hickman, Charles Coleman, Edward Davis, and Katherine Johnson.

H. & H. Productions Are Reorganized

At a meeting of the H. & H. Productions, held at its office last week, the company was reorganized. Herbert E. Hancock was elected President, R. J. Huntington, Vice President and Treasurer, Don Hancock, Secretary and Business Manager. The capital of the company was increased and an extensive advertising and publicity campaign was decided upon.

Miss Violet Mersereau is one of the stars of this company and she is now working in a production, under Director H. E. Hancock, the name of which will be announced in a few days.

"Convention News" Surprises

Goldwyn Puts Out Miniature Newspaper with Live Items Concerning Gathering

"THE CONVENTION NEWS," Goldwyn's convention novelty, certainly is said to have lived the doings of the gathering. It broke into Kinograms through Hunt Stromberg's idea, whereby when hundreds of exhibitors were given the paper, the camera crank turned on plenty of cyclonic action. This scene, together with other convention news, will feature the week's issue of Kinograms.

The Convention News made its appearance daily, made up and dressed up in fashion that would have done justice to a miniature edition of any of the metropolitan newspapers. The first edition—circulated on Nov. 25—told all about the formal opening of the convention and printed the photographs of the national officers. Page two gave an account of "Goldwyn Week in St. Louis," in which seventeen of St. Louis' representative picture theatres featured current Goldwyn Pictures. Page three was devoted to a list of attending delegates and several photos of prominent St. Louis exhibitors. Page four reproduced two telegrams sent by Samuel Goldwyn and the Goldwyn stars, in which greetings and best wishes were transmitted to the exhibitors of the Nation.

The biggest surprise was in edition number two. Page one of this issue contained cartoons of the leading lights and intimate personality notes that evoked uncommon interest. An exclusive photo of the first business session was also shown.

On Friday—the final "official business" day of the convention, THE CONVENTION NEWS was out with an extra on the election of national officers. The elections took place in the morning and the paper greeted the exhibitors, with flagrant headlines and equally flagrant "copy" early in the afternoon.

Many "Virtuous Men" Deals

New England States, and Kansas and Missouri Sold for S-L Production

THE distribution of "Virtuous Men" on the state right plan is being carried forward vigorously by Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin. The rate at which they are selling territories for the S-L picture starring E. K. Lincoln bids fair to outstrip their activities in connection with "The Warrior" last season. They announced this week the sale of "Virtuous Men" for two more territories. Herman Rifkin, well known state rights buyer of Boston, Mass., purchased the picture for New England states, embracing Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island. It is understood he paid an exceedingly high price for the rights to New England. Rifkin enjoyed great success with "The Warrior," another S-L offering, and believes he has acquired a worthy successor in "Virtuous Men" to the box-office attraction starring Macist. The New England sale was consummated between Arthur H. Sawyer and Mr. Rifkin.

The states of Kansas and Missouri have been purchased for "Virtuous Men" by Dubinsky Bros., with headquarters at Kansas City, Mo. This organization owns and operates a chain of picture theatres in both states, the leaders of which are the Grand Opera House, Kansas City, and the Teetle theatre, St. Joseph, Mo. This sale was made by Bert Lubin, special traveling representative of S-L Pictures. Dubinsky Bros. will present "Virtuous Men" as a regular theatrical attraction in their various theatres at an early date, while Herman Rifkin has already booked the production for the entire chain of Poli's houses, giving the picture a continuous run of twenty-one days.

Percy Marmont, who has been signed to support Alice Joyce in a series of her Vitagraph pictures, has commenced work on the second production, in which he is leading man to the star.

Jack Perrin has been engaged by Universal to co-star with Josephine Hill in a series of two-reel Westerns.

Blanche Sweet Begins Under New Contract

Perhaps the most talked of news in Los Angeles this week is that concerning the contract made by Jesse D. Hampton with Miss Blanche Sweet for a series of pictures to be released through the Pathe organization.

No intimate details have been given by Mr. Hampton concerning the contract, but it is understood the salary fixed is larger than this actress previously received. It is Mr. Hampton's plan to star Miss Sweet in super-productions, making no more than three or four a year.

"By following this plan," Mr. Hampton said, "we will be in a position to secure better stories suitable for Miss Sweet, prepare the screen version for them in the best possible manner and then make the production, using all the care necessary to make the super production in name and quality.

"Negotiations for this contract have been on several months both with respect to Miss Sweet and the releasing and while the contract was only signed June 23rd we will be ready to begin work on the first production by July 1st, this will be a screen adaptation from the English melodrama, 'A Woman of Pleasure.' I have engaged Wheeler Oakman as Miss Sweet's leading man. Wilfred Lucas will be the heavy and Wesley Barry will have an important part.

Abramson Making New Picture with Moral

The Norma Talmadge studio is the scene of Ivan Abramson's present activities which will result in a six reel drama "Someone Must Pay" written by Director Abramson for the Graphic Film Corporation.

The story is said to abound in big situations and has for its motif the seldom heeded admonition "Think before you speak—Decide before you act."

It is perhaps the first time on the screen that the subject of jealousy is handled without gloves and Abramson shows with striking clarity the terrible consequence of unfounded suspicion.

The players include Gail Kane, Edmund Breese, Jackie Saunders, Hugh Thompson, Jere Austin and others.

Mr. Abramson when last seen at the studio promised "Someone Must Pay" for an early Fall release.

William Fox as Viewed in Europe

English Film Magazines Devote Articles to Big Producer

LEADING motion picture trade publications in England availed themselves of the opportunity to obtain first-hand impressions of William Fox while he was in London recently and devoted much space to pen pictures of the American producer.

While the policies and possible plans of Mr. Fox, as well as his past picture exploits, came in for a great deal of comment, it is plain that William Fox, the man, appealed with peculiar force to the imagination and curiosity of the British.

The Film Renter and Moving Picture News correspondent, in an article headed, "Interview with William Fox," after remarking that "Rarely does one come across a program that does not feature a Fox film," avows the curiosity he experienced to "see the man who has made Fox pictures famous the world over." He finds that Mr. Fox is "curiously modest, but gives one the impression of being absolutely 'au fait' with every section of the country, both here and in the country where his productions rank the equal of any producing firm." The writer, following an interview occupying a page and a half, indulges in a prophecy in the following words:

"It will thus be seen that this extremely go-ahead concern is likely to loom even bigger in the near future."

The Kinematograph and Lantern Weekly, in the course of a lengthy article, says:

"A stray observation that a man has no right to make pictures for a public of whose tastes he has no knowledge is probably the real clue to Mr. Fox's descent on these shores, and already he is making up for lost time. In the past the Fox studios have found that the full-blooded pictures are in great demand; but one of the Fox watchwords is variety. Mr. Fox entered the movie game with an exceptional advantage over his competitors, for he already knew his public."

The Cinema representative starts out with this appreciation:

"One of the most delightful experiences that falls to the lot of a newspaper man is to chat with a man who is real enthusiastic in his own business. In film circles, especially among manufacturers and producers we have many such enthusiasts, both in America and in England, but one of the very greatest we have ever met is William Fox.

"In the course of the conversation," the writer relates farther on in this character sketch: "We could not but admire the very clear and concise manner in which Mr. Fox proved up to the hilt why exhibitors should not only give their unstinted support to producers of great films, but why, when hiring pictures of a superlative quality, the same exhibitors should make it a point of honor not to beat down the renter to the lowest possible figure.

"Continued success for Fox Films, we cannot but admit, is not only due, but is bound to continue," prophesies this writer in The Cinema, "with such a man at the head of affairs—a man with unbounded energy, such wonderful artistic talent, and such remarkable experience in every phase of the trade from its earliest days."

Bioscope and other magazines also devoted long articles to Mr. Fox, while the Cinema, under the department, "Open Letters," published a letter indicating the esteem the film man is held in by British exhibitors.

Karger Advocate for Long Runs

Will Stop Over-Production, Says Metro Official

W. E. ATKINSON'S ideal, expressed in the Metro policy of fewer and better" pictures is supplemented by Maxwell Karger's insistence that motion pictures shall rise to long runs instead of being shelved arbitrarily by the exhibitor to make room for an attraction of doubtful power. Metro's director general asked to give his opinion of what is wrong with the motion picture answered:

"When the exhibitor has learned to give a picture a run and play it for all it is worth," he said, "then will the picture come into its own. Then can the exhibitor and the fan look forward to bigger, better and finer productions. I am not speaking for myself or for Metro. I am speaking for the entire industry.

"The present system of exploiting picture is all wrong. It is shamefully wasteful; it is criminal. It doesn't give a picture a fair chance. Under the existing conditions a program release, no matter how fine it is, no matter how much money, effort, and time it cost to make is good for hardly more than six months. And why? Is there any legitimate reason why a good picture should not continue for more than six months after release? Is there any sane and logical reason why a picture should not be kept on as long as it draws? But the trouble is that certain exhibitors book a picture for, say, three days, and at the end of the three days they throw it out for something else, regardless of how big business it is bringing to the box office. Is that fair to the producer? Is it fair to the exhibitor himself?

"Exhibitors want better pictures. We producers want to give them better pictures. But we cannot do so until the exhibitor signifies his willingness to give the picture its due. And I'll tell you why.

"One of the evils of the industry today is over-production. And over-production is due directly to the demand. And the demand is due to the fact that the average exhibitor is not inclined to give a picture a run. If he were to play a picture for all it is worth he would use a smaller number of pictures during the year. This would cut down the evil of over-production. In other words, were the demand not as great as it is, we would have more time to give to our productions, which would naturally make for better results in the end.

"There isn't a producer of repute in the business who would not rather produce quality than quantity, according to Mr. Karger. But the motion picture business being basically, a commercial enterprise, the demand for quantity must be satisfied until such a time as the exhibitor ceases to demand it.

"Metro released about sixty features last year. Another big company released about as many, and still another released over a hundred. It is certain that no human energy can turn out anywhere near this number in a year without an occasional drop below the 100 per cent. standard.

"What arouses my ire is to hear people compare the pictures of so-called legitimate stage to the utter discredit of pictures. The stage producer puts out, say, three plays a year. He has all the time in the world to produce his play, he can rehearse and rehearse and improve the story continually, he can strengthen the weak spots in his cast, and when he is ready he puts on his play, and if it is a good play it goes on for a run in the big cities and stays on until it has been thoroughly played out. He has no release date to catch. He has no particular demand to satisfy."

Realart Branch Heads Named in Two Cities

Appointments of branch managers to the Boston and Chicago offices were announced by Realart Pictures Corporation last week. As a result of the visit to Chicago of J. S. Woody, General Sales Agent, Harry W. Willard was named manager of the Chicago office in charge of distribution and exploitation in the Middle Western territory. Mr. Willard has had nine years experience in branches of the motion picture industry.

Walter R. Scates will head the Boston branch beginning on July 1. Mr. Scates has had a wide experience in marketing films, having started in the industry back in 1906.

Sunbeams Become Popular

Glen Lambert, director and manager of the Florida Film Corporation, of Jacksonville, Fla., is reported as meeting with unusual success in his trip through the country in the interest of Sunbeam Comedies. Mr. Lambert is disposing of state rights to the Sunbeams, and reports that they are selling like the proverbial "hot cakes." The Sunbeam comedies are made in Jacksonville, at the Klutho studios.

Territories reported sold include Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey, New England states, Western Pennsylvania, West Varginia, Maryland, Virginia, Delaware, Michigan, Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana and Illinois.

Every five weeks the various projectionists, lecturers, advance men and managers are called together for general conference, where questions of importance are discussed and interesting incidents are exchanged, all of which adds greatly to the efficiency of the shows maintained by the National Cash Register Company.

Simplex Distributor Making Chicago a Simplex City

The Exhibitors' Supply Company, distributors of Simplex Projectors, with offices in Chicago, Indianapolis and Milwaukee, report to the Simplex factory that the past two months have proven banner months for Simplex sales, for besides the famous Chicago "Loop" being 100 per cent. Simplex, the rest of the greater Chicago theatres are rapidly reaching the 100 per cent. mark, which indicates that in a very short time the entire metropolis will be exclusively Simplex.

Among the Simplex installations made within the past two months from the Chicago office are the following: Douglas theatre, Chicago, Ill.; Longview Commercial Club, Longview, Ill.; Joan theatre, Burlington, Ill.; Empress theatre, Peoria, Ill.; L. Orr & Son, Dwight, Ill.; Court theatre, Auburn, Ind.; Honeymoon theatre, South Bend, Ind.; Empire theatre, Moline, Ill.; Butterfly theatre, Kenosha, Wis.; Orchestra Hall, Chicago, Ill.; Liberty theatre, Culver, Ind.; Victory theatre, Petone, Ill.; Amusu theatre, Fulton, Ill.; Vaudette theatre, Sterling, Ill.; Family theatre, Dixon, Ill.; Majestic theatre, Milwaukee, Wis.; Twentieth Century, Chicago, Ill.; Academy theatre, Waukegan, Ill.; Wigwam theatre, Sheffield, Ill.; Kedsiz Annex, Chicago, Ill., and Lyceum theatre, Terre Haute, Ind., the majority of whom have installed two machines each, making a splendid showing of distributor activity.

Upon finishing "Easy to Make Money," his last program picture for Metro, Bert Lytell started on a short rest before beginning his first of the "fewer and better pictures."

W. H. Clune has booked Houdini in B. A. Rolfe's super serial, "The Master Mystery," through the World Film Corporation, for his Broadway Theatre, Los Angeles.

Violet Heming, who will play the title role in "Everywoman," a Paramount-Artcraft production

Bryant Washburn is the star in "A Very Good Young Man," a Paramount picture

"Fires of Fate" on August 3

"Fires of Faith," the six-part special feature produced by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, will be available to all exhibitors on and after August 3. It will be released under the Paramount trademark on the same plan as was the John Emerson-Anita Loos Paramount picture, "Oh, You Women!"

In "Fires of Faith," the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation announces it is offering the exhibitors an exceptional feature with a tremendous box-office "drag" and exploitation possibilities. Characterized by a theme of international appeal, dramatic and gripping, "Fires of Faith" is said to bring out forcibly in its story the power which the Salvation Army exerts as an agency of reform and regeneration. A love story forms the basis and overshadows anything which could be construed as propaganda, it is stated.

From the box-office point of view, according to the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, it is the ideal attraction for the live exhibitor. Because of its record in France, the Salvation Army has received considerable laudatory publicity through the newspapers and magazines, from the pulpit and from the rostrum, and the drama holds added interest on this acount. Instances of its money-making possibilities are cited in the records it established during its special engagement at the Harris Theatre, New York, and at the Stratford Theatre, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., when it played to packed houses.

Parsons to Make Fewer But Better Comics

Now that "Smiling Bill" Parsons is launched on the second year of his Capitol Comedies enterprise, the comedian has announced from the Hollywood studios of the National Films Corporation of America that his comedies for the coming year will be marked by fuller incident and a greater variety of novel settings than were presented in the first series.

Recently the comedian announced that Mr. and Mrs. Carter De Haven would make thirteen comedies besides the thirteen that "Smiling Bill" would appear in, so that the total output would be the same as last year. Many other interests, both of a business and professional nature have compelled "Smiling Bill" to reduce the number of stories in which he will appear.

Secure Big Mountain Scenes

Florence Reed and Company Returning from Adirondacks Report Great Trip

LORENCE REED, A. J. Bimberg, William S. Davis and the cast supporting Miss Reed in her forthcoming United Picture Theatres production which bears the working title of "The Eternal Mother," have returned to New York after spending the greater portion of last week in the Adirondacks on location. Director Davis reports the successful shooting of a number of scenes of great natural grandeur and promises some striking novelties in the exterior settings of the now nearly completed feature picture.

In this connection A. J. Bimberg who is personally supervising the production, is reported to say, "From the point of view of splendid diversity of its scenes both exterior and interior the Eternal Mother production will, I am confident, stand out very prominently among the offerings of the year. The script calls for a variety and magnificence of setting that will set a new standard for Florence Reed United Picture Theatres presentations.

"Besides the natural scenes we have just completed in the wilds of the Adirondack Mountains, there will be contrasting settings of oriental splendor of the Indo-Chinese order. I say 'order' advisedly, rather than 'type' for this Indo-Chinese environment, I do not hesitate to say, will provide something of magnificence and uniqueness removed from the usual motion picture type. Among the interior settings will be the bridal suite of one of New York's most fashionable palatial hotels. The Fifth Avenue mansion of one of the City's richest families has been secured for the filming of others of our material sets.

Kremer's Films Snapped Up

Shorty Hamilton Comedies and Other Victor Kremer Features in Demand

"SHORTY" HAMILTON pictures are going big in the West, judging from a wire received from Victor Kremer by the home office last week. Mr. Kremer's telegram, dated from Omaha, read:

"Shorty Hamilton is a riot out here. Have sold all five five-reelers I had of him to Omaha Film Exchange and First National Film Co., Kansas City, has bought all my Shorty Hamilton features that were open in their territory."

Mr. Kremer's wire goes on to state that "Strife," featuring George Le Guere and Jean Stuart, and "Stripped for a Million," featuring Crane Wilbur, were also purchased by the big Omaha Exchange, while the First National, of Kansas City, added to their purchase ten five-reelers recently purchased from Essanay by Mr. Kremer. He further commented upon the popularity of Mr. LeGuere in the West, where so many of the notable features he has created star roles in have been shown over and over, and says that Crane Wilbur is as much the idol of fans out there as ever.

The five Shorty Hamilton releases, as learned from the Victor Kremer offices in New York, are "The Pen Vulture," "The Ranger," "Denny from Ireland," "The Snail," and "When Arizona Won." Of the movie stars featured in "Westerns," Shorty, with his snappy little personality and his own unique style of humor, seems to be gaining in popularity in a way that will soon bring the demand for his pictures abreast of the very biggest male stars in filmland.

Levering Daring Off-Screen

Helen Holmes' Leading Man Had Valor Record in War and Was Decorated

Jack Levering, who will shortly be seen doing a few hero stunts in Helen Holmes' latest serial, now being made at the Grantwood Studios by the S. L. K. Corporation, but a short time ago was performing real deeds in the great war. Levering was a lieutenant, joining in the Engineers at the outbreak of war.

He was sent to France in June, 1917, still a private, and then gradually won promotion until he received a commission. After seeing service on several battlefields, he was again promoted, exchanging the gold bar on his uniform for a silver one, and after the armistice was recommended for a captaincy.

Levering was one of the intrepid band of engineers who won fame at Cambrai by throwing down their picks and shovels, grabbing rifles and attacking when it seemed the Germans would break through. He gained the Distinguished Service Medal by saving the life of a man who had been pinned under a truck and a railroad car when a tank train crashed into a truck. The screen player volunteered to attempt to extricate the pinioned man, and though shells were falling rather heavily dug a passage under the debris, crawled through, and brought the injured man out. He was mentioned for bravery by General Byng and later decorated by King George for this.

Prior to entering the army, Levering was noted as a daring performer before the camera, and in the Helen Holmes serial it is expected he will startle with some extraordinary stunts.

The Indian Harbor Yacht Club, of Greenwich, Conn., has been presented with a silver trophy by Evelyn Greeley, World star, to be raced for by yachts belonging to members of the club, under conditions decided upon by the racing committee.

"Clown" Prince Without Make-up

The former Crown Prince of Germany, sometimes referred to as the Clown Prince, may not be any great shakes as an army leader, but as a comedian Universal claims he is in a class all by himself, especially as he does his act without a make-up.

A few weeks ago, while the uncrowned Crown Prince was still enjoying Holland's scenery, the notion entered the royal cranium to advertise his democratic behavior. After all, didn't he deserve a little publicity? Imagine it! Here in a humble residence stood royal blood, dressed in the garb of the common class, breathing ordinary air, and eating a farmer's fodder. Was there no reward for such royal condescension? So promptly the project was hit upon to begin a campaign of world-wide publicity. What greater medium was there than the moving-picture, to spread his fame broadcast?

Without a moment's loss, 75,000 marks were produced, and offered to the Holland film company that would allow the Crown Prince to stand before its camera for fifteen minutes. A fool and his money being soon parted, the company was found, and the pictures of the Crown Prince, promenading in all simplicity, were taken. The film entitled "Hiding in Holland" is now in the hands of the Universal Film Co. and promises to set "movie fans" roaring at His Highness' efforts to be lowly.

The Crown Prince is seen making a sorry attempt to appear sweetly saintly and unsophisticated. To impress the world with his humility, "Papa's Pet" picked a muddy road to walk on, and stops on his way to chat to mere humans.

Laemmle on Universal's Lot

Although Universal City continues to be the place of marked activity in the producing field, two of the major companies and a smaller one have sought other locations. The start of the new Monroe Salisbury picture, "Sundown Trail," took the company to Plumas county, California, where it was found that the Feather river region offered better scenery. Excellent locations for the filming of several of the scenes in "The Brute Breaker," which is being directed by Lynn Reynolds were found.

Empey's Picture in the Fall

President Lewis J. Selznick, of Select, announces that he has postponed the release of "The Undercurrent" until August. "The Undercurrent" is the Special in which Guy Empey is being presented by Select, and its release had originally been announced for July. But President Selznick is so impressed by the big picture and by its possibilities as a business-getter, that he is unwilling to release it in the middle of the dog days, and has therefore decided to hold it over until August, in order that the picture can be ready for the very busy days of early September.

This decision was emphasized when Director Wilfrid North pleaded for more time in which to complete the work of cutting and titling. North avers that he is making many innovations in the finishing touches he is giving this photoplay, and he does not wish to be handicapped in the matter of time. A completed print of "The Undercurrent" will be shown to Select officials early in July.

The spirit of "polishing up" seems to have seized the entire company. Florence Evelyn Martin, who will be co-starred with Sergeant Empey, has requested several retakes and these are being made in the studio this week.

"The Tiger Lily" on July 27

Another of the all-star casts of which recent American productions have been able to boast appears in Margarita Fisher's forthcoming release, "The Tiger-Lily."

As "Carmina," nicknamed "Tiger-Lilly" because of her purity, vivid beauty and fierce tigerlike grace, Miss Fisher is a young American-Italian girl assisting an uncle in the management of a quaint tavern frequented by the Italians of the settlement. A stiletto rumpus which gets into the newspapers brings the son of the owner of the property to the inn, to give warning that such goings-on must cease. He falls a victim to Carmina's flashing eyes and unaffected manner, and though there are all manner of obstacles to overcome on both sides of the sketch, in the way of opposition from parents and rivals, their romantic affair comes to a fair ending. The democratic American lover is portrayed by Emory Johnson, who appeared opposite Miss Fisher in "Put Up Your Hands," "Charge It to Me," and "Trixie from Broadway."

Expedition to the Far East

Universal Cameraman to Visit Malay Lands and Film Inhabitants' Customs

ONE of the longest and most adventurous motion picture expeditions ever undertaken will be started July 10, when a cameraman representing the educational and industrial departments of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, boards the steamship "Empress of Asia" at Vancouver, B. C., for Singapore.

Under the supervision of Harry Levey, general manager of these departments for Universal, the cameraman will tour the Islands of Sumatra, Borneo, Java and other territories to the south of the Malay Peninsula. The tour is being made primarily in the interests of the rubber industry of America, but while in the countries visited, the cameraman will "shoot" thousands of feet of film devoted to the life and customs of the peoples encounted.

Roswell J. Johnson, the man who will make the trip, will make port first at Hong Kong, where he will be compelled to wait two weeks before catching a steamer for Singapore. Sumatra and the other islands to be visited are within short sailing distance of this port.

Johnson is taking thousands of feet of raw stock with which to photograph all details and operations of the rubber industry, which is the main occupation of the natives of the territory included in the tour. Practically every rubber plantation of importance on the islands will be visited, and the camera will register the growing and harvesting of every kind of raw rubber produced.

The expedition, it is thought, will take at least six months and possibly a year. The cameraman is taking with him equipment for an even longer period than that, believing that going prepared is better than coming back empty-handed.

Insure Accurate Locations

Local Color in First Nationals' "In Old Kentucky" Is Up to Exhibitors

EXHIBITORS in Kentucky and Tennessee who are experts in the art of motion picture exploitation have been invited to witness the taking of many local color scenes to be used in "In Old Kentucky," a First National attraction starring Anita Stewart. Alfred Green, an assistant director for Anita Stewart Productions, Inc., has already selected a number of locations between Louisville and Lexington.

For the purpose of absorbing the spirit of the production, and to enable them to present "In Old Kentucky" in a manner that will absolutely coincide with the most human version of this famous race-track classic, including the heart throbs, rejoicings, fears and hopes of the characters, exhibitors from across the Mason-Dixon line have been especially urged to attend by Col. Levy, president of the Big Feature Rights Corporation of Louisville, and owner of the First National franchise for that territory.

Immediately upon the completion of the selection of sites, Marshall Neilan, recently signed to direct a series of pictures for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Anita Stewart, Mahlon Hamilton and others of the cast, and also Louis B. Mayer, president of the company, will arrive in Kentucky.

According to Green, some of the most famous estates in the Blue Grass regions will be used in this production. "Walnut Hill," the estate of L. V. Harkness, Standard Oil millionaire, will be seen as the exterior of Frank Layson's home. "Hamburg Place," the stock farm of John E. Madden, most famous breeder of thoroughbred horses in the world, will be one of the big scenes in the picture.

Churchill Downs has been selected for the race track scenes. The famous track, by its beauty and adaptability greatly impressed the assistant director.

"Trying to Get Along" is the title of the newest Paramount comedy from the Mack Sennett studios, which is released July 6. Charlie Murray features.

Hale Hamilton has started work at the new Metro studios in Hollywood on "The Four-Flusher," a comedy drama.

About New Pictures

World Pictures has engaged Austin Webb to create the role of Judge Alwyn in "A Tangled Romance" in which June Elvidge is the star.

Harry Morey, having completed his part in "The Gamblers," will take a short rest before commencing his next production.

Harry Raver is said to have devised a remarkable "Human Mountain" for a 24-sheet on the Augustus Thomas drama, "The Volcano."

Edward T. Langford, who enlisted in the army, comes back to the screen in "The Volcano," the second Augustus Thomas-Four Star picture starring Leah Baird, a W. W. Hodkinson release.

In the newest Christie Special which is in production, the feature cast, headed by Alice Lake, includes Earle Rodney, Eddie Barry, Gene Corey, Al. Haynes and Ward Caulfield.

With the prohibition in mind, Vitagraph has been busy photographing bar-rooms of every description, from the country tavern to a Bowery "dive" to be stored away for future use.

Anna Case, opera star and screen player, who appeared in Select's special, "The Hidden Truth," entertained 200 wounded soldiers at her home a short time ago.

"Common Property" is the tentative title of a new Universal six-reel drama dealing with nationalization of women in Russia. It has just been started at Universal City under direction of Paul Powell.

Dr. W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, on returning from a trip in the Mid-West, reported business as flourishing.

Eileen Percy is to be leading woman for Major Warwick when he starts his new Paramount-Artcraft picture, "In Mizzoura," at the Lasky studio.

Albert Capellani's adaptation of Pierre Wolff's popular play, known to Paris as "Le Ruisseau" and made under the working title of "The Gutter," has been renamed "The Virtuous Model."

Universal has bought "Auld Jerimiah," by Henry C. Rowland, and "The Altar of Little Thunder," by Elmore Elliott Peake, for filming. Both appeared in magazine form.

Elsie Janis will start work on her first Selznick picture within a few days. The story of the production is being finished by Edmund Goulding.

Helen Ferguson, who just completed the lead opposite Harry Morey in the "The Gamblers," has been engaged for a prominent part in "The Star Rober," a Jack London story to be directed by Oscar Lund at the Paragon Studios in Fort Lee, N. J.

World Pictures will soon produce "Miss Crusoe of Chesapeake," written by Roy A. Sensabaugh, of Birmingham, Ala.

"A Man's Fight," which will shortly be released by United Picture Theatres, Inc., is described as a story of the East and West and stars Dustin Farnum.

Nazimova, temperamental as are many stars, made it necessary to close a Los Angeles city block one night recently, in order that she be undisturbed during the filming of a scene.

Irene Castle is starred in "The Firing Line," a Paramount-Artcraft special

PATHÉ SERIAL PROGRAM FOR 1919-1920

THE PRODUCERS

In submitting this program, Pathé desires to call particular attention to the Producers. These men have been producing Serials for years. They know what the Serial public wants.

GEORGE B. SEITZ who produced "The Black Secret" and who will produce "Bound and Gagged." Mr. Seitz has served for years in Serial making. He wrote the scenarios for "The Perils of Pauline," "The Exploits of Elaine," "The Iron Claw," and "The Shielding Shadow." He directed "The Fatal Ring," "The House of Hate" and "The Lightning Raider." He produced and directed "The Black Secret" and will produce and direct "Bound and Gagged."

LOUIS J. GASNIER will produce "The Third Eye." Mr. Gasnier's company, The Astra, has produced "The House of Hate," "The Mystery of the Double Cross," "The Seven Pearls," "The Shielding Shadow," "The Fatal Ring," "Pearl of the Army," "Hands Up" and "The Tiger's Trail."

THEODORE WHARTON will produce "The Crooked Dagger." Under the firm name of Wharton, Inc., Theodore and Leo Wharton produced "Patria," "The Exploits of Elaine," "The New Exploits of Elaine" and "The Romance of Elaine."

JOSEPH GOLDEN, President of Western Photoplays, Inc., is the producer of "The Great Gamble." This company produced "Wolves of Kultur."

RUTH ROLAND SERIALS, INC., will produce "The Adventures of Ruth." Miss Roland, with years of Serial experience behind her, has organized her own producing company to produce her own Serials. She starred in "Who Pays?," "The Red Circle" and "The Neglected Wife." Her last two Serials, "Hands Up" and "The Tiger's Trail," were the two greatest Serial successes Pathé ever had.

Willets Goes to West Coast

Gilson Willets, Manager of the Scenario Department of Pathe Exchange, Inc., left on Sunday for Los Angeles where he will remain during the filming of the early episodes of Ruth Roland's new serial, "The Adventures of Ruth," the first production of the Pathe star's new company, Ruth Roland Serials, Inc.

"The Adventures of Ruth" is based on a story written by Miss Roland herself, and Mr. Willets is writing the scenario. It is Miss Roland's theory that writer and star should be closely associated during the making of a picture, and Mr. Willet's trip to the Coast is made at her request.

"The scenario writer is nearly as important to the actual making of a picture as he is to the preparation of the continuity," said Miss Roland.

Notable Pathe Offerings Coming

Company's Trend Is to Constant Picture Improvement

PATHE'S plans for the coming season are declared by executives of the company to be of no new turn. Every effort is to be bent only to improve the high grade of pictures made in the past.

"I have been queried regarding what has been styled our new feature policy," says Mr. Paul Brunet, Vice-President and General Manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., "and I would reply that the plan in operation, and that to which we are holding, is not new. In fact, the feature policy requires no changing. It is impossible to make it more flexible than it has been for years.

"Exhibitors know that they can book any Pathe subject at any time without regard to any other Pathe subject or service. It is our aim to work with strict impartiality for the interests of both producer and exhibitor, and, when I say we are succeeding to the fullest measure, you will realize why Mr. Charles Pathe, on his recent visit, was so pleased over the bright condition of affairs. Pathe Exchange, Inc., has always recognized the perfect right of the exhibitor to make his own selection of entertainment for his patrons. Thus it is that we have open bookings, with absolutely no strings attached to it.

"'Oh, Boy' with Creighton Hale and June Caprice, the booking would indicate, will duplicate its large stage success, and, with it, Capellani makes a new record. 'The Thirteenth Chair,' also a big feature from the spoken drama and produced by Leonce Perret, is another special, which will be one of the season's greatest box office attractions and the plan is to issue one such each month. Dolores Cassinelli has completed the first of her pictures. 'The Virtuous Model,' from 'Le Ruisseau,' the Parisian stage success and the productions to follow, along with the Hale-Caprice plays are to be offered singly, each production standing on its individual merits. August 24th is the date of a conspicuous merit selection, 'The Love Cheat,' Capellani's most recent production, with Creighton Hale and June Caprice. Also there will be special features starring Mae Murray, Blanche Sweet and Marjorie Rambeau.

"We are building up a strong array of high class features which at this time include Frank Keenan, Virginia Pearson and Alma Rubens. They are offered one picture at a time on their individual merits, or in a series of eight, with one picture cancellation privilege.

"Frank Keenan's first two of his series are giving a splendid account of themselves—'The Master Man' and 'The Gates of Brass.' The third, 'The World Aflame,' has been called an epochal play. 'The World Aflame' I am assured by eminent authority, promises to be as timely to the universal social unrest as 'The Battle Cry of Peace' was to its day of military unpreparedness. And there are other stories to follow in this series, all of them big of theme, clean and done with the best art in acting and direction.

"Virginia Pearson's first production, 'The Bishop's Emeralds,' at once established this favorite on a new eminence of fine dramatic achievement. The second picture is nearing completion, and in 'Impossible Catherine' she swings to a character extreme that sweeps her into the air on an aeroplane flight and charging across a polo field in a gruelling, breakneck contest.

"Alma Rubens, starred to her present distinction by twenty odd Triangle pictures, has just completed 'Paradise Annie,' by Dr. Daniel Carson Goodman, the author of the much discussed novel of American life, 'Hagar Revelly.' The picture story is modern in theme, and, the author announces, has a big thought behind it, and is especially strong in its appeal to women. It is said, also, that in it, Mrs. Rubens finds the most opulent role of her entire career.

"Blanche Sweet," as already announced, will appear in her own productions and Jesse D. Hampton promises that the stories, their interpretation, investiture and setting will reach the mark of new and notable achievement. Miss Sweet has an enormous following, which has been increased by her splendid work in 'The Unpardonable Sin.' She possesses the gift of pathos and of tears; also of smiles and sunshine. And what more can be said of an artist who can graphically and tenderly express the greatest of all emotions—love?

"Marjorie Rambeau's remarkable series of stage successes has created an enormous following, from the Atlantic to the Pacific and her entry into pictures, under their direction of Albert Capellani, makes a conjunction of emotional art and skilled technical direction which assures a series of perfect productions.

Seven Pathe Serials on Impressive Eighteen Month List—

Brunet Declares Serial, Far from Losing Interest with Public, Is Now More Popular Than Ever Before

THE outline of Pathe's serial program, reaching up to 1921, indicates that this house is going to live up to its title, "The House of Serials." Paul Brunet, Vice President and General Manager, lists seven serials to be released during the next eighteen months.

"Every once in a while," says Mr. Brunet, "someone comes out and declares that the serial is dead. The same pessimist will tell you that the public is tired of serials and that exhibitors will not book them. These announcements are possibly made by distributors who have made a failure of serial distribution or by concerns who are interested in exploiting and selling other forms of screen entertainment.

"Pathe believes that the serial is today the most popular form of entertainment on the screen. Our serial business has advanced by leaps and bounds and we find a ready demand for the class of serial we have been bringing out. Instead of a decrease of interest in serials we find that the serial public is growing at an amazing rate. Every new Pathe Serial brings in hundreds of new serial customers—exhibitors who have hitherto refused to book serials.

"The first serial release will be the Western Photoplay's Serial, 'The Great Gamble,' featuring Ann Luther and Charles Hutchison. This is our next serial release and will be ready for the screens on August 3. Mr. Joseph Golden is responsible for the story, scenario and the direction of 'The Great Gamble' which we are advertising as 'The Greatest Stunt Serial Ever Produced.' It literally lives up to that description. At the recent Trade showing on the New York Roof the hundreds of exhibitors who came to see the earlier episodes of this serial burst into spontaneous applause after they had witnessed the picture. Charles Hutchison will unquestionably prove the sensation of this serial. His stunts are little short of marvelous.

"The release of 'The Black Secret' marks the passing of Pearl White from the serial field. This is positively Miss White's last serial as she has elected to enter the firmament of feature stars. In addition to marking the final effort of one of the most popular of serial stars 'The Black Secret' is momentous since it is the first serial to emanate from the pen of Robert W. Chambers. Mr. Chambers' heroines have been transferred to the Feature screen on numerous occasions but never before has a serial been secured from his popular pen. This one gives every indication of marking the high tide in serials.

"Ruth Roland who has achieved a tremendous following as a serial star through the many serials released by Pathe in which she has been featured is of course to continue on our program. She has just started work on a new serial which by the way will introduce her to the fans in the triple role of star, author and producer. It will be called 'The Adventures of Ruth' and will be produced by Ruth Roland Serials, Inc. William Parke will direct it.

"The Third Eye" is the splendid selling title which has been chosen by Mr. Louis J. Gasnier for the serial which his company, The Astra, is to make for Pathe. It is from the pen of H. H. Van Loan. Mr. Gasnier has been fortunate in securing Warner Oland, best known of all screen heavies, for one of his featured principals. Miss Eileen Percy will also be featured in 'The Third Eye.'

"Theodore Wharton, one of the famous Wharton Brothers, will also produce a serial for Pathe. His serials will be called 'The Crooked Dagger.' Frederick Chapin will write the scenario. Mr. Wharton himself will direct.

"Bound and Gagged" will be the title of the second serial G. B. Seitz, Inc., will produce for Pathe. Mr. Seitz who will also direct this serial announces it as a new idea in serials as it is to be a light comedy. The story is by Frank Leon Smith and is declared to be the most novel ever secured for the serial screen. Mr. Smith will also do the scenario.

"The Arthur P. Beck Serials, Inc., will produce for Pathe a serial, entitled "The Isle of Jewels." This story is by none other than C. T. Dazey, the famous author of 'In Old Kentucky.' Francis Mann and Stuart Holmes will be the featured principals and it will be directed by Perry Vekroff.

"This serial program is, I believe, the most comprehensive ever announced and is planned to give exhibitors a continuous showing of the best serials that money and brains can produce, up to the end of 1920. It is in direct line with our policy announced in this issue and our slogan, 'What the Exhibitor Desires.'"

Noted Writers and Directors Bear Pathe's Serial Banner

Announced Productions Are Works of Famed Authors; Competent Directors at the Helm

NAMES that stand high in the realm of producers and authors are responsible for the serial program of Pathe in 1919-1920.

George B. Seitz Productions, Inc., announces two serials for the program. The first of these will be "The Black Secret," by Robert W. Chambers, the last serial in which Pearl White will appear. Mr. Chambers needs no introduction. He is one of America's greatest novelists, and his work is known wherever fiction is read. Many of his stories have been done on the screen, but "The Black Secret" is the first from his pen to be done in serial form.

George Brackett Seitz, producer of "The Black Secret," although under 30 years of age, is one of the most successful serial makers in the industry.

Frank Leon Smith, a newcomer in serials, is the author of "Bound and Gagged," the second Seitz production or the forthcoming Pathe serial program. For the last two years Mr. Smith has been scenario editor for Louis J. Gasnier.

H. H. Van Loan is the author of "The Third Eye," the Gasnier production for the Pathe serial program. It has as its featured players Warner Oland, and Eileen Percy. Mr. Van Loan has the distinction of having conducted the first motion picture column that ever appeared in a New York newspaper. He was the editor of "Flashes from the Screen" that ran in the New York Globe and 200 other newspapers.

Louis J. Gasnier, who will produce "The Third Eye," is known to the industry as President and General Manager of the Astra Film Corporation.

Ruth Roland herself wrote the story on which her new serial is based. It is called "The Adventures of Ruth" and will be produced by the newly formed producing company, Ruth Roland Serials, Inc. Miss Roland is known far and wide as the star of such successful Pathe serials as "The Price of Folly," "The Neglected Wife," "The Red Circle," "Who Pays?" "Hands Up!" and "The Tiger's Trail."

The scenario for "The Adventures of Ruth" is by Gilson Willets, Manager of the Pathe Scenario Department and one of the best known writers of fiction and travel in the United States.

Theodore Wharton also will produce and direct a serial for the Pathe program, entitled "The Crooked Dagger," by a well known author and playwright. Mr. Wharton, is associated with his brother, Leopold Wharton, under the firm name of The Whartons and has long been associated with serial making. He has had a long stage and screen career and built the first indoor studio for Pathe in 1911.

Arthur F. Beck Serials, Inc., will produce for Pathe a serial entitled "The Isle of Jewels," by Charles Turner Dazey, famed as the author of the stage success, "In Old Kentucky." Mr. Dazey has been for years a contributor to many magazines.

The featured players in "The Isle Of Jewels" will be Frances Mann and Stuart Holmes.

Joseph A. Golden, President of Western Photoplays, Inc., wrote and directed "The Great Gamble" co-starring Anne Luther and Charles Hutchison. Mr. Golden has been in the picture business for the past twelve years, his first engagement being with the Biograph Company of America, for which he both wrote and produced. In the old days he made "Monte Cristo" in one reel, and later produced it in seven reels as the first picture made by Famous Players. He directed the first theatrical stars to enter pictures, among them being Nat Goodwin, Blanche Walsh and James O'Neill, and also did pictures with Helen Ware, Julia Dean, John Mason and Holbrook Blinn. "Wolves of Kultur," a recent successful serial on the Pathe program, was also written and directed by Mr. Golden.

Hutchinson Returns from St. Louis

Charles Hutchinson, famous "stunt" star of the Western Photoplays serial, "The Great Gamble," has returned from St. Louis where he represented the Pathe serial stars at the national convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, Inc. He was accompanied by A. Alperstein, General Manager of Western Photoplays, Inc.

While in St. Louis, Mr. Hutchison met a large number of exhibitors with whom he discussed the serial situation as it appears in various sections of the country. He found that serials are now in even greater demand than in what have been called their "palmiest days,"—the days when they were new to the fans.

"Recent statements from certain quarters that serials are losing in popularity are very evidently without foundation, according to the best information I could obtain from exhibitors," said Mr. Hutchison. "I made it a point to talk with as many as possible during my stay at the convention, and they assured me that their serial days were the best days of the week. Everything points to a smashing big year for motion picture serials, as the demand is decidedly on the upward trend."

On the way back to New York Mr. Hutchison and Mr. Alperstein stopped off in Chicago where the star is having a specially constructed motorcycle built for his use in a new serial. "The Great Gamble," in which he is co-starred with Anne Luther, will be released by Pathe on August 3rd.

Goes Over Cliff in Pathe Serial

"The False Idol," episode No. 13, of the Pathe serial, "The Tiger's Trail," starring Ruth Roland, opens as Belle Boyd (Miss Roland) is reaching for the tiger idol on the mantel of Bull Shotwell's cabin. The idol is so fixed as to spring a trap that will cause a revolver to shoot the person moving it, and when Belle takes up the image, the revolver is discharged, shooting Hilda, the spy, in the arm.

Belle takes the girl to the Gordon ranch to nurse her, and Jack Randall (George Larkin) brings to the ranch "Texas," a cowboy who has been injured in chasing the outlaws, a bridge having been blown up by Shotwell while the Posse was crossing. That night Shotwell steals Hilda from the ranch.

Belle decides to hide the tiger idol in the room occupied by "Texas," and is overheard by Randolph Gordon who ties "Texas" in a closet and takes his place in bed. Belle changes her mind and hides the idol in the room of her chum, Pauline Holliday, from where it is stolen by Gordon. Gordon is overtaken in the dark hallway by Belle, who thinks he is "Texas." He drops the idol and escapes.

Next day Belle and Jack, following instructions contained in a note found in the coat Gordon left in his flight, take the idol to Salonga in the Sea Caves to exchange it for the Pact of Three. Salonga finds the idol is a duplicate of the sacred image, and plans to punish the two, but they escape, Belle running into a gully that is filled with poison vapor from volcanic crevices in the rocks.

She is about to be pulled out by Jack when the two are precipitated back into the vapor by the breaking of the ledge of rock on which they are hanging.

"Impossible Catherine" Is Near Completion

Despite the heavy rains of the past ten days, work on the second Virginia Pearson production, "Impossible Catherine" is rapidly nearing completion. The company is still at Lake George, where the final scenes are being taken under the direction of John B. O'Brien, director general of the Virginia Pearson Photoplays, Inc.

The unusual beauty of the surrounding country serves as a picturesque background for the story, which concerns itself principally with the unconventional pranks of Catherine Kimberly, the heroine. In portraying her, Virginia Pearson gives to the screen a type entirely new from the characterizations she has given in the past.

William B. Davidson, playing opposite her, is cast in a role that is very much to his liking. As John Henry Jackson, nicknamed "Stonewall," he sets upon himself the arduous business of taming the impetuous Catherine—and wins out after he kidnaps her from aboard a train, hustles her into his aeroplane and flies away to his camp in the woods, which he has temporarily turned into a training camp for his unruly wife.

Elmer Pearson, newly appointed feature sales manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Lubin on Country Tour for S-L Pictures

Bert Lubin, traveling representative of S-L Pictures, is making a coast tour in the interests of "Virtuous Men," the initial production made under the banner of Sawyer and Lubin. Lubin carries a special appointment from the S-L organization to visit the leading state right buyers and exhibitors from New York to California, with the two fold purpose of selling "Virtuous Men" and inaugurating the new exploitation campaign prepared for showmen of all classes in the presentation of the picture. The S-L representative thus far has visited Buffalo, Albany, Boston, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Detroit, Indianapolis, St. Louis, Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Des Moines, Omaha, Denver, and Los Angeles. On his return swing he will take in Oregon, Washington, Montana, the Dakotas, and thence into Canada.

Thus far Lubin has disposed of "Virtuous Men" for the states of California, Arizona, Nevada, Kansas and Missouri. In each instance, the S-L representative has spent several days with the leading exhibitors in these various territories, outlining the entire list of accessories and publicity aids available and preparing a newspaper campaign best suited to the locality and conditions.

Shore May Be Stage of Few Minter Pictures

Atlantic City will be the scene of production of several of Mary Miles Minter's pictures, according to a statement made last week at the shore by the young Realart star. Miss Minter, contrary to what the public expects of a player, was extremely retiring, and reticent in speaking of her contract with Realart.

"I can't tell you much about it at the present," said Miss Minter, "but my able manager (Miss Minter's mother, Mrs. Charlotte Shelby, is also her manager) secured a most delightful contract, a contract for twenty pictures for which I am to receive $1,320,000 and—yes I have attached my signature and will start work on the new pictures in a very short time.

"According to present plans the pictures will be filmed in the east. Several of them will be taken right here in Atlantic City. That is all I can tell you right now."

Pathe Shorts Offer Wide Variety

PATHE Exchange Inc. draws attention to the strength and variety of its short feature subjects, which make them desirable in ordering well balanced programs. It indicates the impressive fact that thirty-five Governors of States have given emphatic endorsement of the greatest of short features, the Pathe News, which is now being shown in all civilized countries of the world. The consensus is that it not only furnishes an education in citizenship but it is steadily working to bring a better understanding between the far-scattered nations of men; that the individual becomes more and more an intelligent factor of the race as he understands what is transpiring immediately about him and in the rest of the field of human activities.

Mr. Charles Pathe, during his recent visit to this country, gave much of his time to the idea of broadening, more than ever, the functions of the pictorial news service, with a view of presenting unusual and informative material. The best illustration of this intent was furnished in a recent issue of the Pathe News, which has elicited praise and enthusiastic comment from the ordinary layman, from educationists, travellers, and aviation experts. It shows exclusive pictures of Lieutenant Beck's amazing aerial adventure into the Yosemite Valley, accompanied by a Pathe camera man. It was the first time that such a flight had been made; and, the performance, it was admitted, was attended by a hundred per cent. peril, for in case of mishap there was no safe landing place among the great masses of jagged rock below.

The start was made from the Mather Flying Field, near Sacramento, and the hazardous journey across the great twelve mile wide gorge gave beautiful revelations in lighting and unusual views of majestic rock, falling waters and wooded slopes. The plane not only flew above the gorge, but descended into it, giving intimate show of the topography, coming so close to a water fall that the mist of the spray clouded the view. The celebrated natural statues, "the silent sentinels of the eternal," as seen from the air, took on a new and fascinating impressiveness. These exclusive aerial pictures are one of the big outstanding features of the Pathe News; and the record so far, includes many surprises, from looping the loop over the skyscrapers of New York City to diving into the crater of an active volcano.

The Pathe Review is a short feature for which Mr. Pathe foresees equally as bright a future of achievement as has attended the News. It has an auspicious start in its booking at the big houses, and it is steadily widening its field. It is designed to be a magazine of travel, of natural history, intimate views of industry, and all forms of beauty of an educational value, embodying the popular Novagraph analysis of motion pictures which have proved of high value both as an amusement proposition and as a new revelation to investigating science.

No. 23, issued on July 20, is a fair example of the general plan. It consists of Feathered Celebrities—Nature's Animated Fan, the Indian peacock shown unfurling its beautiful plumage; showing the contrast between male and female and the golden pheasant of China.

Current Features Show Versatile Program Making

Art in Silks—the making of Pictures of Silk by the Japanese artisan and the rainbow fabric shown in Pathecolor.

Making a speaking disc; an interesting exposition of the process of manufacturing the modern phonograph record.

The South African Bushman—the nearest approach to the Missing Link shown capering in his native jungles and his movements analyzed with the aid of the Novagraph.

Yosemite Park—the scenic beauties of this "sculptural garden spot" of the world shown in Pathecolor.

The Harold Lloyd comedies, produced by the Rolin Film, have demonstrated their claim to being the most popular of short reel stories. They have been hailed as the development of the new and logical idea in farce, being more of pure satire than of rough slap-stick; burlesqueing familiar, accepted things, and titled by a genuine humorist. They were booked for a year solid at the Rialto Theatre, New York, and the principal houses all over the country confirm their value. "Just Neighbors," pre-released at that theatre for the week beginning June 29th, is as clever a skit on suburban life as ever was fashioned by the pioneer in this class of fiction-fact, the late H. C. Bunner, of Puck, or the more modern Ellis Parker Butler. It is a page taken from real life at Phoney Manor with inimitable exaggeration by Lloyd, Bebe Daniels and Snub Pollard. Not forgetting an honest-to-goodness baby. These Lloyds are going merrily on their way with increasing favor, but Pathe is soon to make an important pronouncement as to a new plan of development.

Another short feature that demonstrated popularity from the beginning is Topics of the Day, produced by Timely Films, Inc. and compiled from the press of the world by the Literary Digest. The paragraphs are witty, philosophical and satirical; "a clean meterage of mirth" is the fashion in which one exhibitor has characterized them.

Baby Marie Osborne who had a series of ovations in various cities on her return to the Pacific Coast not long ago, is to be seen soon in two reel comedies. The stories are being most carefully selected and arranged for the camera, with a company of players all well known to the screen, including Little Sambo, the "comedy chocolate drop," who, having once deserted to share honors with "Fatty" Arbuckle, is back again in his home camp rich, as usual in laughing possibilities. An announcement soon will be made regarding the releases of the Baby Marie productions.

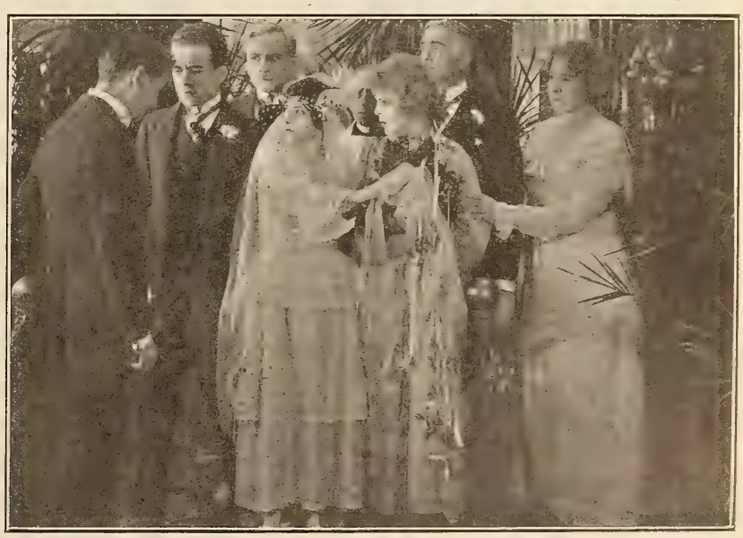
Kinograms Has Scenes of Austrian Revolt

Kinograms in its latest issue contains an exclusive feature that should be of great interest to the public and likewise a feature of value to the exhibitors. It contains the first and what are claimed to be the only pictures of the Hungarian Revolution in Budapest. These are said to be absolutely the first pictures of any of the great social disturbances in Europe following the war.

The scenes show literally hundreds of thousands of excited people, the speakers, the machine guns, the banners, troops and all the important revolutionary headquarters of Budapest, including the Astorial Hotel, headquarters of the Peoples Council, Father John Hock, the silver-tongued priest who is credited with perhaps the most active part in fomenting the revolution and Count Karolyi, a revolutionary leader.

Turpin Signed Again

Ben Turpin, the comedian with the eccentric eyes, has signed a contract for another two years with Mack Sennett and will continue to appear in Paramount-Mack Sennett comedies.



Impressive scene from "The Solitary Sin," distributed by Bernie Fineman

A quintet of luminaries that shine in the Pathe sky, and who are accepted by the public as among the foremost players in their various lines. Starting at the top row left to right we have Frank Keenan, virile "heavy"; versatile Virginia Pearson; and Harold Lloyd, of comedy fame. In the center, winsome June Caprice and Marjorie Rambeau, welcome on stage and screen. Below, Blanche Sweet, newly added to the list of Pathe stars; Creighton Hale, he of many serials; and appealing Dolores Cassinelli

First Fannie Hurst Story Filmed

"A Petal on the Current" with Mary MacLaren, by Universal

OF all the contemporary literature recently translated into screen adaptability, the Fannie Hurst story "A Petal on the Current" with Mary MacLaren in the title role, is considered by Universal one of the worthiest cinemas yet produced. Its chief recommendation is said to exist in the natural charm of the narrative, the clever and effective execution, and in its wonderful appeal to the multitudes. This is the first Fannie Hurst story screened and the Universal company who produced it, are confident that the entire country will have praise to offer for this great story-picture.

"The genius of the modern short story" is the tributary title given Fannie Hurst, the author of the story, by Kathleen Norris, also a famous author, in a recent article in the Cosmopolitan magazine. To quote Kathleen Norris, "Whenever I think of Fannie Hurst I think of the word 'genius.' Like everybody else I have my own private definition of genius. A merely talented person is one who adapts his products to the market; he gives the public what the public wants, and is rewarded in a greater or less degree. But the genius can give only one thing, and that is so much a part of himself that he cannot give more and will not give less."

The original story of "The Petal on the Current" was laid in New York, but in the photoplay production the scenes were taken in San Francisco. This does not in any way change the story, for had the scenes been taken in Petrograd or Sydney the theme would have remained the same. The scenario was written by Waldemar Young and the entire production was directed by one of Universal's most capable directors, Tod Browning.

Mary MacLaren, the star who plays the part of Stella Schump, has within the last year made herself among the most popular of stars.

The scenes of the drama are laid in San Francisco in a department store, a night police court, the San Francisco jail, the waterfront and Union Square. The story deals with the near-ruin of a girl through circumstantial evidence. Unsophisticated and innocent she attends a party given by a girl friend. Liquor is new to her and the effects soon tell upon her. She is later arrested, senetenced to jail for ten days and upon being released finds that her mother had died of a broken heart. Life then offers little to the innocent girl but the man who later brings her great happiness, enters upon the scene in time to keep her from stilling her soul forever.

A capable cast supports Miss MacLaren in "The Petal on the Current." Robert Anderson, who played the part of Monsieur Cuckoo in D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World," is cast in the leading male role, Fritzie Ridgeway, David Butler who played the part of Holt in "The Unpainted Woman," Gertrude Claire, Beatrice Burnham, and Victor Potel are the other important members of the cast.

Neilan Has Innovation in "Still" Director

Upon the staff of the new Marshall Neilan organiaztion will be a "still director." The sole duty of this personage will be the supervision of the taking of still pictures with a view to getting results which will make the stills more valuable for exploitation purposes.

"I believe," says Marshall Neilan, "that the taking of still pictures has been neglected in that we have never gone to the trouble to study the needs of the exhibitor in this respect. It is the usual custom of the director to say at random and upon any occasion which seems to afford the time "take a still." As a matter of fact the continuity of a production should be carefully studied before hand and the points at which stills are to be taken by a director marked. The work in my opinion, should be handled by the publicity and advertising departments. There are scenes in every picture which if made into effective stills will do much to attract the necessary wherewitthal over the box-office window. These same stills made into twenty-four sheets and used as advertising copy become invaluable."

An extra thrill was added to those in the William Fox production, "The Winning Stroke," featuring George Walsh, when Edward Dillon, the director, assisted by Hamilton Thompson, scenario editor, and utilizing ten cameramen, took over five thousand feet of film showing the great Yale-Harvard varsity race on June 20 on the Thames River.

This filming of this aquatic classic was made necessary by the requirements of the college story, in which George Walsh is starred as stroke oar of Yale.

Journeys to Far Lands

Charles Hugo, who has been added to the staff of C. L. Chester Productions cameramen, is being routed on a far eastern trip for the organization, to take pictures of people and places and film a number of new and important scenics, which, it is promised, will be of great beauty. Hugo is well acquainted with the lands he is to visit, and according to the schedule he will be away for well over a year.

Many Exhibitors Praise "Perils of Thunder Mountain"

TELEGRAMS and letters are reported pouring into Vitagraph offices regarding "Perils of Thunder Mountain," Vitagraph's snow-laden serial. Not only are the exhibitors agreed that the new Antonio Morano chapter play is one of the most interesting and thrilling ever offered, attracting unusual patronage to theatres which had never before presented this particular form of entertainment, but the consensus is that its presentation during the heated term is particularly opportune.

J. G. Eyerly, of the Lyric theatre, Newton, Iowa, writing to congratulate Vitagraph on "Perils of Thunder Mountain," lays particular stress on the picture's timeliness and voices the sentiments of hundreds of other exhibitors. He says:

"With four episodes finished and the crowds carefully tabulated at each episode we have no fears of what our business will be with the worst of hot weather still to come. 'Perils of Thunder Mountain' is the first serial we have run in this house in over two years and we have people coming through the rain to see it who have never attended a serial before in their lives. The story is well told, well acted, and so full of snow that, in my estimation, it is the exhibitors' one best bet for hot weather, particularly in the smaller towns where cooling facilities are not to be had in the average store show. Any exhibitor who can't put this picture over and hold the first night crowd has no business in running a show."

A few telegrams, taken at haphazard from various sections of the country, shows the interest displayed in the latest Vitagraph serial. Wadlow Brothers, of the Virginia theatre, Detroit, said: "We consider your serial, 'Perils of Thunder Mountain,' absolutely the best hot weather money getter ever produced. Opened doors on one of the hottest nights Detroit has had in years and turned hundreds away. The winter settings are wonderful and really seem to cool the house by many degrees."

"Just tell me that they are Vitagraph serials—that is all I want to know in booking a serial," telegraphed the International Amusement Company of El Paso, Texas. "'Perils of Thunder Mountain' has made summer the best business season in our Alcazar theatre. We are wiring Dallas to book coming Vitagraph serials for seven days at our house."

From the north instead of the south came word from Toronto. The management of the Globe theatre said: "Have played the first four episodes of 'Perils of Thunder Mountain' to record business notwithstanding the tremendous heat wave now sweeping this part of the country. Snow stuff looks good for summer."

Barriscale Gowns to Delight

Star in "The Woman Michael Married" Heavily Augments Wardrobe for Film

"THE WOMAN MICHAEL MARRIED," an interest sustaining screen offering, which Bessie Barriscale has just completed for Robertson-Cole, to be distributed by Exhibitors Mutual, is a story of the ultra-fashionable set of Long Island and in accordance with the locale will it is said be a veritable fashion show. The story, by DuVernet Rabell, which appeared in a recent issue of a leading magazine, is claimed as exceptional for its dramatic element, but in addition it provides for one of the most lavish productions ever attempted by the B. B. Features, producers of Bessie Barriscale's pictures.

Miss Barriscale's wardrobe was largely increased through this production, but the heavy expenditure for gowns is expected to be more than compensated by the furore they will create among the female enthusiasts of the silent art who see "The Woman Michael Married."

Not alone does Miss Barriscale dress handsomely, but Marsix Manon and Bonnie Hill who have important parts in the production wear some stunning costumes which will have a strong appeal for women. Their better halves will appreciate much more the bathing costumes worn by the many attractive beach decorators.

First Ince Production in East Finished

"L'Apache," the first Thomas H. Ince production to be made in the Eastern studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has just been completed. Dorothy Dalton plays a dual part in this drama of the Parisian underworld and it is predicted that she will earn many compliments for her interpretation of the difficult roles. Joseph De Grasse, of the Ince directorial staff, was in charge of the production.

Some of the scenes are said to be most elaborate, the setting for one in particular, the interior of the Poulet door, in which Miss Dalton does the dance of the Apache, having taken up half of the New York studio, requiring the use of one hundred and fifty extras to fill in the scene.

Brochure Out On Stage Women's Relief Films

Further selling plans of the Universal for the series of Stage Women's War Relief Pictures have brought out a forty-four page coated stock brochure in which the different plays are enumerated with their entire casts. The brochure or booklet is beautiful in design, the front page cover being tipped with a small sheet bearing the wording "Stage Women's War Relief Series." Inside the cover page is a spider-web tissue followed by an editorial foreword on the series.

The possibilities of the great series of pictures are outlined and the names of the most prominent stars in the series are given. Following this is a list of the playwrights and authors who assisted in making the series a success by contributing stories for production.

On the following full double pages are pictures of the stars, and on the right half of the full page the one-column cut which is available for newspaper use, is reproduced. There is one cut illustration for each of the twelve pictures, the cut bearing the heads of the star or stars in each picture.

First of Miller Series Is Booking Well

"A Dangerous Affair," the first of the series of four special productions, produced by Charles Miller for release by Frank G. Hall, vice president of the Charles Miller Productions, Inc., is now booking through the Film Clearing House exchanges to substantial business, it is reported by the branch managers.

The first of Mr. Miller's series presents a cast headed by Herbert Rawlinson, Florence Billings and Stuart Holmes and is said to offer a story with the three big dramatic elements—adventure, romance and mystery.

Beetle Handling Publicity for Creation

Frank C. Beetle has been appointed director of advertising and publicity of the Creation Films Inc., Cliffside, N. J.

Mr. Beetle has in the last few years written material for some of the big stage and screen stars, and will handle the Creation work from his offices at 116 West 39th Street, New York.

Vitagraph Poster Campaign

Far-Reaching Exploitation Is Begun for Stars with Appropriate 24-Sheets

WHAT is perhaps one of the most extensive and far-reaching advertising campaigns undertaken in the interest of motion pictures by any individual producer has just been launched by Vitagraph.

Vitagraph announced yesterday that the intensive summer publicity campaign for the six Vitagraph feature stars will include the posting of thousands of 24-sheet stands all over the United States—from coast to coast, and from the gulf to the Great Lakes and Canadian border.

Under contracts already made, the campaign will run into six figures, and negotiations are well under way for hundreds of additional locations.

The new stand, which was designed by Wilbur Crane, whose particular metier is portrait posters, is considered by Vitagraph one of the cleverest combinations ever attempted in lithography.

The portraits are real, not idealized. They are true to color, requiring a multi-printing.

While the poster is rare in color scheme, and offers opportunities for startling catch-lines, Vitagraph has kept the reading matter down to a minimum. There is the simple announcement that Albert E. Smith presents famous stars in Vitagraph features, and the names of the stars under their portraits, which are arranged from left to right in the following order: Harry T. Morey, Gladys Leslie, Earle Williams, Alice Joyce, Bessie Love and Corinne Griffith.

The portraits are separated by flaming torches which form a symmetrical and decorative frame, and each in its vivid color adding materially to the lighting of the faces.

The actual work of posting the stands has already begun, with Brooklyn, the home of Vitagraph's Eastern studio, the first city covered.

A "Better Times" Campaign

Robertson-Cole's Picture Adopted as Slogan; Merchants Aid Exploitation

One of the most extensive exploitation campaigns arranged on any Robertson-Cole feature has been mapped out for "Better Times," Brentwood's successor to "The Turn in the Road," which will be distributed by Exhibitors' Mutual.

Every Exhibitors' Mutual Branch Manager throughout the country, has inaugurated his campaign on "Better Times." They are finding merchants and business men of all descriptions eager to cooperate with them in driving home the slogan "Better Times." They have arranged with confectioners in every territory to introduce a "Better Times" line of candy and "Better Times" sodas and sundaes.

The Convention Hall in St. Louis, where hundreds of the foremost exhibitors of the United States gathered for their annual meeting last week, was plastered with placards bearing no other wording than "Better Times." The title holds forth so much in promise that there are any number of appropriate schemes which Exhibitors' Mutual are urging.

R. S. Ballyntine, managing director of the Muse theatre, Omaha, who recently booked the Robertson-Cole attraction on screening, urges exhibitors to conduct a "Better Times" week. He has found the merchants of Omaha ready to join him in a big advertising campaign before and during the run of the picture simply on the strength of the fact that the times require an optimistic viewpoint from everybody.

Sessue Hayakawa, who is appearing in Robertson-Cole features, has left the world behind him, temporarily, and with his wife, embarked on a vacation outing.

"Smiling" Bill Parsons, Goldwyn star, is off for a vacation upon completing the comedy he is at present working on.

Blackton's Company Is Back from Mountains

J. STUART BLACKTON and his cast and staff returned to New York last week after a ten day sojourn in the Cumberland Mountain region where exteriors for "Moonshine and Shadow," his newest production, were filmed. This feature which will be the first release of his new organization, The J. Stuart Blackton Feature Pictures, Inc., is now being completed for Fall release under distribution plans to be announced later.

On location with the producer were Jack Martin and his studio staff who preceded the company and superintended the erection in the mountains of a typical Cumberland region cabin which was used for both interiors and exteriors; Stanley Olmsted, scenario writer who collaborated with Commodore Blackton on both the story and the scenario of "Moonshine and Shadow," and Sylvia Breamer, Margaret Barry, Robert Milasch, Slim Rube, Jay Strong, and J. Stuart Blackton Jr.

Rumored Death of Martin Johnson Denied

Denial was made at the Robertson-Cole offices to a report which went the rounds the past week to the effect that Martin Johnson had been slain in the South Seas. The statement, in part, follows:

"Undoubtedly from time to time some energetic persons will start such unfounded reports. There is nothing to this rumor, nor is there likely to be anything to similar reports. The only authentic information about the Johnsons will come from this office, and only the most reliable facts will be issued by us regarding the Johnsons' adventure. If any untoward happening befalls the Johnsons we will announce it immediately upon receipt of information.

No Serials for Year

Through a typographical error in last week's issue of Motion Picture News, it was stated that Pearl White, in signing with Fox Film Corporation, would not make serials until six months from now. Pathe announces this week that in consideration of Miss White's release from her Pathe contract, the star will not make any serials for one year following the termination of her contract.

Bert Lytell Preparing for "Lombardi" Role

Bert Lytell, having completed "Easy to Make Money," his last Metro program picture, and having fished at Catalina Island to his heart's content by way of a vacation, is prepared to start work on "Lombardi, Ltd.," a screen version of Frederic and Fanny Hatton's Broadway comedy success.

"Lombardi, Ltd.," to be made by Screen Classics and distributed by Metro Pictures Corporation under its new policy of "fewer and better" pictures, is to bring Bert Lytell into the important field of special productions. This will mean that more distinguished casts and a greater lavishment of production accessories are to be employed as settings for the player's talents.

The cast which is to surround Lytell in this production is being selected with care by Maxwell Karger, director general of all Screen Classics pictures. Its personnel will be announced as soon as it is completed.

Stage "Brute Breaker" Near Mt. Shasta

"The Brute Breaker," the six-reel drama by Johnston McCulley, recently purchased by Universal, is being staged in the shadow of California's famous Mt. Shasta by Lynn Reynolds directing a carefully selected cast of filmland's notables.

Reynolds took his company to Siskiyou County on the Oregon border line last week for the exteriors of the production.

Frank Mayo and Kathryn Adams, who played leading roles in "The Little Brother of the Rich," which Reynolds recently completed at Universal City, are featured players in "The Brute Breaker."

The story deals with the French-Canadian logging camps, and how the young man who inherits the property visits each one and rids it of bullies who are making life miserable for their fellow-workers.

Buy Renting Rights to Illustrate Slides

The Boston Motion Picture Supply Company of Boston, Mass., has secured the exclusive renting rights on the New Idea Illustrated Song Slides produced by the Standard Slide Corporation in New York. They will be the exclusive distributors of this Song Slide Service in the New England states. A complete line of New Idea Illustrated Song Slides is to be carried in stock and regular weekly service will be supplied to motion picture theatres.

Bebe Daniels Under the Direction of DeMille

Bebe Daniels, ingenue and comedienne, is the latest addition to the galaxy of talented actresses now under the direction of Cecil B. DeMille at the Famous Players-Lasky studio. Upon the expiration of her present contract, which still has a few weeks to run, Miss Daniels will appear in the next DeMille picture, adapted from Sir J. M. Barrie's play, "The Admirable Crichton."

The scene on the left shows a group of Metro players in "The Man Who Stayed at Home," while the one on the right shows a tense moment in the same feature

Marjorie Daw Joins Neilan

Former Feminine Lead of Fairbanks Is to Have Big Opportunities and to Star

MARJORIE DAW, who has been leading lady for Douglas Fairbanks for the past two years has been signed by Marshall Neilan to appear in the productions to be made by him for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. Miss Daw first attracted attention in the productions of Cecil De Mille and following this played a leading part in several Mary Pickford pictures. She was then selected to play opposite Fairbanks.

It was during this engagement she rose almost to the heights of stardom playing in "Mr. Fix-It," "He Comes Up Smiling" "The Knickerbocker Buckaroo" and in fact in practically every Fairbanks picture produced during the two years just ended. Miss Daw's Fairbanks' contract expires at the conclusion of her present picture with the athletic star. She will after a short rest start immediately with Marshall Neilan. Her first part under her new contract will afford her perhaps the biggest opportunities of her career. It will be the leading role in Mr. Neilan's first independent production "The Eternal Three." It is expected that following this picture Miss Daw will be launched as a star.

Owing to her long connection with the Fairbanks organization much surprise has been indicated because of this latest move on the part of Miss Daw. Regarding this she said "I don't believe I will ever enjoy another engagement as I did that with the Fairbanks company, but of course, I am not in the moving pictures solely for enjoyment. I believe Mr. Neilan to be absolutely the best director for anyone who is ambitious to advance to that point where they may be designated as a star. I have read the first story to be produced and the part assigned to me is one worthy of an actress of far more experience than I have had. Yet I firmly believe, under Mr. Neilan's direction I can do it justice."

Film Short Subjects Intact

Nat Spitzer of Bulls-Eye Declares He Has Method to Preserve All Humor Bits

AGAIN anticipating the ever-forward trend in motion picture production, which is especially true in the field of humor films, Nat H. Spitzer, studio manager of the West Coast studios of the Bulls-Eye Film Company announces a newly-conceived method of filming short, humorous stories without losing a particle of the valuable texture in the author's original version. This will be made possible, declares Spitzer, by screening, in subtitle form, the full text of the manuscript, inserting the characters by appropriate timing, and, by skillful adjustment and cutting, the action to the printed tale. Naturally, the narratives will be short, with an abundance of situations heretofore only sketchily developed, including the "spoken lines," portrayed to the utmost possibilities.

"One of the many stumbling blocks that impede the production of genuine masterpiece films are the producers themselves, who have been an interesting story, well written. Thus far the film industry has been placing the cart before the horse," accuses Spitzer. "The public wants an interesting story well written. Thus far the film industry has a valuable adjunct to the American educational system and the Bulls-Eye Film Company intends that the public shall not suffer through the lack of ingenuity on the part of the producer. Of course, there must be plenty of action or there would be no moving pictures; but under the new plan of our company the patrons of our exhibitors will get the tersely-told story in printed form and also the action incidental thereto."

Promotion in United

J. A. Berst, of United Picture Theatres, announces the appointment of C. C. Johnson as business manager of the corporation with headquarters in New York. Mr. Johnson has heretofore been manager of the New York branch of United.

"The Volcano" Claimed to Be Sterling Feature

An American drama of the moment by the foremost American dramatist and for every red-blooded American extant, "The Volcano" Augustus Thomas' new Four Star production, starring Leah Baird and directed by George Irving, according to Hodkinson officials, promises to create a sensation among American audiences scarcely less thrilling than when the nation rocked under bomb explosions by internal foes, with whom "The Volcano" deals. The new W. W. Hodkinson release is claimed to contain every element of popular appeal. Its human touches, stirring suspense and smashing climaxes are said to be the peak achievements of a master writer in describing conditions as they are in America.

Faralla Comptroller of Realart Pictures

Effective July 1st Dario L. Faralla became comptroller of Realart Pictures Corporation. Mr. Faralla is a young man who has made his mark in accounting work.

He went with Pathe seven years ago as traveling auditor for two years after which he was placed in charge of the Auditing Department of the Unity Sales Corporation. Mr. Faralla then became associated with L. J. Selznick Enterprises as auditor. When Select took over the Selznick Enterprises Mr. Faralla was made deputy comptroller and later became comptroller of Selznick Pictures.

Professional Section

ERL SCHENCK has finished his latest part, which was that of leading man for Marion Davies in the International Film Corporation production "April Folly."

Elsie Ferguson maintains in "My Two Years in the Movies" which appears in the July "Vanity Fair" that she is quite unlike all the other motion picture stars in at least one respect. She says that as a child it was never her ambition to be a movie actress, and that she had no dreams of film stardom long before the movies were even invented. In fact, she didn't consider them seriously until two years ago.

Mrs. De Wolfe Hopper will be seen in the Famous Players forthcoming production of "Sadie Love." John Stuart Robertson is directing the picture at the Famous Players Studio in Fort Lee.

Charles Miller will have an enviable post at the Jess Willard fight in Toledo, for he and his camera man are leaving to-day to be present at the big event, and to record every little movement of the world's champion prize fighters on thousands of feet of motion picture film. When Mr. Miller returns, he will start work at once on the picture in which Stuart Holmes and Ellen Cassidy are to be featured.

Ivan Abramson is about to begin work on a Graphic Film production, the cast of which will include Gail Kane, Edmund Breese, Jackie Saunders, Jerry Austin and Hugh Thompson. The working title of the picture is "Someone Must Pay."

Marguerite Courtot will co-star with David Powell in the forthcoming Famous Players production instead of Anna Lehr, as it first announced. Chet Whitney will direct the picture.

Marion Davies is one of the most elusive people we know. We've tried to catch up with her for the last six weeks, and she's always either finishing a picture or starting one or in the midst of one, and any one of those predicaments seems a sufficient pretext for her invisibility. Never mind, we'll get her yet.

E. K. Lincoln is still up in the Berkshires, enjoying himself. We'll bet he finds it somewhat chilly on such days as Sunday.

Alice Brady had a $14.00 suit sent home the other day because it was just what she needed for her new picture "Sinners" which she has just begun. Her very fastidious French maid opened the box and at once reported to the cook that she was sure Miss Brady had bought her a present—a new suit. But when Miss Brady came home she immediately dispelled all such hopes, affirming that the suit was a new one intended for herself, and she enjoyed her maid's distress concerning her mistress' appearance for some time before she set her mind at rest by explaining the situation.

Montagu Love is back at work at the World Studio on his forthcoming production "A Broadway Saint," following a week's illness. He expects to finish the picture within the next few days.

Kenneth Webb, directing Alice Brady in "Sinners," a picturization of the stage play of that name by Owen Davis, has decided that Nantucket is just the place to furnish the proper exteriors for the story. So the company will spend a good part of July away from the dust and heat. We think Mr. Webb has very good judgment.

Dorothy Green is planning to drive her own motor to Asbury Park for the fourth of July week end, and she is looking forward to golfing and dancing and swimming and all sorts of pleasant things. She is just completing a picture for World with Arthur Ashley, in which, contrary to all her past experience, she plays a sweet little ingenue.

Betty Blythe, who recently completed her contract with Vitagraph, has not been permitted a vacation from the screen. She appears in principal parts of three July releases: Vitagraph's, "The Man Who Won"; World's, "Dust of Desire," and the Select picture, "The Undercurrent" with Guy Empey. She is said to have several contracts under consideration for her services in the future.

Director Charles Brabin has enlisted the services of the Irish leader, Eamonn de Valera, for making up some of the scenes for Theda Bara's present production, "Kathleen Mavourneen." Mr. Brabin thought there could be no one in New York better qualified to give accurate advice pertaining to Irish atmosphere, and was greatly pleased when Mr. de Valera consented to visit the studio and superintend the construction of a number of the sets.

Norma Talmadge recently received a postcard from Robert G. Adams, a private in the A. E. F., which she expects to cherish all the rest of her life. Not that Norma is so keen about postcards, but this one shows a photograph of an Amiens theatre, playing Panthea, which was charred and wrecked, the town having been shelled by an air raid. Norma declares that being under fire was the least exciting experience she has ever known, but Mr. Adams writes that he saw the poster himself, "so it's no phoney."

Richard Barthelmess says that his ambition first, last and all the time, is to be—an actor, and although his memorable character creation of Cheng Huan in "Broken Blossoms" was a complete surprise to those who have seen him lately in straight roles expressing his own personality, the part was a fascinating one to him. It wasn't his first experience of the kind, though, for when he was sixteen he played "the oldest man in town" in "The Fortune Hunter."

Corinne Griffith had her first air ride a few days ago, and she casually declares there was nothing to it at all. The machine was a hydroplane, of the type known as a limousine of the air, the passengers' compartment being entirely enclosed, and Miss Griffith powdered her nose while speeding high over the Hudson river at many miles an hour. She says she enjoyed the trip immensely but that it didn't seem in the least unusual.

J. Stuart Blackton has engaged Fanny Rice for his production of "Moonshine and Shadows" and also for the following one which will be a picturization of Eleanor Porter's novel "Dawn." Miss Rice, having been in vaudeville, musical comedy and legitimate productions for twenty-five years, decided five years ago, to retire definitely from the stage. She was in Australia when the war broke out, her contracts were cancelled, and she returned to America, expecting to lead a quiet, uneventful life. Mr. Blackton changed her mind, however.

Tom Mills is directing Gladys Leslie in a melodramatic production, the working title of which is "Belinda Puts Her Hair Up," for Vitagraph. He is interspersing melodrama with comedy drama just to show the versatility of his star.

Robert Gordon, who played with Sylvia Breamer in J. Stuart Blackton's production "Missing," will again be seen with her in the forthcoming pictures: "Moonshine and Shadows" and "Dawn." Mr. Gordon has been in the service, and has been called, with Miss Breamer, and the "Missing" team is found again, and is being co-starred.

"How do you do it?" asked Thomas H. Ince the other day of Walter Edwards, now directing Marguerite Clark at the Morosco studio, when the latter remarked that ten to twelve days was generally his limit for filming his present type of story. Edwards went on to say that the cast of his present picture, "In Pawn," on account of the hot weather, felt that they were getting off very easy by being allowed sixteen days to do it.

"It is just a little system I worked out for myself—which I use in all my other activities as well as in directing photoplays." Mr. Edwards is one of the substantial citizens of Culver City, where he is a member of the Chamber of Commerce, and also a director for the Pacific Building & Loan Association. In fact his hobby outside of professional interests is looking for broken-down landmarks and converting them in a twinkling into modern bungalows. This is only another manifestation of his directorial talent.

Hal Young, who came from New York to photograph pictures of Marguerite Clark, has been selected assistant cameraman to Hugh Ford and will leave with him on the 22d of this month to sail for England, where "The Sorrows of Satan," from Marie Corelli, will be made for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The cast and other details will be announced later. The star has not been decided on.

Park Frame, who has just finished directing "The Lure of the Poppy" for H. B. Warner, at the Jesse D. Hampton Studio, is spending his time between pictures in San Francisco.

H. B. Warner has joined the ever swelling crowd of anglers at Catalina, where the clear waters are being disturbed for the "big game" fish, tuna. Mr. Warner finds fishing his best restcure, so will remain on the island while casting is going on for his next picture, "The Prince and Betty," from the magazine story by T. G. Woodhouse. The principal scenes will represent the Mediterranean Sea.

D. W. Griffith has been selected as one of the three judges named by the Illustrated Daily News and Chicago Tribune to decide on the winners in the latest beauty contest inaugurated by the above publications for young women who do not make a profession of their good looks. The other two judges are Harrison Fisher and George M. Cohan. The contest will run three months.

Bessie Barriscale joined the vacation party at Santa Catalina Island last week to rest up from her last picture, "The Woman Michael Married." She will start her next one about the 24th of June. It is an original story by Wm. B. Havey.

Kathleen Williams has been engaged to take part in Bessie Barriscale's next production at the Brunton Studios.

Listen, nobody will believe it; but you ought to know that Ernest C. Warde took a whole day's vacation after the last picture he finished directing for J. Warren Kerrigan. Of the two things he is famous for, one is not resting—"loafing" he calls it. This memorable day was spent at Catalina, where he competed for membership in the Tuna Club—entrance requirement being a hundred pound fish to your credit. It hasn't been made public how many he caught.

Director Lloyd Ingraham, lately of the American Company at Santa Barbara, is scheduled to start a picture for the Haworth people the last of the month.

Sessue Hayakawa begins work about the 15th of July on a story written by Mary Fenolossa, entitled "The Dragon Painter," in which he will be assisted by his wife, Tsura Aoki, and supported by an all Japanese cast. This petite actress has been his leading woman in nearly every other one of his late successes.

Director Ernest C. Warde is busy on his next picture for Kerrigan, "The Denver Sprig," written by Jack Cunningham.

Everybody wanted to go along the day the Fred Stone company was rounded up at the Brunton Studios the middle of June and dispatched bag and baggage by Manager Andrew Callaghan for Lake Louise, at Banf, Canada, which is the location for the new picture called "Billy Jim"—taken from Jackson Gregory's magazine story. This is the first time these scenes have appeared in films.

Did you know that William Worthington, besides being one of the most finished directors, is also a singer of some importance? Perhaps you have heard before this that he was on the light opera stage, for which career he was prepared by several years' study in Vienna. So you can imagine how much he is in demand when he has the time to spare between pictures to social activities. His accomplishments also include the ability to accompany himself on the piano. This talent not only affords him a means of rest from his strenuous duties, but is an enjoyable source of entertainment for his many friends.

O'Brien on Second Subject for Selznick

Eugene O'Brien's first production for Selznick Pictures, "The Perfect Lover," has been completed, and work will begin very shortly upon his second one, "The Sealed Heart." It also will be a Ralph Ince production.

Mr. Ince is still busy in putting the finishing touches upon "The Perfect Lover," concerning which all members of the producing staff are highly enthusiastic. Meanwhile, Edmund Goulding, of the scenario department, has conceived a unique plot which has been accepted for the next production.

"The Sealed Heart" scenario will be supplied from Mr. Goulding's theme by Eugene Walter, the noted dramatist. Mr. Walter has enjoyed tremendous success with his stage productions beginning with "Paid in Full" and covering a number of years.

Release "Nugget Nell"

"Nugget Nell" is the title of the next Paramount picture in which Dorothy Gish is presented by the New Art Film Company and which is scheduled for release July 13. The production was directed by Elmer Clifton and is from an original story by John E. Cornish, being described as "a burlesque travesty on the wild and movie West."

Arthur Leslie, Pioneer in Publicity

This introduces Arthur Leslie, author of "1,001 Film Folks I Know Personally" and "Who's Who On the Screen." Leslie was the first motion picture publicity man to start a newspaper syndicate and run a photoplay page in fifty newspapers every week for several years. Among his best remembered stunts are sending out loaves of bread in which were baked tubes containing advertisements, also inclosing new dollar bills as attention getters in letters to film magnates. His one recreation is heavy weight hitting. His biceps are sixteen inches, and he is said to be the strongest man physically among the writing men of the industry. He lives at the Elmwood Hotel, East Orange, N. J. During his seven years in the industry he has only held two positions. He is now on vacation and upon his return will do special publicity work.

Interviewing the Real Theda Bara

DID you know that Theda Bara has been having articles published in the Forum, that she is writing other things anonymously that we aren't at liberty to tell you about, that her favorite reading matter includes Sarah Bernhardt's Memoirs in the original, and such delightful, but not generally known, bits as "Sarah Barnum"? Can you imagine her enjoying such adventures as milking cows and running wild in a short skirt and bare feet, with flying hair, in the woods of Ithaca?

We didn't, and we confess that all the stories we have ever read about the original vamp had given us an impression entirely different from the one we received yesterday, when we talked with her about the $125,000 production she is just finishing under Charles Brabin's direction. The picture is an absolute departure for her from the sort of thing she has been doing, and her enthusiasm about it, as far as her own preference is concerned, is unlimited. She is doubtful of her public's verdict, however, because, when a star is once established as a certain type, she says, the fans are usually disconcerted by a change.

Our own opinion, judging from some of the sets and a few stills, is that the production will form a new clientele, whose appreciation of Miss Bara's work in this picture will be more worth while than any she has yet received. Several new devices have been used, such as "shooting" through very fine silk gauze, which gives the pictures thus taken a soft, shadowy effect that is really exquisite. A ballroom scene left us speechless with admiration. The walls were made entirely of mirrors, separated only by marble columns and lighted by thousands of candles in four gigantic candelabra, that reached to the ceiling, the bases being also of marble. The mirrors reflected the beautifully costumed couples dancing the minuet, so that the effect was that of a room extending on into space indefinitely.

We were intent on the scene when Miss Bara came forward to meet us, gracious and smiling, with none of the black make-up under her eyes that she usually wears, and in three seconds we found more to talk with her about than we could possibly finish discussing in three days. She has the knack of bringing up intensely interesting subjects in just a few words and making you feel that she has volumes of unexpressed opinions inside her curly head—yes, her hair is curly in "Kathleen Mavourneen"—and that you would would like her to go on talking for weeks. Then, while your interest is at the highest pitch, a phrase used as an illustration of some point will make you instantly want to ask her a thousand questions along that line.

Apropos of an assertion that women often make better publicity representatives than men, Miss Bara declared that she thought it was because women knew what would appeal most strongly to other women, and all pictures should be made with the appeal to the feminine part of the audience uppermost in the producer's mind. We gasped.

"When all your parts have been vamps, positively guaranteed to captivate the hearts of all the gentlemen present? And you make such a statement as that!"

Miss Bara nodded and her eyes twinkled. "But you see I believe that at bottom women like the vamps quite as well as the men do."

Being unable to prove anything to the contrary, we let it go at that, and told Miss Bara what a surprise she was to us.

"Well," she laughed, "I shan't ever deny all that the publicity men have printed about me, because I agree with George Meredith that it's useless to try to write about women who have never had any adventures, for the obvious reason that there's nothing to say. But there's been a great deal said that isn't so, and absolutely nothing that is. That happens invariably, doesn't it? We're often blamed, occasionally praised, for things we haven't done, while the things we do do slip by unnoticed."

"Oh, but we had a good time in Ithaca," she went on, "and will you believe that I milked a cow? Yes, I did, really, but I was the most surprised person around. And I adored running about in a short, full skirt. Aren't women idiots to try to walk all day in skirts they can barely move in, so that by the end of the day they're nearly exhausted? Up there in that beautiful country, dressed like a mountain girl, I never was tired. I've enjoyed making this picture almost more than any I've ever made, and we haven't resorted to twelve white peacocks to give it distinction, either."

Just here Mr. Brabin shouted down from the roof, or somewhere near it, that we surely must have Miss Bara's life history by this time, which showed how little he knew, for we defy anybody to get Miss Bara's life history, true life history, at all. But we had to let her go to work. Marguerite Jones.

Talking Clothes With Betty Blythe

"YOU see my designer is taking all my time," Betty Blythe explained. "I expect to leave for the coast in about a week to play a wonderful part in Rex Beach's picture, 'The Silver Horn,' for Goldwyn, and as usual I'm supposed to be a millionaire's daughter with a passion for clothes."

So there was nothing for it but for us to pursue our subject right into the mysterious regions from which proceed those marvelous creations that cause such murmurs of admiration when they appear on the screen. We were decidedly nothing loath, because colors and fabrics and lines are perfectly fascinating to our unitiated selves.

"Oh, no, that will never do!" Miss Blythe was saying when we first caught sight of her surveying a reflection in heavy white satin, draped in indescribable folds of deep orange chiffon and finished here and there with gorgeous Persian beaded tassels, "I can walk half way across the room with almost no trouble at all. It will have to be ever so much tighter than that."

We thought silently that Miss Blythe would certainly have to hop along like people in obstacle races with both feet tied together, if the circumference of that hem lost another inch, but not at all—the modiste proceeded to pin in and pin in, and the wearer seemed still to move around with perfect ease. We marveled. How do motion picture actresses do it?

"And what is going to hold these shoulder pieces up?" we inquired, in our ignorance.

"Oh, heaven is always with me," Miss Blythe answered with complete assurance. "I've been doing for years and nothing distressing has ever happened yet."

"Miss Blythe is the most delightful patroness," the modiste exclaimed; "she not only wears her clothes so well, but she has such original ideas, and designs most of her gowns herself. All we have to do is carry out her suggestions. And the most charming part of all is that she always knows what she wants. You can't imagine how satisfactory that is to us. The minute she tries on a partly finished gown, she knows instantly whether she likes it or not, and if there are any bad lines she detects them at once. When she makes a selection she doesn't go back on it, and wish the next day that she had chosen something else. But then she always chooses wisely, and there's no reason why she should change her mind," and she glanced approvingly at Miss Blythe's tall figure, in gray satin and fringe and chiffon, with a large cerise hat.

We watched in admiration while she slipped on one stunning effect after another, each apparently suiting her better than the last, and when she finally donned her street clothes to keep a luncheon engagement—a black, heavily beaded suit much more voguish than anything in vogue, and a black hat at exactly the right angle, we simply couldn't have said what sort of costume she looked best in. There wasn't any best, we decided, they were all perfect. No wonder the producers won't let her play anything but dressed up parts!

As we left the designers, Miss Blythe suddenly flashed a question that always proves interesting, but that we seldom like to bring up ourselves—namely, what we thought of marriage. Upon being asked her own views on the subject, she said thoughtfully: "Girls can support themselves so awfully well nowadays, that there's really no need, you know. Truthfully, I should love to be married if I could ever find anybody who could come half way up to my ideals, but no one ever does; or perhaps I should say, that I'm always so fearfully busy that I never have time to find out whether anyone does or not."

"There's another sad fact about a professional life," she continuel, "and that is that you never, in your own estimation, could possibly reach the top. No matter how hard you work, there is always something more to learn, and no matter what success may come to you, you can always feel that there are infinitely greater heights to be reached yet. But I've wanted a professional life ever since I can remember. And I'm so glad I'm having it. I wouldn't give it up for anything in the world." —Marguerite Jones.

Efficiency Manager Is Named by Select

The creation of another executive position in Select Pictures Corporation was announced this week with the appointment of George M. Sharrard, for the past year a member of the Select sales department, to the office of efficiency manager. Mr. Sharrard's elevation to this important post is in line with the previously announced policy of President Lewis J. Selznick to fill prospective executive openings in the corporation with men who have already proved their value to Select Pictures.

Mr. Sharrard starts on his new duties immediately, having devoted the past few months to organizing the department and bringing it up to its present state of efficiency.

Alaskan Picture Added to World's Program

World Pictures announces in August it will release on its program without extra cost to its franchise holders, "The Girl Alaska," which it secured from Mr. George Kleine. Mr. Kleine in his letter to the World, turning over this picture said:

"We commend this simple tale and adventure to our friends because it is actually and beyond dispute the first and only story of Alaska that was really made in Alaska. There have been several photoplays of the North which have endeavored to reproduce the wondrous beauties of this mysterious country with the aid of the builder and scene painter's art but have fallen far short of the mark."

By securing "The Girl Alaska" as a program picture, the World Corporation again brings assurance to the exhibitor that it will continue at all times its efforts to procure the very best material possible in its policy of furnishing the exhibitor with money-getting pictures.

"Sahara" Taken for All Mark-Strand Houses

So powerful did J. Parker Read, Jr.'s production starring Louise Glaum in "Sahara" prove at the New York Strand for its premiere metropolitan engagement that the Mark-Strand company has booked "Sahara" for first runs in their Buffalo Strand, their Syracuse Strand and in the four outlying or neighborhood houses in Buffalo. Contracts were signed for these cities during the past week by Moe Mark, president of the Strand organization and Walter Hays, treasurer with the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Other big first run contracts signed during the week call for immediate playing dates at the Rialto Theatre, Tacoma, and first runs in Birmingham, Montgomery, Galveston, Indianapolis and a dozen other large cities.

United Theatre Contest Ends

Second Contest for Offices Is Begun; Seattle Force Victors in First One

THE results of the $1,000 bonus competition promoted among its field forces and branch managers, and covering a contest of four weeks have now been announced by President J. A. Berst, of United Picture Theatres Inc. The Seattle office and district force, of which H. C. Arthur is the United Branch Manager, carries off premier honors in the premium contest and thus receives the first prize of $350. bonus. The six remaining prizes have been won by the Indianapolis, Atlanta, Cleveland, Kansas City, Denver and Dallas offices in the order given. The contesting branches numbered in all twenty-one.

Up to the final moment, so keenly contested was the event and so closely were the competitors running together, the result was long in doubt. So well satisfied is Mr. Berst with the outcome of this bonus competition among United representatives that the contest is being followed by a second, now in operation and which is to extend over a period of six weeks. The spirit of rivalry and progressive energy evidenced by the field forces has resulted, it is stated, in a large access of new membership to United's co-operative organization. For the last week of the competition alone sixty-two new members were listed and in addition there was a notable list of existing members who increased their franchise shares and thus secured the privilege of playing United attractions for additional days.

A special feature of the current competition is that half of the prizes now offered are to be devoted exclusively to exhibitors who are already members of United. The other half of the prizes will go, as before to the managerial and sales forces in the field.

Pictures with Indian Casts

Educational to Follow Two Recent Releases with a Single Reel Series

THE recent Educational releases, "The Eagle and the Fawn" and "The Passing of the Crow" will be followed shortly by other single-reel subjects with all-Indian players, according to an announcement by Vice President E. W. Hammons, of the Educational Films Corporation of America.

The technical crew and cameraman are on the job at Sheridan, Wyoming, and work on new productions is proceedingly rapidly under the direction of Dr. J. E. Maple, who produced the first two subjects. A labor-story has been built, to make it possible to develop negative and working positive prints on the ground, and the equipment is complete for the filming of the new subjects.

Many pictures have been made with whites in the role of Indians, but their acting is unreal and often discredits the picture. Dr. Maple has found some unusual talent among the Indian players, as, for instance, the leading characters in "The Eagle and the Fawn." The action and traits of the Indians are characteristic to themselves alone, and very seldom does a disguised actor make a presentable appearance.

For this season, some exceptionally good stories have been secured—the first occasion where well-known authors have suppplied the thread of story in single-reel subjects that are primarily scenic pictures. The first to be produced will be one by Caroline Lockhart, whose home was for many years at Cody, where she wrote stories of the Indians and the nearby country. With the subjects now planned, the company expects to be busy until snow flies.

Both "The Eagle and the Fawn" and "The Passing of the Crow," were short-subject novelties that have been exceptionally well received by the trade. "The Passing of the Crow" has not yet been released in New York, waiting for the arrangement of special music for the first-run showing at the Rialto theatre.

Madelaine Traverse in "Rose of the West"

"Rose of the West" is the most picturesque and gripping of all the pictures in which Madelaine Traverse has appeared, in the view of the Exhibitors Service Bureau of the Fox Film Corporation.

"There is a country-wide demand for the type of drama and of character in which Miss Traverse appears," says the Bureau, "'Gambling in Souls,' a drama of mother-love, 'The Love that Dares,' and 'When Fate Decides,' are all plays of deep and nature emotion, while 'Rose of the West' expresses the maternal instinct in the most appealing as well as most thrilling manner."

"Rose of the West" is a drama of the Canadian Northwest, and pictures the efforts of a devoted mother to save her beautiful daughter from the clutches of a man to whom a villainous father has agreed to sell in exchange for goldbearing land.

Exhibitors Anxious to Get "Desert Gold"

Along with the announcement from Benjamin B. Hampton at his Los Angeles studios that Zane Grey's "Desert Gold," produced by him in conjunction with Eltinge F. Warner, is completed and ready for shipment, comes the news to W. W Hodkinson Corporation that four of the most prominent first run exhibitors on the Coast have visited the studio the past week for an "early bird catches the worm" view of the powerful Zane Grey feature.

A master print and the negative of "Desert Gold" have been shipped East to Charles A. Weeks, Treasurer and General Manager of Zane Grey's Pictures, Inc., and the Hodkinson organization, distributor of "Desert Gold," announces trade showings will shortly be held in all thirty exchange cities.

More Broadway Lights

Universal's home office at 1600 Broadway announces the erection of one of the largest signs in the city of New York and which will be placed on the Broadway side of the Mecca Building. Just what the wording of the sign will be or what figures are to be used is not known at the present time. The new sign will be a sizable gift to the idea recently spread broadcast "Give a thought to Broadway." The cost of the sign acording to a Universal official will be approximately $25,000.

Select Well Represented at Convention

Scores of the prominent exhibitors who attended the recent St. Louis convention were so pleased at the reception they received at the hands of General Manager Morris and Director of Sales Rogers, of the Select forces, that many of them were heard to exclaim that it looked like a Select convention. In addition to Messrs. Morris and Rogers, there were present at St. Louis eight other representatives of the Select organization, and all of them joined to show exhibitors a royal time.

Laemmle Seeks Daring Cowboy Rider

The entire West is being searched in an endeavor to discover the world's most daring cowboy who can be made into a moving picture star for Western dramas. At this season all over the Pacific slope Wild West celebrations are being held with the cowboys from the surrounding country competing in broncho-busting, steer roping, and other events, for which rodeos and round-up festivities are famed.

To those fiestas Carl Laemmle, Universal's president, is sending R. E. Wells, as his personal representative, accompanied by a crew of cameramen to take screen tests of the cowboys who stage the more death-defying, breathtaking feats.

From the tests Mr. Laemmle will personally choose the new star.

It is Mr. Laemmle's plan to surround his new cowboy star with other daring riders who can deliver the last word in horsemanship. It is possible that several of the participants in the various rodeos will find themselves at Universal City featured in Western dramas in the next few months.

Fire Destroys Prints of "Virtuous Men"

The fire which gutted the Unexcelled Laboratories at Yonkers, New York, last week narrowly missed destroying the negative of "Virtuous Men," a state right feature owned by Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, S-L Pictures. This negative, which entailed a cost of $100,000, was heavily insured. However, owing to the number of standing orders for prints from various state right buyers, its destruction would have proven a serious blow to the S-L Organization and the various territorial distributors of the picture.

Several newly made prints of "Virtuous Men" were completely destroyed by the blaze at the Unexcelled Laboratory, all of which were about to be rushed to various parts of the country.

In Marion Davies' Cast

Prominent in the cast of Marion Davies' new starring vehicle, "April Folly," just completed at the Biograph Studio, are the two daughters of Edwin S. Bettelheim, editor of the Dramatic News. Director Robert Z. Leonard pays high tribute to the talent and beauty of the Misses Bettelheim, who are said to be striking figures in the elaborate costume ball scenes that are a feature of the new production.

"Westerners" Coast Success

Two First Runs in Los Angeles Given Hodkinson Release on White's Story

COMPLETING its successful engagement at the Kinema theatre, Los Angeles, where it had its American premiere, Benjamin B. Hampton's first Great Authors production, Stewart Edward White's "The Westerners," at once moved into Quinn's Rialto for a continuous first run, thereby attaining a record held by few others in pictures in Los Angeles in the past two years.

The period of time allotted for the Kinema pre-release did not afford the opportunity for "The Westeners" to be seen by the Los Angeles public that sought to get into the theatre and owing to previous bookings the run of the production could not be continued at the Kinema. Immediately the Rialto obtained a booking for a continuous run and "The Westeners" that closed at 11 o'clock Saturday night in the one theatre opened again at 1 o'clock Sunday in another theatre four blocks distant from the scene of its first success.

Again during its Rialto engagement the presentation of Mr. Hampton's first big picture, which is being distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, was marked by a highly interesting and successful advertising campaign under the direction of George Hough Perry and Bob Blair, manager of the Rialto, being responsible for a recent five weeks' run of the picture that preceded "The Westerners" in the Rialto, as well as a nine weeks' run of the fine little picture, "The Turn in the Road."

Prints of "The Westeners" have now been shipped to all Hodkinson managers and are available for special release engagements only.

Completing Fairbanks Film

New Subject for Release in September Almost Ready; Strong Cast Named

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS' first release through United Artists Corporation is rapidly rounding out and the atmosphere at the Hollywood Studios where the production is being made, indicates extreme optimism on the part of the star and his associates over the success of his first independent release.

Marjory Daw is playing the leading female role. This is the sixth picture in which Miss Daw has played opposite Fairbanks. Miss Daw is an ideal type for the young American girl and when it is remembered that Doug uses rather extreme and heroic methods in rescuing damsels from predicaments, it stands to reason that it requires some experience to play heroine to his hero.

Frank Campeau, who has been associated with Fairbanks for over a year, plays the heavy role. His good work in many of the recent Fairbanks productions, particularly in "The Knickerbocker Buckaroo," has gained for him as much popularity on the screen as he enjoyed on the stage, when he created the role of "Trampus" in "The Virginian" and when he played "Joe Garson" in "Within the Law."

Sam Sothern, a London and New York actor, and brother of E. H. Sothern, makes his first screen appearance in the new production.

Albert McQuarrie will also be one of the main supports in the new production. Mr. McQuarrie had a good part in "The Knickerbocker Buckaroo" and in addition to his work in the picture, he is serving as an assistant to Director Joe Henaberry.

The camera work of the new production will be under the supervision of First Lieut. Victor Fleming.

Initial Screen Letter Box

July 15 Set as Date of Presentation of Novelty Conceived by M. A. Kashin

THE first Screen Letter Box feature conceived by Morris A. Kashin, produced by Jack Cohn and distributed by Frank G. Hall, president of the Independent Sales Corporation, will be released to the public July 15.

It is the opinion of Mr. Kashin, himself an exhibitor, that no picture house in the country, whether large or small, can afford to keep the "Letter Box" from its screen. The intelligence and natural curiosity of motion picture patrons from California to New York has been clamoring for years to get an insight into the "mysterious" and complex workings of the camera, the movies and the screen.

Playhouse managers are the logical source of this information. The artists working before the camera cannot meet the "fans" and tell them how it's done. The silent drama must be the medium through which millions of doubters can be made to see the light.

Mr. Kashin tells how it is to be done:

"One million self-sealing letter heads will be distributed to one million picture "Fans" who will ask one million questions of the one million picture houses from the Atlantic to the Pacific. These questions will concern themselves with the inside workings of the movies. It is up to the motion picture houses to answer them. They can do it by first throwing on their screen the questions followed by the answers."

Mr. Kashin believes that his conception will not only be a pleasing and entertaining feature of every motion picture bill but it also will be of incalculable educational value.

Mary Miles Minter to Have Girlhood Story

A vehicle has finally been secured to introduce Mary Miles Minter as a Realart star. After searching high and low for a subject and a title measuring up to the importance of her first appearance in Realart pictures, the hunt narrowed down to four novels, the screen rights to which a half dozen firms were seeking. These were the "Anne" books of American girlhood by L. M. Montgomery and the new picture firm carried off the prize. "Anne of Green Gables" from the title of one of the four is the name which will be used and it will cover in one picture the events detailed in all of this fiction series.

Immediately following the completion of "Anne of Green Gables," work will be commenced on the second of the six yearly features in which Mary Miles Minter is to be shown as a Realart star.

Virginia Pearson Shows Her Versatility

In her forthcoming production, "Impossible Catherine," Virginia Pearson is said to prove the versatility of the true actress in her delineation of the role of the heroine, so different to those she usually portrays. Especially noticeable is the contrast between this role and that of Lady Hester in "The Bishop's Emeralds," for in this Miss Pearson was the stately dignified lady of high degree she usually introduces to the silver sheet.

But as "Impossible Catherine" she wanders far from the beaten track her friends have been led to expect from her. She pouts and flies into tantrums upon the slightest provocation, and plays better than any of the men constituting the rival teams in the polo game.

Newcomer in Industry Auditor for Select

Last week saw the appointment of M. C. Howard to the position of auditor for Select Pictures Corporation, of which Lewis J. Selznick is president. Although this is Mr. Howard's first affiliation in the motion picture industry, he brings with him not only the general auditing experience and technical equipment which so responsible a position calls for, but also a thorough appreciation of the systems necessary to co-ordinate the accounting departments of a home office and its branches.

Christie Has Burlesque on Amateur Plays

The fourth of the Christie Specials, titled "Shades of Shakespeare" has just been completed under the direction of Al E. Christe, for release in July. Alice Lake is featured in this Special, with a feature cast similar to those in the previous Christie two-reelers. With Miss Lake are Earle Rodney, the Christie juvenile who has appeared up to this time only in Christie one-reel comedies, Eddie Barry, Eugene Corey, Ward Calufield, Al Haynes and others. For the sake of the plot, a number of the Christie beauties were under the necessity of being un-beautiful in this production, since they appear at a disadvantage dressed as unfortunate refugees in a shattered Belgian homestead.

"Shades of Shakespeare" is just what the title might imply, the story of an amateur play, in which the hero and the villain and the stage hands and everybody else connected with the performance are so bad that the world's greatest playwright must have turned over once more in his grave.

"Shades of Shakespeare" is the first Christie picture in which Alice Lake stars.

Earle Williams Finishes New Production

"The Hornet's Nest," a typical Earle Williams feature, has just been completed by that star at Vitagraph's Hollywood sutdio where it has been accepted as one of his most finished efforts. The scenario was adapted from the book of the same name by Mrs. Wilson Woodrow and the picture directed by James Young.

It is a romance of today with hearts, high finance and crooks as the leading features. In the supporting cast are Brinsley Shaw, Vola Vale, Ogden Crane, Kathleen Kirkman and Edward McWade.

Making a Foreign Drive

The Foreign Department of the Fox Film Corporation is in the midst of a simultaneous sales drive in England, Australia and Brazil, the Exhibitors' Service Bureau announces. This drive, modeled on the same lines as those used in this country in several big selling efforts, is said to be meeting with marked success.

Big Drive on Fisher's Comics

"Mutt and Jeff" Cartoon to Be Pushed for Two Months; Prize to Exchangemen

A SALES drive with intent to bring a record number of bookings in a given time over any other subject of like nature, has been inaugurated on the Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons, by Winfield R. Sheehan, General Manager of the Fox Film Corporation. The drive commences June 29 and ends August 31.

Bud Fisher, creator of Mutt and Jeff, has offered a handsome silver loving cup as a prize to the salesman who secures in the period specified the largest number of contracts in proportion to his territory for the Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons and will personally present the winner with it after it has been suitably engraved.

As a result practically every member of the selling staffs of the different Fox exchanges is figuratively up on his toes to hang up a record for bookings on these popular laugh-makers and it is a foregone conclusion, that before the drive is over, the Mutt and Jeff Cartoons will be seen on the screen in almost every city, town and hamlet in the country.

Mutt and Jeff in animated form have been generally conceded to be by far the funniest cartoons on the screen and their vogue has been greater than any other weekly of similar character.

It is with the object of extending this vogue even more widely that the present drive was planned, and already General Manager Sheehan has received assurances from several exchanges that each of them hopes to capture the prize.

One feature of the contest has especially appealed to those salesmen who are working in territories less closely settled than some of the others and this is the fact that the final award will be based upon the amount of business produced, in proportion to each salesman's territory.

Windy City Critics Like Select Offering of "Happiness a la Mode"

CHICAGO motion picture writers are united in opinion that Constance Talmadge's latest Select picture, "Happiness a la Mode," in which she is presented by Lewis J. Selznick, is the best attraction this vivacious star has ever offered. "Happiness a la Mode" has just completed pre-release engagements of one week each at the Zigfeld theatre and Bijou Dream theatre in Chicago, and according to the newspaper critics the production went over like a breeze from the lake.

Virginia Dale, writing in the Chicago Daily Journal, says that it is probable that Miss Talmadge and her leading man, Harrison Ford, have brought more clean and clever five-reel comedies to the screen than any other two-film folk in the profession. "They are excellent foils for each other," Miss Dale says, "and in this production, like many others, they are as breezy and refreshing as a gust from the lake."

Mae Tinee, the well-known writer of the Chicago Daily Tribune, says that "Happiness a la Mode" is not so innocent as some of the Constance Talmadge-Harrison Ford productions, but exceedingly well done.

Rob Reel, of the Chicago Evening American, says that Norma's sister is no longer capricious, but capable. Mr. Reel enjoyed the screening very much, and seems to think that "Happiness a la Mode" will make very good entertainment.

In addition to the pre-releases at the Ziegfeld and Sig Faller's Bijou Dream, "Happiness a la Mode" has early play dates at many other Chicago theatres. According to the advance bookings which are reported by the various Select Exchanges, Miss Talmadge's latest attraction will prove more popular than any of the previous ones.

"The Oakdale Affair"

Oscar Apfel begins his third production under his contract with World Pictures using as his vehicle "The Oakdale Affair." Evelyn Greeley will be the star. It will be released during the month of August.

Hale Hamilton in Late Metro on July 14

Scheduled for release on July 14 Metro announces Hale Hamilton in the double role of star and author of a comedy-romance entitled "In His Brother's Place."

It is described as a typical Hale Hamilton story, beginning with the fact that he conceived and wrote the original story, which provides him with a dual role, the contrasting characters of which are adapted to his talents as a light comedian.

From Hamilton's original, the story was converted into scenario form by A. S. Le Vino of the Metro scenario department, and the production was directed by Harry L. Franklin, whose recent endeavors with the same star include such successful screen plays as "After His Own Heart" and "Full of Pep."

Variety of Topics in "U" Screen News

Advice to the lovelorn, how to make your way safely out of jail, how elephants are manicured, and the history of the "divorcitis" or. divorce-germ, are some of the subjects shown in the current edition of Universal's New Screen Magazine. It is the twentieth of the series.

Of historic interest, is the first scene shown. The frigate "Constitution" the famous ship in American history, nicknamed "Old Ironsides" is seen docked at the Boston Navy Yard. An intimate view of this veteran seahound that is one-hundred and twenty-two years old, and has survived three wars, follows. Blending the serious with the humorous in an ideal manner, the next scene shows the divorce-germ entering the heart and devouring the love-germ.

Emmy Wehlen and Hamilton Finish Subjects

In a neck and neck finish, Emmy Wehlen and Hale Hamilton this week completed their respective latest productions at the new Metro studios in Hollywood. Miss Wehlen's new vehicle is an original comedy from the pen of Luther A. Reed, entitled "A Favor to a Friend," while Hamilton rounded out his work before the camera in "In His Brother's Place," a comedy drama which the star wrote himself and in which he assumes a dual role.

Vitagraph News Bits

THE concluding chapters of "The Perils of Thunder Mountain," the Vitagraph serial starring Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway, are being filmed. Mr. Moreno and Miss Holloway, with their company and director, have returned to Truckee, Cal., where the last scenes in the serial are to be made. As soon as the picture is completed Mr. Moreno will go east for a two weeks' vacation. Miss Holloway plans to remain in the mountains with her mother until the Vitagraph calls her for another chapter production.

William Duncan, Vitagraph star, stopped production this week long enough to go to San Francisco to put on a vaudeville show for the entertainment of the Ad Men's Club of that city. His company is working at Lake Huntington.

Larry Semon has finished his picturized burlesque of itinerant stage life. The comedy is the most ambitious effort thus far attempted by Mr. Semon, it is said. It will introduce 250 players on the screen. The subject will be titled immediately.

Earle Williams has returned from location at Lake Tahoe, where he completed his newest screen vehicle, "The Wolf." The production to follow "The Wolf" has not as yet been decided upon. Several stage plays and original stories are ready for Mr. Williams' use, it is said, but a decision has not been reached as to what shall constitute his next vehicle.

At the Ince Plant

THOMAS H. INCE is developing a distinctive school in screen writing, and to this end has perfected one of the largest scenario departments in the motion picture industry. C. Gardner Sullivan is at the head of the department, and on the staff with him are John Lynch, R. Cecil Smith, Julien Josephson, Agnes Johnston, Eugene B. Lewis, Ethel Gillette Thorpe, Adele Buffington and Luther A. Reed. In his quest for the best stories Mr. Ince reads the synopses of many of the stories submitted by outside writers, and if there is an indication of a good story he then reads the scenario. Once a story is placed in form for the director it goes to Clark W. Thomas, manager of productions, who begins the work of materializing the fiction into screen shape.

The cast for Charles Ray's next photoplay now being made at the Ince studios consists of Mr. Ray, Margerie Wilson, Wade Botiler, Gordon Mullen and Otto Hoffman. Several spectacular scenes call for hundreds of extra actors.

Luther A. Reed, Ince scenario writer, is now engaged in writing the continuity for Gouvernor Morris' well known story, "Behind the Door," which is to be given production at the Ince studios.

Henry King, formerly a director with the American Film company, and under whose supervision many of the Mary Miles Minter subjects were made, has begun work as director for Thomas H. Ince on a picture in which Douglas MacLean and Doris Day are to be featured. His first production will be the screen version of Mary Robert Rhinehart's story, "Twenty-Three and Half Hours' Leave." Among members of the supporting cast will be Tom Guise, Maxfield Stanley, Wade Botiler and Jack Nelson. Much of the locale of the story is in the United States and in army barracks.

Universal Newsettes

THE Universal serial, "The Midnight Man," in which James J. Corbett is the star, has been completed at Universal City. It was produced by James W. Horne from the story upon which he collaborated with Frank Howard Clark. The serial was given a de luxe staging throughout the entire eighteen reels, and it was made under the personal supervision of Joe Brandt, general manager of serial production. Kathleen O'Connor played opposite Mr. Corbett.

Monroe Salisbury and his company have returned from Tobin, Cal., where outdoor scenes were taken for "Sundown Trail," a romance of the mining camps. The picture is being filmed under the direction of Rollin Sturgeon, and was written by J. G. Hawks.

Mary MacLaren's next picture will be from the novelette, "Auld Jeremiah," by Henry C. Rowland, in which she will play the role of a little Scotch maid. Waldemar Young is writing the story, and Dave Butler will be Miss MacLaren's leading man. The photoplay will be produced under the direction of Ted Browning.

Visiting journalists to Universal City recently have remarked favorably on the accuracy with which the editorial rooms of a metropolitan daily newspaper are being reproduced in "Playing the Game," a drama of newspaper life now being filmed by Universal. George Siegman is the director and Fritzi Brunette is the star, with George McDaniels as her leading man.

Marie Walcamp, having completed the first four of the "Tempest Cody" series for Universal, is taking a vacation.

A new two-reel western company, with Laura Trainor, the girl who rode horseback from Missoula, Mont., to Hollywood, Josephine Hill and Jack Perrin, is now producing "Fighting Blood,' under Reeves Eason's direction.

"Desert Trails" is the title of a new two-reeler of outdoor type in which Pete Morrison and Magda Lane will star under George Holt's direction at Universal.

About Metro Players

JACK CONWAY has signed a contract with Metro Pictures corporation to direct Bert Lytell in "Lombardi Ltd," according to announcement by Director General Maxwell Karger. The play was written by Frederic and Fanny Hatton, and the scenario was provided by June Mathis. Conway was at one time in stock at San Francisco, and later be played heavies with Lewis Stone at the old Belasco theatre in Los Angeles. He entered pictures with the 101 Bison company playing cowboy leaders. At Triangle he starred in "Captain Macklin" and then he became a director contemporary with D. W. Griffith. He produced the Universal picture, "Come Through," in which Herbert Rawlinson was starred. Later he returned to the Triangle, and about one year ago he retired from pictures temporarily because of ill health.

Announcement is made that Metro has acquired the screen rights of "Please Get Married," the Oliver Morosco farce that made a big hit in New York. The story was secured through negotiations conducted by Maxwell Karger. Viola Dana will star in this production, and John Ince will be the director. Mr. Karger recently saw the play at the Little theatre in New York, and during the performance he decided it would provide an excellent vehicle for Miss Dana. The story is by James Cullen and Lewis Allen Browne. Finis Fox is preparing the scenario. Production will begin at an early date.

Scene in front of Loew's New York Theatre during the showing of "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," a Famous Players-Lasky Special featuring Katherine MacDonald, whose future product is to be distributed by Bernie Fineman

May Allison has just completed a vacation at Arrowhead Springs, and she will immediately enter upon the production of "Fair and Warmer," the screen adaption of Avery Hopgood's famous play that had a run of one year on Broadway. The screen rights to the play were recently purchased by Maxwell Karger during a scouting trip to New York. Henry Otto will be her director, and the supporting cast is now being selected. "Fair and Warmer" will mark Miss Allison's debut in the "fewer and better pictures" Metro is planning to launch next September. Production was scheduled to begin the first week in July.

In order to beautify the grounds at Metro studios to the highest degree of artistic development, Manager David Thompson has planted some extensive lawns, much shrubbery and many palm trees. Hundreds of geranium plants have been placed along the back of the administration building.

May Allison's picture produced under the title of "His Father's Wife," has been changed to "Almost Married," according to announcement this week at the Metro plant.

Fox Studio Doings

PRODUCTION work on the William Fox super-production "Wings of the Morning," in which William Farnum will be starred, has begun at the Fox studios. The photodrama will be made under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards, making his fourth picture with William Farnum since he came to Los Angeles last February. The other Farnum pictures made in Los Angeles within the last few months, and which have already been shipped east, are "The Wolves of the Night," "The Lone Star Ranger" and the "Last of the Duanes." In his latest picture Mr. Farnum will be seen in one of his best roles. He will start out as a British officer who has been falsely accused and cashiered out of the army. He becomes a sailor and figures in a romance that develops aboard ship, which later is wrecked off a lonely island in the Pacific. Most of the water scenes will be made at Catalina Island and at Balboa.

Supporting Mr. Farnum are Louise Lovely, Genevieve Blinn, G. Raymond Nye, Hershall Mayall, Clarence Burton and Harry DeVere, John W. Boyle is the cameramen.

Carl Downing, well known New York newspaper man who has been with the New York offices of the William Fox Film corporation, will arrive in Los Angeles at an early date to take charge of the West Coast publicity department, it is announced.

Tom Mix has begun production on a story of which he is the author, entitled "A Hard Boiled Tenderfoot." He is not only directing the picture, but he is going to play the part of a Romeo in the production. Mix will also play another role in the picture that will cause him to be seen in tights.

MAJ. ROBERT WARWICK has completed his latest photoplay, "Told in the Hills," under the direction of George H. Melford, and is now at work on a production called "In Mizzoura," which is being directed by Hugh Ford. The lightning change from one picture to the other caused Major Warwick to remark that making pictures "is almost as strenuous as fighting in France."

Cecil B. DeMille and company are this week at Catalina filming scenes in Jeanie MacPherson's play, founded on J. M. Barrie's "The Admirable Crichton." Among those in the company are Thomas Meighan, Gloria Swanson, Lila Lee, Mildred Reardon, Theodore Roberts, Raymond Hatton and others.

Ethel Clayton, who has for some time been sojourning in Japan, is somewhere on the Pacific Ocean en route to Los Angeles, it was announced this week at the Lasky studios.

Vivian Martin has started work on a new production, called "His Official Fiancee," which will be directed by Robert C. Vignola. The picture will be made at the Morosco and Lasky studios, the picture starting at the Morosco plant and ending at the Lasky studio. This will be made necessary by the fact that when William D. Taylor brings his "Huckleberry Finn" company back to the Morosco there will not be room for everybody.

Fred Kley, general studio manager at Lasky's, is expected to return to the coast early in July.

Violet Heming, the distinguished actress, who will play the name part in "Everywoman," to be made into a picture by the Famous Players-Lasky company, is expected to arrive in Los Angeles soon from New York. She will be under the direction of George Melford. It is to be a spectacular production and besides Miss Heming there will be a score of beautiful girls in the cast.

Here and There

MARGARITA FISHER has completed her work in "The Hellion," her newest photoplay at the American Film studios at Santa Barbara, and she and her mother were visitors for a few days in Los Angeles. She will start work in a new production within the next two weeks.

William Russell has completed his contract in Santa Barbara for the making of American-Pathe features under the name of the William Russell Productions, and he will leave for New York soon where it is understood he will sign a contract to make pictures in the eastern metropolis.

Fred Myton, well known scenario writer, has joined the scenario department of the Jesse D. Hampton Productions in Hollywood. He has completed the continuity of the "The Prince and Betty," the P. G. Wodehouse story for which it is said Hampton paid $10,000.

A great battle scene was filmed this week in the Santa Monica mountains by Allan Dwan, who is producing for the Allan Dwan Feature Productions Richard Harding Davis' celebrated story, "Soldiers of Fortune." More than 400 horsemen and 1800 men on foot took part in the scene, while 200 sailors from the submarine base at San Pedro under the command of Ensign K. A. Drager participated in the event. Battleships in action are to be cut into the scene.

Harry Mann, six years with Universal, and recently with Metro where he played an important part in the Nazimova production "The Red Lantern" has been engaged by the Bulls-Eye Film corporation to play parts originally taken by Billy West.

Arrangements have been completed with Robert Brunton for the production of a series of ten photoplays starring J. Warren Kerrigan, which are to be released through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. The first of these will be "A White Man's Chance," a screen adaptation of Johnston McCulley's of the same name. The second picture, which has just been started and which is still unnamed, will be directed by Ernest C. Warde. Lillian Walker will be Mr. Kerrigan's leading woman.

"The Other Half" is being produced at the Brentwood studios under the direction of King W. Vidor. Hugh Saxon, former newspaper man, has just been cast for the secretary's part.

In the first place he missed the steamer North Land which later that night went on the rocks and the following day feeling full of vim he decided to walk up five flights of steps instead of using the convenient elevator. Last Week We Met—W. V. D. Kelley

HE was just back from a trip to the Convention at St. Louis, where we presume he had gone to allow exhibitors a look at the man who has made natural color films a reality.

It was forty-two years ago on the eighth of March that this apostle of the natural color film saw for the first time the beautiful tints and tones of this—to many of us—drab world. Since then he has been trying to show the Public, a la celluloid, what Beauty is.

In his youth, it is said, William Van Dorem Kelley played with paints instead of marbles simply because colors held a fascination for him. He has always been interested in color, not the slam-bang, between-the-eye riot of many lithographs, but the restful, subdued colors of Nature. It was natural, therefore, that he should have followed the line he has taken to Success.

When he started out "on his own," he selected the field of the electric flasher. For some time he worked here, during which he perfected an improved type of flasher and for which he reecived a patent. It was a good flasher, so we are told and one that was a boost to the use of flashing signs which at that time had not attained their present vogue and variety.

From the flasher he went with the British Bioscope Co., arranging lighting effects in the Mutoscope Halls of London. But after a time at this he felt the urge to return to this country or it might have been that the managers of the Halls weren't appreciative of the beautiful light effects he produced for them. At any rate he gave up his residence in Old Lunnon and came back here to carry out his eighteen years of work on color photography, the results of which are now being revealed in Prizma films.

Kelley knows colors, he talks colors and his talks are full of the enthusiasm for the results of his years of effort to perfect the natural color film. It was he who perfected the various processes that are necessary in lifting the colors from the subject and placing them in life-like shades on the nitro-cellulose strip. It was he, also who found ways and methods to eliminate the drawbacks of previous color films so that when an audience viewed a Prizma production their first expression would be "Isn't it life-like."

At the present time, Mr. Kelley is connected with Prizma, Inc., as Technical Advisor. Although the pictures he has made possible up to this time have received the plaudits of multitudes everywhere he is working on and developing devices and processes which will enhance the value and beauty of these pictures. In fact, so closely has W. V. D. Kelley been identified with the development of natural color films we might make use of a paraphrase of a universally known slogan as follows:

When you say Prizma—you say Kelley.

Equipment Operating Projection Questions Answered

Some Views on the Prize Winning Contributions, Together with Constructive Criticism

C. S. Stuckey, in An Interesting Letter, Takes Issue with the First Prize Article

IN reading over the "First Prize" contribution of A. D. Hotaling, Deland, Fla., of April 26th issue of the Motion Picture News, I was somewhat surprised at some of the details therein.

In a view of just plain criticism and with no intention of knocking Bro. Hotaling, I wish to express my views on some of the mistakes which from my viewpoint, I think he has made in his contribution.

First of all, I notice that in the major portion of the article he calls the machine or projection room by its proper name, namely, "The Projection Room" although towards the latter part he gets careless and calls it the "Operating Room." Now another thing which gets my "nanny" is this:—he calls it a projection room, so why doesn't he call the artist who works in it a "Projectionist" instead of the out of date word "Operator?"

(You are quite right. Inasmuch as the word projectionist has been accepted by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers it should be used at all times when referring to the man behind the projector. No doubt the word seems an awkward one at first, especially to those who have been in the game for years and have become accustomed to the simpler and more familiar term of "operator.")

Another thing which I take very strong objection to is that he claims in the design of his projection room, the first thing to be considered is the size! Well Bro. you might be right if the house is already built and only one spot in the building possible for the projection room location; but you have got to show me. My idea is that in building a new theatre the first thing to look out for is a suitable location for the projection room so that there will be practically a level throw. Until you know just where you are going to have your projection room situated, how in Sam Hill can you start to figure on the size of it unless you start building castles in the air.

Another thing, which, although quite correct if it came to mathematics, was his statement where he says "This drop causes the light to hit the top of the screen before it does the bottom." As I already have said the statement is absolutely true, but listen brother, who is going to try and figure out just how much sooner a certain light ray will hit the top part of the screen than another ray which left the objective lenses at the same instant and hits the lower portion of the screen. I do not know exactly off hand, but I know that light rays travel a good many thousand feet per second. What I imagine you really meant was that, the top part of the screen being closer to the lenses the light rays would be more intense or powerful or, in other words, containing more candlepower than those reaching the lower part of the screen, thereby causing the top part of the screen to be slightly brighter than the lower part of the screen.

(Did you say "thousands of feet per second?" Light travels only 180,000 miles per second. Figure out for yourself how much longer it would take a lower ray to travel to the base of the screen.

We don't believe you should talk in terms of "rays" in this case as a ray does not diverge or converge. Our friend Hotaling referred, of course, to our old stand-by, the key-stone effect, which is caused by the divergence of the cone of light leaving the objective.

This cone of light is a cone only in theory since its sides have been shaved off by the edges of the aperture plate. Naturally, as it travels from the objective to the screen it is constantly becoming of greater area. If the distance from the lens to the bottom of the screen image is a foot greater than the distance to the top of the image the dimension of the beam at the bottom will be larger than at the top. This, in a few words is an explanation of the keystone effect, which has already been treated at length in this department.

We don't believe either that Hotaling referred to a difference of screen illumination at top and bottom. No doubt there is a slight difference but we know of no instrument now available that could ever prove such a fact.)

Under the heading of "Design" he leads us to believe that the Motor Generator set should be placed in the projection room, although I admit in no part of his article does he say definitely just where it should be placed. I would suggest that under all circumstances possible a motor-generator set or for that matter, any other transverter, rectifier or reducing devices should always be located in a separate room adjoining the projection room. Of course, I admit in some places this is not possible, but I believe there is absolutely no excuse in not having the motor-generator set in a separate room, especially when a theatre is built for the sole purpose of Motion Pictures and having the prospects of perfect projection. My reasons for having it in a separate room are numerous, among which is the added heat caused by same in projection room and the unbearable noise of some machine which makes the projection a perfect "Bedlam."

(Your objection is well taken. Whenever possible such auxiliary devices should be outside the projection room but in an adjoining room, not in the basement of the theatre, where they are often found in practise. If the theatre is an old one that is being remodeled it may not be possible to have a separate compartment for a M. G. set on its equivalent but in a new theatre a definite location should be selected for all apparatus of this nature.)

Now, to the size of the projection room—I consider the named size for the length of the room as fair dimensions as a minimum; I might suggest that the width of the room be not less than 10 ft. wide, so as to allow ample passage between film container rewind or work bench and the back of the projectors.

(It is our belief that the S. M. P. E. has standardized on 9 ft. as the minimum width for the projection room. Your suggestion, therefore, is a very good one.)

I consider that an 8 ft. ceiling is far too low unless a fellow is working in the Arctic region. I should say the ceiling be at least 12 ft. in height for the simple reason that the room will contain that many more cubic feet of air and at the same time lessens the density of the smoke in case of a film fire. Where two projectors are used a 24 or even a 36 inch vent flue should be used but of course if it is possible to have a never failing supply of juice to run an exhaust fan, I would also say a 14 inch one would be sufficient but the trouble is we cannot always rely upon our electricity for fans, which generally fails at just the time when needed most. I would thereby advise the use of a 24 or 36 inch ventilating flue from the projection room.

I remain, Yours truly,
Chas. S. Stuckey, Local 360.

The above letter is the kind we have been waiting for since the conclusion of the prize contest. We believe that the winners will take a great deal of interest in hearing what other projectionists think of their schemes and ideas. It seems to us that Mr. Stuckey has brought out a good half dozen points that Mr. Hotaling missed and probably some of the rest of you noticed other features with which you disagreed. Now is the time to bring them to our attention.

Individual Electric Plants for the Motion Picture Theatre

JUST one thing has held back the spread of the motion picture theatre business in the small town and rural field and that has been the difficulty of getting electric service. Recently, however, that difficulty has been practically eliminated through the development of special electric generating sets for the motion picture theatre.

The Domestic Engineering Company, of Dayton, Ohio, which has been on the market for several years with Delco-Light, a highly successful electric light and power plant for use on farms, is now marketing special plants for use in motion picture theatres.

Their investigation of the subject shows that the requirements for such a plant are that it shall furnish, first, ample current for the throwing of a good clear picture and driving of the projecting machines; second, ample additional current for lighting the exterior and interior of the theatre and for running electric fans; and third, that the plant shall operate at a reasonable cost and require little attention for operation.

The Delco-Light makers produce three types of plants to meet the various theatre demands, or rather it should be said that they produce a standard type of plant with three output capacities. Two of the models are designed to operate with incandescent lamps and the third with the carbon arc. It has been found that for pictures not over 10½ ft. by 14 ft. in size with a throw of not over 100 ft., the low voltage incandescent lamp with concentrated filament affords the best method of light projection. The wattage, that is the light giving ability of the lamp, is as high as that of the high voltage incandescent lamp or the carbon arc, but the low voltage allows a concentrated filament which is completely in focus. A 900-watt 32-volt incandescent lamp gives as much light as a 900-watt 110-volt lamp or a 30-amp. direct current carbon arc. The light given off is noiseless, steady, clear and soft, and the light efficiency is high in that nearly all of the light given off by the lamp is projected on the screen.

For pictures up to 18 ft. wide and for throws up to 150 ft. a carbon arc is used instead of an incandescent lamp.

The Delco-Light plant prescribed for each class of usage has a current output amply sufficient for the operation of lights and fans inside and out of the theatre in addition to the lighting of the projector lamps.

The plant itself consists of a direct connected gas-electric generating unit and a set of storage batteries. The engine is air-cooled, is oiled entirely by splash, and runs on kerosene. It starts at the touch of a button on the automobile starter principle, and stops itself automatically when the batteries are fully charged. The battery is used to furnish the desired current when the plant is not running, and to furnish the starting current for the plant itself.

A picture shown herewith gives an idea of the installation of the Delco-Light plant. A switchboard in the operating room controls the lamps and motors of the projection machines and all theatre-lamps and fans. The exit lamps are carried on a separate circuit which is controlled in the ticket office.

With the introduction of electric plants such as Delco-Light a large field for motion pictures hitherto closed to the exhibitor is thrown wide open and already hundreds of towns which boast no electric light plant are now served by motion

The American Projection Society Inc., Celebrates Its Fifth Anniversary

"THERE was a sound of revelry by night"—up at Reisenweber's, New York. The American Projection Society, Inc., felt so happy over their fifth anniversary that they gave themselves a dinner which started after midnight and finished—later.

The guest of honor was Mr. Edwin S. Porter, who was unavoidably absent, and the invited guests Mr. G. W. Landon and Mr. B. F. Porter.

Mr. Landon, of the Nicholas Power Company, Inc., was again called into service as toastmaster, being introduced by the president, Mr. F. M. Stoffregan, who informed him in a very graceful speech that he was "it." Though taken completely by surprise, Mr. Landon replied that inasmuch as the dinner was in FRONT of him instead of IN him, it was policy for him to take the job, though he felt that the audience, rather than himself, was "it." And then the fun began.

President Stoffregan made a speech of welcome and then presented a gavel to past president J. D. Basson, who made a neat response. Mr. B. F. Porter accepted a humorous introduction in good part and responded in kind. Treasurer J. S. Buchardt then followed with a presentation speech of a gavel to past president L. W. Bowen, who showed great appreciation. Vice-President Jos. LaRose made a vigorous speech and then gave way to J. D. Basson, who made a neat speech in presenting Frank Nealy with a fountain pen, which brought forth from Mr. Nealy some appreciative and serious remarks. Mr. George Bothwell brought the speechmaking to a close with a few appropriate remarks. The toastmaster closed the evening in a manner to indicate his appreciation of the honor done him and complimented the society upon the class of its clientele, which, he said, spoke for a most worthy organization.

Those present were:

President F. M. Stoffregan, Treasurer J. S. Buchardt, Vice-President Jos. LaRose, Secretary J. J. Hopkins, Director W. Smith, Sergeant-at-Arms J. Lazarus, Past Presidents L. W. Bowen, J. D. Basson.

E. H. Byrne, G. S. Bothwell, F. Boswell, J. Carlin, J. Clayton, H. Fuller, L. Hammond, G. Huntley, J. C. Kroessen, A. Lee, G. Mauro, C. A. Mills, H. J. McKinnon, F. E. Nealy, J. E. Robin, H. Rubin, L. Reed, J. Reisser, J. H. Richardson, G. S. Seiffert.

A Welcome Word From Another World

YOUR letter received. I wish to thank you for the button, card and labels which you sent. Thinking that perhaps you would be interested, I will take the oportunity to write you as regards motion picture operating in South Africa, which on the whole is rather poor.

The majority of the projectors are Pathé Freres, with a few American projectors such as the Powers, Simplex and Motiograph.

Most of the cinemas (foreign term for motion picture theatres) here are Café Bioscopes. The African Theatre Trust is the agent for all projectors in this part of the country.

As far as films are concerned we have a good supply. We have our own productions, but most of them are American products. The latest hits have been "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," "Madam Who?" "Zaza," and "The Broadway Lover." The latest have been "The Cinderella Man" and "For Husbands Only." African Films are releasing a big drama entitled "King Solomon's

THE CAMERA THAT ALWAYS WINS

That gets the pictures no matter how hard the conditions.

That has a new built-in dissolve, the most effective dissolve on the market.

That stands all kinds of hardships and rough usage without getting out of order.

That was used by the U. S. Government to make motion pictures of the Great War.

That is used by prominent explorers and educational film makers.

IS THE UNIVERSAL MOTION PICTURE CAMERA

This camera is the one-piece machine, every moving part being directly connected to one main casting. There are no bulky or protruding parts and every refinement of motion picture camera making has been built into this machine, combined with the ruggedness and strength that make the Universal stand up under treatment that would put other cameras out of business.

Considering the high quality of this camera, its many unique features, the price is surprisingly low.

Mines." But probably the biggest hit of our late films was "The Copper Mask."

Of course, motion picture operating in this country needs a lot of picking up. There are very few expert operators here with the exception of two who have had American experience. These two are my friend whom I came out with, and myself. As for myself, I learned cinema operating at Marcus Loew's first cinema and shortly after came out here.

Well, guess I had better close this short letter.

TOMMY KENYON.

180 President Street, Johannesburg, So. Africa.

P. S.—If you publish this letter, will you send me a copy, as MOTION PICTURE NEWS is not obtainable here.

Reply: It seems but a few weeks ago that we sent Tommy Kenyon's Anti-misframe League membership card, his button and a good supply of labels, and here he is back again with a letter of thanks. Not much wasted time on his end.

It's a long jump from Marcus Loew's theatre to a "cinema" in the bottom end of Africa, but we'll wager that Kenyon lost none of his experience in the jump. He is probably putting on shows with the Broadway finish, at least in so far as his equipment will let him.

When you get this copy of the NEWS, Kenyon, you'll realize that we saw the P. S. you tacked on to your letter and did as you wished. For that little act you can write us another letter and describe the insides of the projection rooms in your district. Is your room as completely protected against fire as ours here in the states? What kind of current do you use and how do you get it? Tell us more along the same line and perhaps we will send you another sample copy.

Of course, if you want the NEWS to come to you regularly—and you ought to have it—it is our idea that the subscription department would take pride in placing your name on the list for the munificent sum of $4 in New York money or its equivalent.

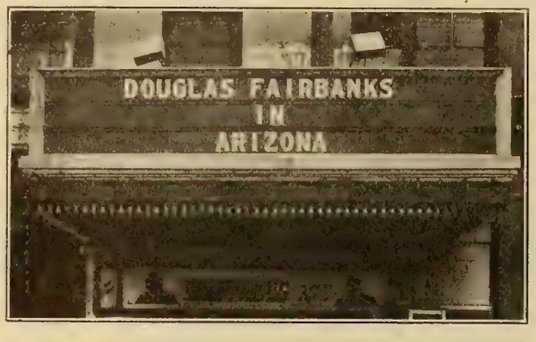
Attention—Pacific Coasters

"A. G." asks if the Pacific Coast States have passed laws requiring projectionists to take out state licenses. Will some of our friends on the Coast tell us what the conditions are in their territory. A. G., who is an experienced projectionist, is thinking of moving out your way and wants to be sure of his ground before getting that far away from home.

Interchangeable Metal Letter Signs

THE sign shown in the illustration was recently installed over the entrance to John Hunsky's Adams Theatre in Detroit. As set above the marquise the sign is 17 feet long and 42 inches high.

The letters are white on dark olive green porcelain finished metal blocks or plates, size 7" by 10".



The letters are quickly inserted into the channeled or grooved lines by shoving them upwards and then dropping them into the channels. Any change of program or an announcement may be accomplished by a porter and a ladder.

Made in any length desired the signs can also be furnished for any number of lines. Their upkeep cost is slight, since, due to the nature of the materials from which it is built there is little to wear out, no glass to break.

Two other signs of smaller size were erected on each side of the marquise at right angles to the larger one. The letters are of metal as is the sign itself.

These signs are a recent development of the Newman Man. Co., of Cincinnati, Ohio.

He Deserved His Loss

"THE origin of the fire was caused by the breaking of the film which was being shown at the time, and the operator being anxious to finish the film without interruption continued to run it, allowing it to fall to the floor as he unwound it.

"In this manner the film came in contact with the electric Rheostat, which was hot from the current passing through it. . . . It was but an instant until this loose end burst into flames.

"The damage to the Opera House . . . was nominal. The picture machine . . . was only slightly damaged. The greatest loss was sustained by the moving picture man, who stated he lost films worth several hundred dollars.

"At no time were the audience in great danger from the fire, as it was confined in the small projection room."

Thus reads a newspaper account of a film fire in one of the Western states. Fortunately for the industry, there are now comparatively few of these fires, and practically all are confined, as this one was, to the operating room. But nevertheless, it is cases similar to the one described above that may at some future date bring down upon the industry the wrath of the law-making bodies in our states and in our cities.

At the recent meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, Mr. Dana Pierce, of the Underwriters' Laboratory, characterized the motion picture industry as having been about as lucky as an industry could possibly be. And there is considerable to think about in his statement.

A Personal Word to My Brother Projectionists—

I have been through the mill and know all about the operating room troubles due to uneven and excessive film tension. You know this, too, and now I want you to know that you can cut out all this trouble by using my Even Tension Reel which I have successfully used in my own operating room for nearly two years before offering it to you. Tell the Boss it will pay for itself two or three times a year in the saving in lower sprockets, besides reducing other wear and tear. I give you my word as a Brother Projectionist that this is true. You will be amazed at the light, even tension. Just try a couple. They're guaranteed.

Fraternally yours,

Speed in Money Changing

Riviera Theatre Has Novel Change Device
After trying out a number of other makes the Riviera theatre, the handsome new Balaban & Katz picture palace on Broadway and Lawrence streets, Chicago, has installed two Lightning Change machines in the box office. These are declared to be the fastest change-makers on the market. Miss M. Hedeen, chief cashier at the Riviera, with Misses Lester and Irwin, can handle between 1,500 and 2,000 persons in one hour with the aid of the Lightning Change machines. The Lightning Change makers are simple in design and construction, it being necessary to press but one button to make change for any amount received. The change is delivered within easy reach of the purchaser at the window immediately he passes his money to the cashier. J. B. Koppel expressed himself as well pleased with the new apparatus.

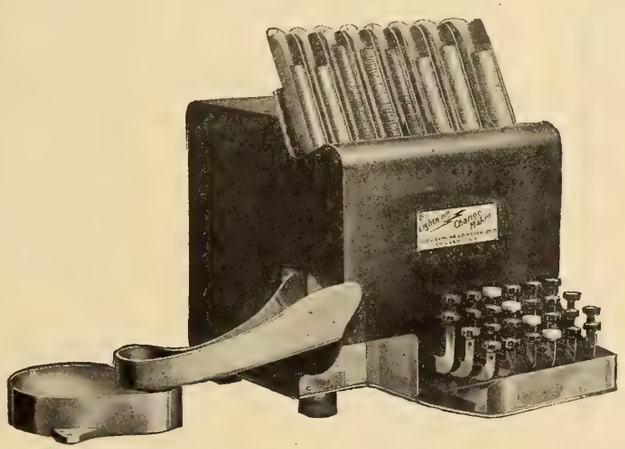
SIMPLY press a button and—Presto—the change comes jingling out into the metal cup, where it is easily scooped up by the patron.

Compare that with the old way—digging several coins out of a drawer—counting, handling them—pushing them across the counter to be scraped up by the purchaser with the risk of dropping them, keeping the line waiting—to say nothing of delays caused by mistakes which must happen when change is not counted mechanically.

The Lightning Changer counts and delivers change mechanically, at the touch of a button—saving brain work, mistakes from fatigue, arguments and delays.



It will make change for 1,500 patrons an hour, without error.

It takes no skill to operate; takes less experience than the old way. Takes little space—9½ x 12 x 13 inches—and weighs only 20 pounds—easily carried.

The magnificent new State-Lake Theatre, Chicago, recently opened to crowded houses, has installed two Lightning Changers after careful comparison with other machines.

In the United States there are about 12,000 motion picture theatres showing film day after day. That it has been possible to project the billion of feet of film before the millions of people without a single disastrous fire can be laid to the skill of the projectionist and the humor of the Goddess of Luck.

There is surely no danger to the audience in the theatre where the film is presided over by a projectionist. So much is proved by the number of film fires which take place in the projection room and are extinguished without becoming known to any of the audience.

But when the projector is "operated" by a man who acts as the one did in the above clipping, only luck can save the day. Thank goodness there are few "operators" even who will let the film run through the gate and out on the floor. Such actions smack of the olden days when the film was caught in a "gunny sack" or canvas bag.

A traveling showman was conducting the show which resulted in the "horrible example" quoted from a newspaper. Though he suffered loss he is not to be pitied. All of us can sympathize with the owner of the opera house in the "nominal damage" he sustained; we feel sorry for the man who loaned his projector for the show, but for the individual who had in charge the projecting we can only say "It serves you right." Where he lost merely his films, had it not been for those far-seeing gentlemen who insisted on fireproof booths, the men and women who were attracted to his showing might have suffered that which has no money equivalent.

No, Mr. Showman, there will be few to pity, but you will find thousands who will censure you, and rightly, too.

The minute you allowed your film to escape into the "open" you were guilty of the grossest neglect, and because of that should not be permitted to run another show until you had proved conclusively and to the satisfaction of all that you had mended your criminal ways. You are a distinct menace to the industry.

Flashes for Electric Signs

THE rapid strides of the Motion Picture Industry and the consequent competition among exhibitors did more for the development of mechanical and electrical devices for advertising purposes than any combination of causes. In fact, so insistent has been the call for "something new" from builders and managers of new houses that manufacturers have been hard put to keep up with the demand.

It can almost be said that a house is known by its electrical sign. This is more or less true, for a flashing sign before a motion picture theatre that is well executed and accurately functioned has the psychological effect of drawing crowds. The skyrocket sign of the Rivoli theatre in New York was considered a wonder when it was first brought out, and although it has been superseded in intricacy by several other theatre signs it still retains its beauty and its advertising value.

An electric sign without the mechanical equipment is a dead and lifeless thing. The heart of a sign, then, is in the flasher, and on the care with which the latter has been designed together with its dependability depend the success and drawing power of the sign itself.

A flasher consists in effect of a drum or series of drums, part of whose circumference is a metal, and the remaining part an electrical insulator. Strips of flexible metal called "fingers" bear on the circumferences of these drums. The fingers themselves are stationary in the majority of instances, and the drum revolves, being driven by an electric motor.

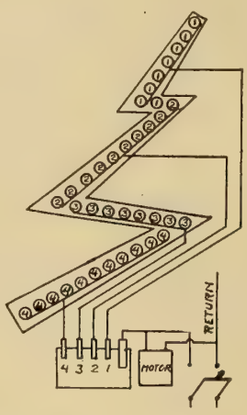
Electric signs and displays, in order to become effective, should embody a spectacular effect. With the modern flasher practically any movement and effect can be reproduced with electric lamps controlled by a flasher. There are many forms in use such as flaming torches, water falls, fountains, growing flowers, revolving wheels, building up and down effects, flashing word after word or words letter after letter, and other effects too numerous to mention. The various effects are obtained by a number of different types of flashers such as the on and off or color changing type, spelling type, script type, speed type, chaser type, and lighting type. By means of various sized contacts and various methods of gearing and different sized pulleys an unlimited range of speed can be obtained, thereby making it possible to reproduce almost any electrical effect.

The modern flasher is equipped with adjustable contacts so that effects can be changed to suit. The parts are interchangeable, and the flasher as it is made to-day, is a practical device.

One of the illustrations shows how simple a task it is to change or adjust the contacts in order to alter the action of a sign. After signs are up and in operation it is desirable very often to make some changes and as the cut shows, this act can be carried out with no other tool than a screw driver.

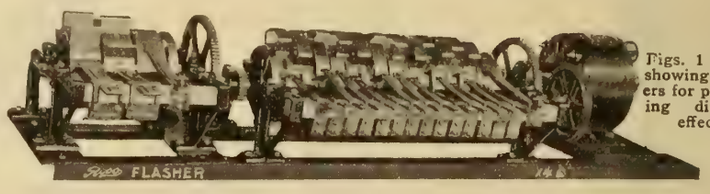
Fig shows the wiring diagram of a simple four streak flash of lightning carried out by means of a four brush flasher. Whatever the number of lamps used, each streak is connected up as one circuit, and as is usual in flashes of this and similar types one side of each lamp is connected to a "common return."

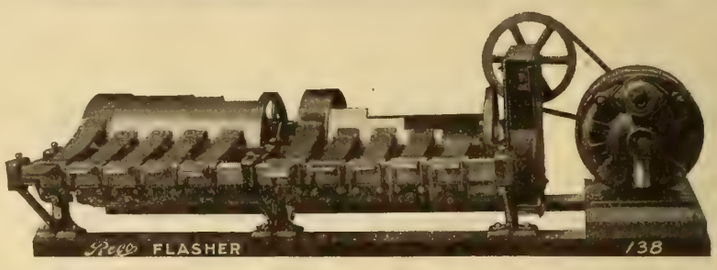
Although when seen in operation the flashing



they are not overloaded. It is well, also, to reset brushes from time to time as the constant make and break are bound to burn the contact surfaces. This is unavoidable but can be reduced to a minimum by frequent care and attention.

Thanks are due the Reynolds Electric Company for the loan of cuts to illustrate the foreging article.





Figs. 1 and 2 showing flashers for producing different effects sign which writes out a name in script appears to be intricate yet its system of wiring is extremely simple. Fig. while showing a sign of but four letters is a fair example of the "script" sign. Its diagram of wiring is about as himple as anything could be. Here each lamp, instead of a series of lamps, must be connected to a separate brush in such a way that the procedure from one part of the letter to another is made in the same sequence as would be followed in writing the same letter in long-hand.

Wiring diagram for script effect

Many cases have been observed where in installing a flashing sign, the theatre owner purchased one second-handed or used one which he had used at another house. With a competent electrician to oversee the installation the results should be satisfactory. But special attention should be given the brushes to make sure that in operating the new sign

Local 306 Examinations

IT was the privilege of the editor, through an invitation by Messrs. Kaplan and Rotker, to sit in at an examination of applicants for membership in Local 306 a few days ago. We were very much impressed, and favorably so, with the manner in which the examination was conducted. Surely a man who could not answer the practical questions the examining board put forward has no right in any projection room in New York City. We do not mean to infer that the questions were elementary or what is known as "cinches." Without exception they were the kind of questions which the projectionist might have to answer at any time in his operating career. Special attention was paid to the applicant's knowledge of local fire regulations. The examinations were conducted by Edward Wilson, assisted by J. P. Del Ross, Reuben Weinstein, Dave Gorden and Sam Simon.

IN the next issue under the heading of "Theatres Worth While" there will appear a complete description of a method which many theatres are using to keep their balconies filled. So successful has it been that in certain houses the balconies are preferred to the orchestra seats.

Illustrated Titles versus the Art Titles and What to Do With Them

By Irving Martin

Supervising Artist in Charge of Title Department of Thos. H. Ince Studios

THIS question of titles is and always has been the unsolved problem in motion pictures. Years ago—when pictures were first struggling for a place in the amusement business—producers soon found out that words were necessary, for explanatory and dialogic reasons, and they began to try every conceivable stunt to insert words into the straight flowing run of a picture in motion without any break in photography or tempo, that such action necessarily causes.

Tricks of all kinds were used without appreciatable success. Some tricks only proved themselves true in very special instances where the wording of the title and the tempo, etc. happily fitted the situation. The solution was then the consideration of each individual title, and to handle it the best way possible, taking into account all the circumstances surrounding that particular part of the story and action and relying on the knowledge of all methods previously used to handle similar titles, evolving new ideas when possible or when the occasion arose. This necessarily called for very special work for one man or a number of men and has proven itself too big a problem for most of the producers to follow.

A department made up of special artists, letterers and photographers is necessary, and each member must be of original ideas and extremely fast in his particular line of work, in order that too much time is not taken in titling a production. Most any of the larger producing companies, capable of supporting a department (which is expensive) produces several pictures each month, and generally not more than a week or less is given the title department to complete its work on any one production.

What follows? Anxious to secure some artistic result, most companies have art titles, which are titles, lettered or printed—white on black—and some decorations of an artistic nature added to make more pleasing the effect on the screen. That suffices in many instances—but does not necessarily fully satisfy all conditions. So, to attain as great a percentage of perfect titles as possible, decorated, illustrated, or tricked into the scenes of action that would exactly fit the occasion and hit the nail on the head, Mr. Thos. H. Ince long ago came to the conclusion that a very special department was necessary and having the idea that a perfect result would some day evolve from that department's work, was willing to undergo the tremendous expense of the experimentation. The results obtained have been no less than wonderful in many instances and a brand new form of analysis and thinking in regards this title situation has followed. Today the Ince studio is gradually nearing the goal—THE PERFECT TITLE.

Now what constitutes a perfect title?

A perfect title surely would be one that takes its place in the picture naturally without the audience being conscious of any break, either in the quality of the photography or flow of general thought that carries from one scene to another. A break in the quality of photography is meant as being a sudden change from a scene having all values of colors from white to black, including delicate halftones—to a title consisting of nothing but white letters on a black background, which immediately causes the screen to lose its depth and become flat or of a sign board nature. That condition is not desired and the screen must always maintain its depth and convey the idea that the photography does not stop when it is necessary to insert a title. What the photographic background should be that will convey this quality is the problem. That is what the Ince studio has tried to solve. How well it has been accomplished, can only be judged by the comments from the people who see their pictures, and that comment has been favorable up to the present time.

Ideas in backgrounds, novel and original, to motion pictures have been used to great success in this new line of endeavor at this studio. At times producing thoughts, dramatic and humorous, by suggestion or by more fully illustrating with pictures the meaning of the lettering. Occasionally the lettering also lends itself by trick means to bring out some point of interest more fully. The first attempt at the true titling of a picture years ago was to double expose the title in white letters on the bottom of the screen during the action of the scene. Then came the doubling of the letters between the heads of the characters as though they were actually speaking. Both methods, although theoretically good, did not pan out in the showing of the picture to an audience and did not have the proper psychological effect desired. Therefore it was deemed better to use a straight cut in title—white lettering on black background. Other methods were tried but proved unsuccessful as they did not cover every condition. The Ince title department has now evolved the idea that the thought is essential condition to satisfy and is now working on that hypothesis.

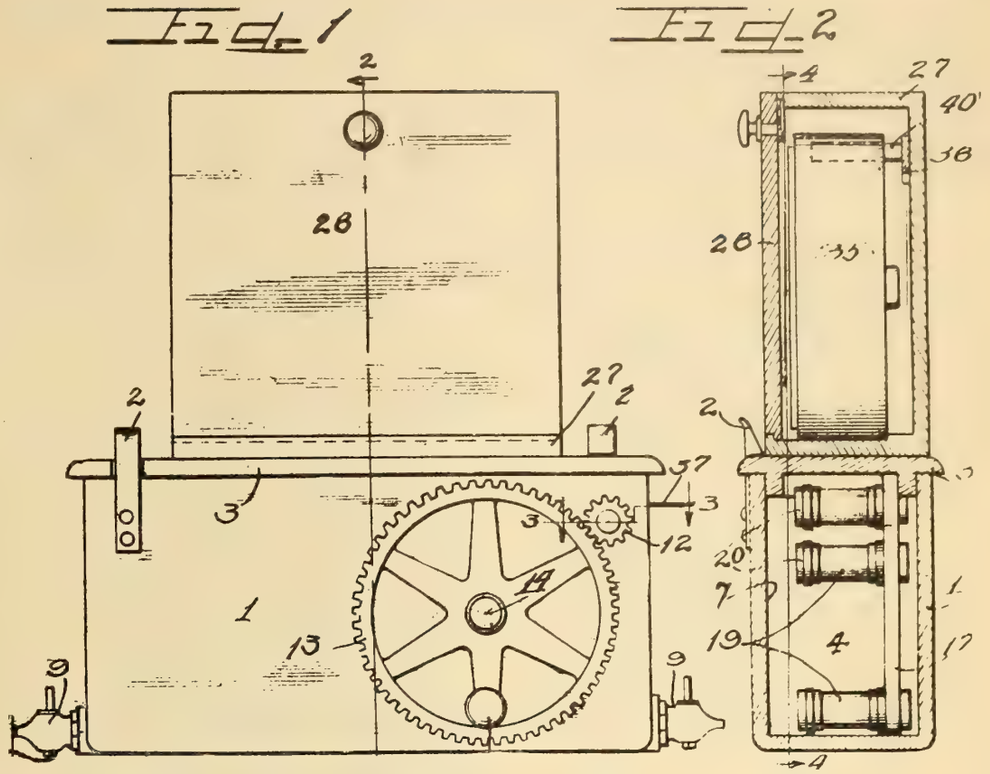
The abstract title is the easiest to decorate or illustrate, because the background will seldom interfere with the reading matter if handled in any kind of a tasteful way. The spoken title is the sticker, and many think it better to use the old method of not doing anything rather than take a chance on gumming up the lettering and thus having the audience lose the meaning of the title which may be of very delicate and important point to secure in order to properly tell the story. The Thos. H. Ince studio, however, has gone to considerable trouble and expense in order to educate its title department's artists in making such backgrounds that will not be offensive in any instance, and even go so far as to insert other ideas, that in many instances prove the success of the individual title, if it be explanatory, humorous, or dramatic. It is surely the most difficult and interesting form of illustration and calls for intense concentration on the part of the artist.

Accompanying this article we have reproductions of some of the Ince titles and they can tell more than words the problems and conditions that have to be satisfied.



A Unique Camera Accessory

IF reports can be credited the discouraging retaking of scenes on location is a thing of the past that is, as far as such retakes are the fault of the camera man. The device which has done away with failure because of tricky light, is the invention of Jackson J. Rose, who is known everywhere as "Jack" Rose, and who for many years was the feature camera man for Essanay.

This new device, by the way, is not the only one which Mr. Rose has brought out, as, while he was not photographing such stars as Charlie Chaplin, Frances X. Bushman, Bryant Washburn, Beverly Bayne, Henry Walthall and others too numerous to mention, has found time to perfect a number of novel appliances which increase the certainty and effectiveness of the camera.

His latest production is perhaps his best one as it practically eliminates all guess work on the part of the camera man as regards time, exposure, and the scope of view. The "Cinema Film Tester" as it is called on the patent application is a small aluminum box occupying but little space in the carrying case and which may be attached to any type of camera magazine in a few moments. The interior contains two compartments for developing and fixing solutions; an ingenious but simple carrying arrangement continued through the com-

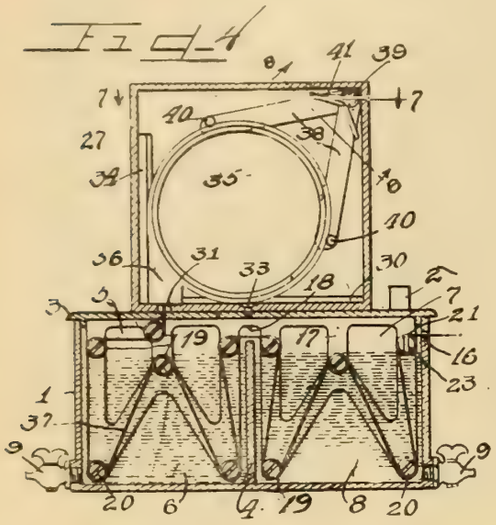
By attaching the "tester" to the magazine the cinematographer is enabled at any time or in any place, in bright sunlight, or under any other conditions, to develop and fix two feet of film from any part of the film on the camera for immediate examination in about five minutes. All this is accomplished by the simple turn of a small crank on the outside of the "tester."



The advantages of a device of this nature are obvious to the director and the camera man. Before, after or during the taking of any scene, whatever doubts may arise as to the results upon the film may be eliminated by a quick test. Not only is certainty of exposure and registration assured under fixed light conditions, but every change in exterior or interior light intensity or atmospheric density may be tested, thus making sure of the final results. Shooting a scene away from the studio, only to find upon developing it the following day or at any other time that it had to be done all over again is not an infrequent occurrence. Neither is it an unusual thing to destroy a set and rebuild it again when the film is developed. In fact all of the many mistakes that occur through errors in the camera man's judgment, should be things of the past if the Cinema Film Tester is used.

When asked for a few words as to what his invention would do, Mr. Rose said: "It is designed to replace that part of the cameraman's brain for the faculties of estimation, guess and photographic complications are situated."

American Society of Cinematographers is Organized

Technical Editor, Motion Picture News:

WE beg to infor you that the American Society of Cinematographers, organized January 8, 1919, and chartered by the State of Cailfornia, has now arrived at a point where it can announce its aims and purposes.

The preamble to our constitution will best explain our purposes:

We hereby organize the American Society of Cinematographers in order to bring into closest confederation and co-operation all—but only—those leaders in the cinematographic science, whose attainments and exquisite art therein are, and we believe will be, an incentive and encouragement to all other followers of the art, to strive for that preeminence of perfection entitling them to membership in this organization—thus advancing the art to a point where it shall become a national pride, an element of patriotism, and at the same time promote the interest and welfare and protect the rights of all who shall be so fortunate as to be called to membership."

Our Motto: Loyalty, Progress, Art.

Our Ideal: That membership in this society may become a mark of honor and distinction based on merit.

Membership in this society can be secured only by invitation, and every man is judged solely upon his record and ability as a cinematographer and his personal fitness as a man.

We submit this information to you so that you may know exactly who and what we are. We desire your support and wish to assure you that it will be our greatest endeavor to see to it that no man will ever wear the emblem of this society who does not fully merit it, so that we as a body can always stand back of our members.

Our membership at this date is composed of the following cinematographers:

Philip E. Rosen.	Albert G. Heimerl.
Charles Rosher.	Walter Lundin.
Homer A. Scott.	Chester A. Lyons.
Victor Milner.	Charles E. Kaufman
Wm. C. Foster.	Frank B. Good.
Joe August.	R. H. Totheroh.

Arthur Edeson.	Gilbert Warrenton.
Eugene Gaudio.	King D. Gray.
Fred L. Granville.	A. Scholtz.
Walter L. Griffin.	F. F. Baker.
J. D. Jennings.	Edward Kull.
Roy H. Klaffki.	Paul P. Perry.
Robert S. Newhard.	Henry Cronjager.
L. Guy Wilky.	Sam Landers.
T. G. Gaudio.	Lewis W. Physioc.
Hugh C. McClung.	John Arnold.
S. S. Norton.	George Rizard.
F. W. Jackman.	Happy De Pew.

The officers are Philip E. Rosen, president; Chas. G. Rosher, first vice-president; Homer A. Scott, second vice-president; W. C. Foster, treasurer; Victor Milner, secretary.

Yours truly,

(Signed) VICTOR MILNER.

Meeting Musician Mirskey of Du Bois, Pennsylvania

SEVERAL days ago, I had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Mirskey, Musical Director of the Avenue Theatre, Du Bois, Pa. In the course of the conversation, I came to the realization that I have a man before me of exceptional talent and aggressiveness. Du Bois is a small town, of 20,000 inhabitants, but musically, it is further ahead than many of our larger cities. Although the theatres of which Mr. Mirskey is Musical Director of, are daily changing houses, a perfect musical interpretation is always featured along with every film production. I am writing this story about Mr. Mirskey, to serve as an illustrating example of what an aggressive musician could do for his theatre, his patrons, and himself. The exact reproduction of Mr. Mirskey's story follows:

"I have in my library all complete "Schirmer's Edition," almost complete "Fischer's Edition," with exception of his old stuff in which piano parts had no cues and arrangements were unsatisfactory for modern demands. Complete "Berg's Incidental," four sets Schirmer's, "Breil's" complete "Luz," complete "Cinema," complete "Hawke's Edition," lots of Schuberth," "Cundy-Bettoney," "Jacobs," "Stern," "Feist," etc. Besides I have about 750 European editions, Odeon, Apollo, Bosworth, Taven, Ricordit, etc., mostly unknown in this country, and all Belwin's publications.

"My orchestra is composed of two violins, Cello, Bass, Piano, Harmonium Clarinet, Trumpet, Trombone, and Tympani, and many a time I am at the end of my inventive wits to find enough dramatic music for pictures without becoming monotonous, a sickening condition for myself, and I suppose for the rest of the orchestra, not to speak of the audience. Unfortunately, we change pictures daily with exception of big features which enjoy three or four days' run. I review the picture in the forenoon (we play evenings only), and prepare my cue sheet in about two hours, then arrange the setting, marking the starts if not the beginning, on each part. As you see my library is about as large as an average leader would have, and yet I have big difficulties. I cannot very well use operatic excerpts as it is so cumbersome to have on the stands the whole selection or Ballet Suite and play some 16 measures out of it. In a theatre where week stand is the rule, the Musical Director can sacrifice his library by cutting up his music and making more or less permanent setting, but I could not afford to do this, besides I would not have the necessary time. Your article about the monotony in music as written for the "News" hits the nail, but where is the remedy? For the last three days we play SALOME with Theda Bara. On the screen we have "Musical Score by M. Rubinstein," but since I did not get the score, I had to make the setting myself. The picture calls for very heavy dramatic music, minor, mostly oriental character. I have used all the Rimsky-Korsakow, Tschaikowsky, Barmotine, Grieg, Rubinstein, Goldman, Delives etc., and still it is not enough. The picture finishes with a Furioso-diabolic scene, very heavy. I use "The Scotch Poem" but it does not fit satisfactorily. Another difficulty I encounter is the keeping of my orchestra intact. My musicians are treated royally. I am on the best of friendly terms with all of them, but playing only evenings, the salaries are insufficient for good musicians so that I am getting only fellows who are for some reason or other out of a job, and they usually stay only long enough to make sufficient money for the fare to the next town, or, I get some lemon, whom I would like to fire after the first number and whom I give two weeks' notice instead, out of sheer pity. I am here three years now and the patronage and management are praising our little orchestra all the time still we cannot make it. And I really presume that the town is simply too small to support an orchestra as I would like to have it."

Mr. Mirskey, the musician of DuBois, Pa.

The above is a conclusive proof of how some of our aggressive musicians are laboring to create artistic and dignified musical environments in the theatres where they are employed.

Here is a man of exceptional ability, aggressiveness and willingness to perform and do the right things. He is handicapped in every possible way through lack of good musicians, lack of time, and a town too small big ambitions.

Mr. Mirskey is a graduate of the Russian Imperial Conservatory at Warsaw. He has played for years at the "Music Comedy" in Warsaw, and studied under the famous Sevzek, the teacher of Kubelick and other famous musicians. He has been the band master for three years on a White Star Liner, and was orchestra leader at the Secor Hotel at Toledo, Ohio, and also at the Hippodrome theatre of the same city. He was also director at the Valway theatre, at Waldosta, Ga., and now he is musical director of the Avenue theatre, at Du Boise, Pa. It seems to me that a man of Mr. Mirskey's calibre, after so many years of experience and proof of his knowledge, should deserve a little better treatment from destiny. I am sure there are many managers throughout the country who are looking for a man of Mr. Mirskey's ability, and believe it would be to their advantage in trying to take him out of this small town atmosphere and have him perform something real and big.

I am making the above suggestion in a spirit of "BETTER MUSIC FOR THE FILM," the famous slogan used by my friend, Mr. S. M. Berg.

Mildred Manning Wrote It

THE management of the Kinema Theatre, Los Angeles, Cal., at which was presented "The Westerners," featuring Mildred Manning in a dual role, this week announced that the song, "The Girl of the Golden West," being contemporaneously presented by a quartette at the theatre, was written and composed by Mildred Manning as inspired while performing the character of Molly in "The Westerners."

Musical Review of Latest Compositions

1—"In the Jungle," by Otto Langey. For scenes depicting strange surroundings caused by losing one's way, or passing through a jungle. (Oliver Ditson.)

2—"Dreamy Amazon." A concert number as well as a Novelty Syncopated Waltz. (Gilbert and Friedland.)

3—"When You Hold Me in Your Arms," by Henri F. Klickmann. A dreamy waltz of international renown. (McKinley Music Co.)

4 "Play Me That Tune" a fox trot from New York's Broadway hit "The Lady in Red" now playing at the Lyric Theatre. (T. B. Harms.)

5—Carl Fischer's of New York, have just issued a loose-leaf Motion Picture Collection compiled and arranged by Lester Brockton. The collection consists of compositions depicting certain scenes and would prove indipensable to Motion Picture musicians.

6—Henry Burr Music Corp. of New York have just published two song hits, "Burmah Moon" by Lieut. Gitz Rice, a beautiful Oriental fox trot, and the other "Thoughts of You," by Larry Briers, a melodious waltz.

7—"My Desert Fantasy," by Robert Reid, a one step and fox trot. The new dance sensation. (A. J. Stansy Music Co.)

8—"Toreador," by M. L. Lake, a fox trot on the Toreador Song worked against rag melodies and counter melodies. A Hit! (Carl Fischer.)

9—"Fame and Fortune," by F. L. King. A March of unprecedented musical merits. (King Pub. House, Canton, Ohio.)

10 "Oh! How She Could Sing," the song made famous by Van and Schenck. (Harry Von Tilzer.)

11—"Bleeding Hearts," by Sol. P. Levy, a floral poem. It is one of the simple broad beautiful melodies, which however frequently repeated seems to fascinate and charm the listening ear more and more. (Belwin, Inc.)

JUST a word of appreciation for the many congratulations upon the improvement in the Music Section since the change in our page size.

We are striving to better this department each week—and results show we are succeeding.

Write or use the wires

We will be glad to send you the name of some theatre near you, or a list of metropolitan motion picture houses that have installed

THE ESTEY THEATRE ORGAN

It has been a big factor in the success of some of the shrewdest managers in the country. It is unquestionably the best music for motion picture theatres, and is used exclusively in some high-class film playhouses.

Talk with some of the owners.

It can be built to fit any theatre, large or small, and the cost varies according to the size you need, and how it is placed. Without cost, we will send an expert to look at your theatre and advise you.

Fond Du Lac Theatres May Be Used in Publicity Campaign

THE fruitful results of the co-operation given by the moving picture theatres in war time through the four-minute speeches has laid the foundation for community work along similar lines. Fond du Lac is likely to be one of the first cities to sense the opportunity for service of this character and to ask it. The most perplexing problem facing Fond du Lac now is the housing problem. The expansion of established industries and the opening of new factories has created a demand for more than a thousand new wage earners to be brought to this city during the next four months. With a hundred families clamoring for houses now it is believed it will be necessary to stage a publicity campaign to impress people with the necessity of building at least 500 houses. This campaign, it is understood, will include the four minute speeches which were so effective in the Liberty Loan drives. And if it does they will be the means of helping put this new community drive across and thus emphasizing the value of the moving picture house as a community institution.

Chicago Sees Ball Game Between Rival Exhibitor Nines

THE first rival game in the schedule of the local motion picture league was played recently at Lincoln Park, when Ascher Brothers piled up a score of 23 to 7 against the Lubliner and Trinz nine.

With four practice games to their credit, closely contested between their north and south side managers, the Ascher athletes went into the diamond, confident of victory, backed by further assurance from Harry Ascher that if things didn't go as they should, he'd wire the White Sox for help.

Joe Wurtzburg, Wm. Charleson, Ed. Nikoden, Bennie Cohn, Henry Jasper, Lawrence Cone, Harry Ascher, Weinschenker, and Max Ascher played for Ascher Brothers, and Sam Trinz, Saxe, James Keogh, Julius Trinz, Al. Haynie, H. Luftgarten, Eddie Trinz, Eddie Dloughy and Dan Lubliner lined up for Lubliner and Trinz.

George Lang, R. Myers, Guttman, Jerry Glasser and Charles Jacobson composed the utility.

Rain Hurts Springfield Business

WHAT promised to be a big Sunday—June 22—for Springfield, was knocked right in the middle of the head by a terrific rain and thunder storm, which sprang out of nowhere about the middle of the afternoon. A little rain would have been great, would have brought in the autoists and the park crowds, but this rain kept up from 3.30 p. m. until 3.30 a. m., and knocked the managers out of hundreds of dollars. Any one but an exhibitor will tell you the downpour was "worth a million dollars" —to the crops.

Heard in Detroit

FIRST NATIONAL FILM EXCHANGE has moved to 505 Film building, former office of the General Film Company. It will be one of the most elaborate headquarters in the big building that houses all the exchanges in Detroit.

MILES GIBBONS has been appointed manager of the Fox Exchange.

FIRST of the Rothapfel programs was seen at the Colonial theatre and the program created considerable favorable comment.

"VIRTUOUS MEN" had its local premiere at the Majestic last week to excellent business. Henry Santrey, who played the Majestic for several seasons as a soloist, returned for one night during the engagement and the house was packed to the doors.

THE Michigan state legislature 2has shelved state censorship for this session at least. As months, censorship in Michigan is a dead issue for the time at least. The bill was buried in committee.

CHARLIE CHAPLIN in "Sunnyside," has been seen this week in both the Adams and Madison theatres, two of the leading downtown houses and both owned by John H. Kunsky. It was the first time a Chaplin picture has been shown pre-release in Detroit in two big houses on the same dates. Manager Phil Gleichman took advantage of the occasion at his Broadway Strand by booking in "Mrs. Charlie Chaplin" (Mildred Harris) in "Home."

W. S. BUTTERFIELD, of Battle Creek, has purchased some property in Fort Wayne, Ind., and will remodel it for pictures and vaudeville.

"THE SPREADING EVIL" began a run at the Grand Circus, a small downtown theatre, Sunday, to tremendous business after an extensive advertising campaign. Warren and Cohen, who control the Grand Circus, have changed the policy of this house from daily change to extended runs of pictures that can be advertised.

COLDWATER, MICH., exhibitors now have to meet church competition. The M. E. church there has installed picture machines and is offering a program twice weekly.

TWO new and large downtown theatres are to be erected in Detroit. The Allens, of Toronto, have secured property here and an architect is now drawing the plans. Marcus Loew, in conjunction with Warren and Cohen, will erect a 2,500-seat house on Woodward avenue just north of Grand Circus park.

Springfield to Have a New Modern Theatre—Will Seat 2,460

ROY TROXELL, Springfield real estate man, handling the new theatre proposition locally for Seymour Marks and J. K. Friedman, will not give any information on the subject. Harris Hickox, owner of the property on which the theatre will be built, is more generous and will talk about it. Mr. Hickox says Marks assures him that the site is satisfactory, and that the lease will be signed on or before July 1, the day and date set for the beginning of the rental on the property. The new theatre will seat 2,460, according to plans now drawn, will be three stories in height, have seven storerooms and many offices, and will be the last word in modern theatre construction. Besides a symphony orchestra, two organs will be installed; also an ice cooling system. Entrance will be on Fifth street in the middle of the building, with exits on the Capitol street side, so that incoming and outgoing crowds will not meet. According to the terms of the lease, a building valued at $200,000 must be put up to secure the property. The site in question is the southwest corner of Fifth street and Capitol avenue, one-half block north of the Majestic theatre, and directly across the street from the Princess. The building is to be ready by late Spring, 1920.

Metzger Visits Seattle

G. A. METZGER, Western Division manager for the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, and Mrs. Metzger were recent visitors in Seattle from San Francisco. Mr. Metzger announces that he has just negotiated a lease of a new motion picture theatre in Salt Lake City, the cost of the building being $750,000. Mr. Metzger represented Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal, in making the deal, which involves a rental of $193,000. Metzger stated that Universal now controls large theatres in eight of the largest cities of the country and that it was possible that Mr. Laemmle might become interested in some other Northwestern cities and in Seattle, although it has some of the finest theatres on the coast.

De Ward in Seattle

MR. DE WARD, formerly manager of the "Apollo," Everett, Wash., has been made advertising and house manager of the "Colonial," Seattle.

More and more men and women are writing they are coming to the big Film Convention and Movie Ball which will be held in Seattle, July 16 to 19 inclusive. Sure they want to talk over matters of importance. They also want to have a good time. Since their wives know one can have a good time in Seattle, they are coming along, to watch them and have a good time, too. Are you coming?

Central States Edition

In Lansing Picture Houses

THE entire stock of player rolls carried by a local music house were purchased by E. Clement Jarvis of the Orpheum and Garden theatres, the other day when he was picking out rolls for his Cremona organ. He added 1,027 new rolls to his already large collection through the purchase. He can now follow nine out of ten music plots from his own collection.

"AUCTION OF SOULS" was shown before large houses for an entire week at the Bijou theatre, starting June 26. "The Yankee Doodle Girls in Berlin," with some real live girls, follows.

MANAGER CLAUDE CADY of the Colonial theatre has arranged a big bill for July 6, 7 and 8. He shows Marguerite Clark in "Three Men and a Girl," and Fatty Arbuckle in "A Desert Hero." Sessue Hawakawa follows in "A Heart in Pawn."

THEDA BARA was shown to big houses at the Plaza theatre June 30, July 1-2, in "A Siren's Song." A Big V comedy completed the program.

MANAGER E. CLEMENT JARVIS of the Orpheum and Garden has just booked four Pricilla Dean pictures through the Universal service. The star was shown at the Orpheum to pleased crowds last in "Wild Cat of Paris."

THE first time Mitchell Lewis was ever shown to Lansing movie fans was at the Empress theatre, June 26, 27 and 28. He was seen in "Jacques of the Silver North," a Select picture which has some of the greatest snow scenes ever put on a screen.

MANAGER J. W. NEIL of the Empress theatre showed "The Challenge of Chance," featuring Jess Willard, the day previous to the fight, the day of the Toledo "financial affair" and the day following. His advance play was divided between sport and theatre pages of the local paper. He arranged for a special report on the progress of the fight, read during the showing the Fourth.

A NEW Universal serial, "Elmo, the Mighty," has been booked by Manager Jarvis for the Garden theatre. It stars Elmo Lincoln, who was the star of the Tarzan pictures, and Grace Cunard. It is in 18 episodes and will be started the latter part of July.

MGR. JARVIS will make a second run of "Sunnyside," the third Chaplin film, early in the fall. It was shown at the Bijou theatre here the first half of the week of June 22, with a vaudeville show as the second half of the "double bill."

CHARLES RAY in "Greased Lightning" is booked for showing at the Colonial theatre, July 2 and 3. He is mighty popular with the Colonial fans.

Here and There in Fond du Lac

GERALDINE FARRAR opened a three days' engagement at the Orpheum in "Shadows" on Monday, June 23, drawing good business in spite of the hot weather and counter attractions. Dorothy Dalton in "Quicksand," the celebrated Goldwyn picture, was at the Orpheum Thursday, Friday and Saturday, June 26, 27 and 28. This program was followed by Mary Pickford in "Capt. Kidd, Jr.," June 30 and July 1 and 2.

NORMA TALMADGE in "The Probation Wife" drew good business at the Orpheum, June 16, 17 and 18. The patronage of Wm. S. Hart in "Money Corral" at the Orpheum, June 19, 20 and 21, was disappointing.

THE BIJOU is providing its patrons with excellent programs right through the hot season. On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, June 23, 24 and 25, Marguerite Clark was seen in "Come Out of the Kitchen," while on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, June 26, 27 and 28, Chas. Ray in "The Busher" was the attraction.

THE IDEA THEATRE provided its patrons with an excellent program for the week ending Saturday, June 28, which included the following: Monday and Tuesday, June 23 and 24, Emmy Wehlen in "The Amateur Adventuress"; Wednesday and Thursday, June 25 and 26, Carmel Myers in her latest picture, "The Little White Savage"; Friday and Saturday, June 27 and 28, Clara Kimball Young in "Cheating Cheaters."

HERE is the big program offered recently by the Davison theatre, Waupun, Wis.: Friday, June 20, Norma Talmadge in "De Luxe Annie"; Saturday, June 21, Pauline Frederick in "A Daughter of the Old South," supplemented by Fatty Arbuckle in "Camping Out"; Sunday, June 22, Wallace Reid in "The Man from Funeral Ridge"; Tuesday, June 24, Enid Bennett in "Happy Tho' Married," supplemented by the 11th episode of Houdini.

PATRONS of the Scenic theatre at Waupun had an opportunity to enjoy a good program during the week ending Thursday, June 26, as follows: Saturday, June 21, Bert Lytell in "Faith"; Sunday, June 22, Anita King in "Petticoats and Politics"; Tuesday, June 24, Harry Morey in "Silent Strength"; Wednesday, June 25, George Walsh in "Luck and Pluck"; Thursday, June 26, Pearl White in "The Lightning Raider."

ALICE JOYCE in "The Lion and the Mouse" is an early attraction scheduled for the Scenic theatre at Waupun.

With Dubuque Exhibitors

JOHN MASON, Anna Luther and Leah Baird were featured at the Liberty theatre on Wednesday, June 18, in "Moral Suicide." Average Wednesday audiences witnessed this picture.

THEDA BARA is coming in again in Dubuque. The Princess theatre did fine business Wednesday and Thursday, June 18 and 19, when "When Men Desire" was presented.

"THE FIGHTING BROTHERS" with Pete Morrison, and a Billy West comedy, "The Rolling Stone," brought fairly good business to the Star theatre on Thursday and Friday, June 19 and 20, in spite of the intense heat.

CHARMING BILLIE RHODES made herself more popular than ever at the Dreamland theatre on Wednesday and Thursday, June 18 and 19, when she appeared in her latest offering, "The Love Call."

ON Thursday, June 19, the Family theatre presented "Cheating the Public," the William Fox production. As an added attraction "Hearts and Saddles," with Tom Mix, was shown.

ONE of the most popular players on the Goldwyn program, in Dubuque theatres, is Mae Marsh. On Friday and Saturday, June 20 and 21, she came to the Princess theatre in "The Racing Strain," and while only average audiences were in attendance on Friday, the Saturday crowds more than made up for them. A Harold Lloyd comedy was shown in addition to the feature.

FAMOUS PLAYERS Success Series picture, "Are You a Mason," starring John Barrymore, came to the Grand on Friday, June 29, and attracted good houses.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS fans welcomed the opportunity to see their favorite again in "A Good Bad Man," which was shown at the Star theatre on Saturday, June 21. It drew better than a lot of first-run films turned out these days.

BERT LYTELL appeared at the Dreamland theatre for two days on June 20 and 21, in his new Metro production, "The Lion's Den." The young actor is now a top notch star at the Dreamland and can always be counted upon to furnish good, clean entertainment.

EDITH STORY came back to the Liberty theatre on Saturday, June 21, after several months' absence, in "The Silent Woman." Fay Tincher in "Some Job" furnished the comedy element.

"HER COUNTRY FIRST" with Vivian Martin was the Saturday, June 21, attraction at the Family theatre. Miss Martin succeeded in holding the undivided attention of her audience. A Billy parsons comedy added the finishing touch to a very good bill.

TOM MIX is a player who never fails an exhibitor, according to the views of Managers Boyle of the Dreamland, Wilbur of the Liberty, Yount of the Family, and Bower of the Star. When his pictures are shown they can always count on satisfying their patrons. Mix's latest play, "The Wilderness Trail," was presented at the Dreamland theatre on Sunday, June 22.

SUNDAY, June 22, witnessed the debut of George Larkin at the Star theatre. He was presented in "Go Gettem Garrigan," a likeable play in five acts.

IT SEEMED as if everyone in Dubuque has seen Mabel Normand in "Mickey" when it played here a month ago, judging from the crowds in attendance, but on Sunday, June 22, the first day of it's return engagement, the house was packed. During the balance of the week "Mickey" enjoyed much popularity.

"PARDNERS THREE" with Enid Bennett, was the Sunday, June 22, feature at the Grand. It was voted an unusually good picture.

WILLIAM S. HART proved to be a capital drawing card at the Family theatre on Sunday, June 22, where one of his recent pictures, "The Border Wireless," was shown.

News of Springfield Theatres

WILLIAM FARNUM in "The Man Hunter," Corinne Griffith in "The Adventure Shop," Madlaine Traverse in "Gambling in Souls," Montague Love in "The Hand Invisible," and Anita King in "Whatever the Cost," were shown at the Royal during the week of June 22-28 to excellent business.

HOUSE PETERS in "Thunlerbolts of Fate" had two very good days at the Princess, June 25 and 26.

ETHEL CLAYTON in "Men, Women and Money," and Wallace Reid in "You're Fired!" will be the Vaudette attractions for the week of June 29-July 5.

"TRUE HEART SUSIE," with the Griffith stars; "The Fear Woman," with Pauline Frederick; "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," with the Lasky stars; "The Avalanche," with Elsie Ferguson; "The City of Comrades," with Tom Moore; "Square Deal Sanderson," with W. S. Hart, are all coming to the Gaiety in the order named.

BEN ROVIN is putting over some good things daily at the Amuse-U.

LOUIS KERASOTES begins two new serials this week, "The Perils of Thunder Mountain" and "Elmo the Mighty." "The Perils of Thunder Mountin" will be shown each Sunday, and "Elmo the Mighty" every Friday. The program for the week of June 22-29 follows: Sunday, "The Last Outlaw," the serial, and two-reel L-Ko comedy; Monday, William Russell in "Hobbs in a Hurry"; Tuesday, May Allison in "Peggy Does Her Darndest"; Wednesday, Chapter 9 of "The Carter Case," with Herbert Rawlinson and Marguerite Marsh, and Monroe Salisbury in "The Eagle"; Thursday, Monroe Salisbury in "The Light of Victory"; Friday, Elmo Lincoln and Grace Cunard in "Elmo the Mighty"; Saturday, Eddie Polo in "Riding Wild."

WILLIAM FARNUM in "The Lone Star Ranger," sustituted for George Walsh's "Puting One Over," at the Lyric, June 22 and 23. The fans hadn't seen Farnum for some time, and business was pretty good. Viola Dana in "Some Bride," and Marion Davies in "The Burden of Proof," were also at the Lyric for the week of June 24-28.

"THE TIGER'S TRAIL" is nearing the end of its run at the Capitol, where it has been pleasing big crowds for many Sundays. Other attractions shown at the Capitol lately that have pleased were: Douglas Fairbanks in "Headin' South," Tom Moore in "Go West Young Man," and Jack Pickford in "Tom Sawyer." The week of June 23-29 reveals the following attractions as coming to Manager Maisel's Washington Street house: Gail Henry in "Stung"; Francis Ford in "The Silent Master"; Jack Pickford in "Freckles"; "A Royal Democrat," Triangle production; Enid Bennett in "A Desert Wooing," besides the usual supply of comedies, travelogs and educational pictures.

THE CAPITOL has booked the Texas Guinan two-reel pictures, and the new Mack Swain comedies, starting them about July 16.

THE CHATTERTON is in the hands of the decorators.

W. W. WATTS and several other local exhibitors will attend the Motion Picture Convention in St. Louis, June 25-28.

BARNEY ROSENTHAL, manager of the Universal Exchange at St. Louis, was in Springfield, Saturday, June 21, looking things over, meeting his customers, and promising some good pictures for early showing.

THE GAIETY started off great with its week's run of Fairbanks in "The Knickerbocker Buckaroo" and Charles Chaplin in "Sunnyside."

THE MAJESTIC will look like a new theatre when the decorators have finished with it.

DOROTHY DALTON in "Other Men's Wives" was shown at the Vaudette for four days—June 22, 23, 24, 25—and business was extremely good. Bryant Washburn and Shirley Mason in "Putting It Over," followed the Dalton play.

KITTY GORDON in "Plaything of Passion" had three dandy days at the Princess, June 22, 23 and 24. The picture was the best in which she has ever been featured in since becoming a "United" star.

Gathered in Green Bay

GREEN BAY motion picture houses experienced a week of competition, commencing June 23, from a street carnival held about a mile from the central business district, in which the theatres are located. As a result of the carnival, receipts of the picture houses were reduced.

NAZIMOVA, in the Metro picture, "The Red Lantern," was the best attraction given here this week. She played June 23-24-25 in the Orpheum theatre. The work of the star was approved by the audiences, but praise for the character of the picture was not as general as for the actress. With a carnival company drawing patrons from the theatre, the crowds were not as large as the picture warranted.

LARGE numbers of admirers of Harold Lockwood saw the late star in the last picture by him, which will be produced here on June 25-26. The film, "A Man of Honor," from the Metro studios, was shown in the Colonial theatre.

MARGARITA FISHER played in the Pathe production, "Molly of the Follies," June 26-26, in the Royal theatre.

MAE MURRAY appeared at the Grand theatre in the Universal film, "The Scarlet Shadow," June 26-27-28-29.

GEORGE M. COHAN was presented by Manager H. K. Timm in the Orpheum theatre in the Artcraft picture, "Hit the Trail Holliday," June 26-27-28-29. The picture and the work of the star met with the approval of the patrons of the house.

"THE AMATEUR ADVENTURESS," a Metro film, was given in the Colonial theatre June 22. Emmy Wehlen played in the leading role.

RUTH CLIFFORD played in the Universal picture, "Midnight Madness," June 27-28, in the Royal theatre.

"EXTRAVAGANCE," a Paramount film, in which Dorothy Dalton is featured, was shown in the Colonial theatre June 27-28.

VIVIAN MARTIN appeared in the Paramount production, "Little Comrade," June 23-24, in the Colonial theatre.

THE Royal theatre offered Frank Keenan in the Pathe film, "Todd of the Times," and a Fox comedy, "Roaring Lions in the Midnight Express," June 23-24.

Seeing Shows Around Dubuque

"HIS OWN HOME TOWN," featuring Charles Ray, attracted a large number of theatre-goers to the Orpheum theatre at Lancaster, Wisconsin, on Wednesday, June 18, when it was presented. On Thursday, Friday and Saturday Nazimova enjoyed a highly successful run in "The Red Lantern," declared by her Lancaster admirers to be her "best yet." On Monday Hale Hamilton appeared in a Metro production, "That's Good," and on Thursday, June 26, Sessue Hayakawa was featured in "The City of Dim Faces."

THE Sunday, June 22, program at the Plaza theatre at Manchester, Iowa, was "Charge It To Me," with Margarita Fisher. On Monday and Tuesday the program consisted of "Fame and Fortune," with Tom Mix, and "Topics of the Day." On Tuesday Lillian Walker came to the theatre in one of her recent pictures, "The Embarrassment of Riches."

"HOBBS IN A HURRY," with William Russell, played at the Orpheum theatre at Lancaster, Wisconsin, on Saturday, June 28. One of the recent Harold Lloyd comedies was shown also.

VIVIAN MARTIN made quite a hit with the fans of the Plaza theatre at Manchester, Iowa, where she appeared on Thursday, June 19, in "Her Country First." On Friday that splendid Metro production, "Faith," with Bert Lytell, was shown. The Pathe serial, "The Lightning Raider," starring Pearl White, has been booked and an episode will be shown each Saturday.

TOM MOORE, a general favorite at the Star theatre at Decorah, Iowa, was presented there on Thursday and Friday, June 20 and 21, in "A Fool and His Money." A Harold Lloyd comedy was shown on Thursday and a News Weekly on Friday in connection with the feature. On Saturday Enrico Caruso made his debut at the Star in "My Cousin." "Mickey" enjoyed a successful two days' run on Monday and Tuesday.

"THE WHIP," that popular melodrama of sporting life, came to the Grand theatre at Anamosa, Iowa, on Saturday, June 21. The picture was shown to enthusiastic and large houses.

ON Friday, June 27, "The Eyes of the World," Harold Bell Wright's famous production, was shown at the Cozy theatre at Dyersville, Iowa. Two performances were given, one at 7:15 and the other at 9:15 p. m.

THE Sunday, June 22nd, program at the Plaza theatre at Dyersville, Ia., consisted of a feature, "The Rough Lover," with Franklin Farnum and Juanita Hanson and a Screen Magazine. "The Wine Girl" with Carmel Meyers was shown Tuesday.

"THE EYES OF THE WORLD" was presented at the Grand theatre at Anamosa, Ia., on Monday, June 30th. There was but one show at 8.30 o'clock. Prices of admission ranged from 60 cents down.

Here and There

"CAPTAIN COURTESY," a Paramount Success Series picture, starring Dustin Farnum, was shown at the Grand on Sunday, June 9th, to excellent audiences. Dustin Farnum is enjoying more than his usual popularity in Dubuque these months, and every picture featuring him, is largely attended.

JANE GREY, who made a pronounced hit in Dubuque some months ago as the heroine of the second part of "The Birth of a Race," was featured at the Princess theatre on Sunday, June 8th, in "When My Ship Comes In." Miss Grey's fine acting in the previous production established her reputation as a capable actress, and this fact brought all her old admirers to the Princess on Sunday.

"THE HUNGRY HEART," a screen adaptation of the novel by David Graham Phillips, came to the Family theatre on Sunday, June 8th, and was shown to full houses of enthusiastic theatre goers. Pauline Frederick, the star, who has been absent from the Family screen for some months, received favorable mention for her clever portrayal of the leading role.

ONE of the best pictures shown at the Princess theatre in months, in the estimation of scores of Photoplay fans, was "From Headquarters," a Vitagraph production starring Anita Stewart and Earle Williams, which came to the theatre on Monday and Tuesday, June 9 and 10. Both of the stars have a large following here and the fact that they appeared again in the same picture, packed the theatre both days.

COLUMBUS CITY, Indiana, is to have a new picture house.

E. A. SPRAY has leased the Boyer Opera House of Kendallville, Indiana, to H. H. Hornbeck, owner of Orpheum and Lyric theatres, Lafayette. Mr. Hornbeck will assume control of the theatre July 1st and will make many improvements on the building.

B. E. MUELLER of Decatur, Indiana, has opened an up-to-date 350-seat theatre in that little city.

THE week of June 4 to 11 was a week of good features and excellent business at the Plaza theatreat Manchester, Ia. On Wednesday, June 4th, Charles Ray was presented in "The Claws of the Hun," with Pathe News as a program filler. Thursday's bill was "Uncle Tom's Cabin" starring Marguerite Clark, with the tiny star playing the roles of Topsy and Little Eva. Ethel Barrymore was featured in "The Divorcee" on Friday, while on Saturday a Mack Sennett comedy and an episode of "The Iron Test" with Antonio Moreno shared the honors of the day. Mary Miles Minter held the boards on Sunday in "The Intrusion of Isabelle," while George Walsh proved himself as comical and as agile as ever in "On The Jump," the Monday program. "Jacques of the Silver North" with Mitchell Lewis was shown on Tuesday, while "The Girl Who Came Back" and a Harold Lloyd comedy closed a highly successful week.

TOM MIX played at the Liberty, Sunday, June 22, in "Fighting for Gold," and as usual, the theatre wasn't big enough to hold the people who turned out to see him.

THE STAR theatre has booked "The Tiger's Trail," the first episode of which was shown on Monday, June 23.

They Say in Chicago That—

MANAGER DITTMAN of the Strand and Majestic theatres, Freeport, Illinois, recently used a most unique piece of advertising for "Don't Change Your Husband." Every doorknob in the City of Freeport was decorated with an announcement of the picture's three days' run which played capacity houses at every performance.

FELIX MENDELSOHN, assistant manager of the Goldwyn, Chicago office, has just returned from a trip down state and reports great success in placing their hot weather features.

"THROUGH THE WRONG DOOR," featuring Madge Kennedy will have its first showing in Chicago at the Orpheum theatre, July 11. Manager George Moore will use special exploitation features.

THE CAPITAL FILM COMPANY have acquired the original Metro Studios, located at 1025 Lillian avenue, Hollywood, California, where they are producing at this time Neal Hart and Al Jennings features.

RALPH PROCTOR, the adonis of the film world, has been plying with great rapidity between New York and Chicago in the interest of his organization. When last seen, the gentleman was headed for St. Louis where he undoubtedly proved a dazzling light.

LESTER CUNEO, as handsome and engaging as ever, has been doing the juvenile lead in "Liberty Bell," the musical skit playing in Chicago. One would hardly associate the gentleman with the curses—foiled against villain, who played opposite Harold Lockwood on the screen.

THE sales force of the Capital Film Company, Chicago office, has been greatly increased preparing to cover this large field thoroughly and quickly in the interest of their forthcoming releases featuring Neal Hart, the miracle man of the movies, and Al Jennings, the bandit king of the screen.

R. C. SEERY of the First National, Chicago office, is spending his vacation in Northern Wisconsin.

ABE BALABAN and Sam Katz are sending postal cards to their friends from Los Angeles, They are out getting ideas for their new theatre.

S. J. GREGORY, owner of the Illinois theatre, Chicago Heights, has erected a new theatre in Hammond, Indiana. The theatre will seat two thousand people.

WILLIAM WEISS, salesman for the First National, Chicago, is enjoying a week's vacation in Milwaukee.

HARRY WEISS, manager of the First National, Chicago, is busy booking "Whom the Gods Destroy," "Choosing a Wife," and "At the Price of Innocence," to the city exhibitors.

A. L. LYON, the new manager of the Peoples theatre, Forty-seventh and Ashland, has made a real picture theatre out of what was formerly a losing vaudeville house. At this writing he is figuring on putting in a Jess Willard picture for a solid week's run.

C. E. SMITH has resigned as manager of the Metro Film Service, Chicago, to look after the interests of the Big Four locally.

JACK GRAUMAN, an exhibitor of Milwaukee, has been appointed manager of the Chicago Metro office.

MANAGER BOYLE, of Fort Madison, Iowa, has installed one of the new Fulso rewinds, which is the first one to be installed in the State of Iowa. It was made by E. E. Fulton, Chicago.

ADELINE LINNELL, who has been in touch with famous people of the screen on the Coast, is giving illustrated five-minute talks at motion picture houses on glimpses of studio life, personal close-ups of the stars, and how they work under leading directors—including incidents of their activities between scenes, and views of an unusual and intimate character pertaining to private life—all of intense interest to the motion picture audience.

J. B. COVIL, owner of the Majestic theatre, East Moline, Illinois, reports a broken arm due to cranking his "fliver."

H. H. YOUNG, manager of the American Film Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, was a Chicago visitor recently.

MRS. A. J. DRUM , of Moline, Illinois, has purchased the Werner theatre of Peru, Illinois, and has rechristened it the Riviers.

GROUND has been broken in LaSalle, Illinois, for a 2,400-seat theatre. P. B. Newman will be the manager.

B. C. Clements, formerly manager of the Jackson Park theatre of Chicago, has been appointed manager of the new theatre in the course of erection on Sixty-third street just east of Halsted.

IT IS reported that Thomas Beatty, owner of the Linden theatre, Sixty-third and Halsted, has purchased the E. A. R. theatre from E. A. Rysden.

HAS anyone noticed that strange looking square black thing on Eddie Eckles' desk? No —well, when you enter the private sanctum sanctorium of Mr. C. Eddie Eckles in the future, save your breath and converse with the gentleman in the language of the screen—for why—Safety First, so "watch your step."

A THEATRE to cost approximately $500,000, with a seating capacity of 4,500, will be erected at Madison street and Kedzie avenue, Chicago, by Lubiner and Trinz, the well-known exhibitors. The plans are being prepared by the architect, Walter W. Ahleschager, who has built a number of their houses. The theatre, when completed, will be one of the largest and most beautiful in the city.

THE crowd on the sidewalk in front of the Consumers building recently was not occasioned by a fight or a fire; it was a reception committee welcoming Fred J. Beecroft of the Motion Picture News, New York office, who passed through Chicago on his way to the St. Louis convention. Luckily for F. J. B. he has good broad shoulders. The cracks they received from admiring friends were audible for a block.

F. L. SMITH, of the Capital Film Company, did the honors of his organization at the St. Louis convention, incidentally explaining to the exhibitors who attended all about the new Neal Hart and Al Jennings features.

STANLEY HATCH, a Chicago representative for the Gold Fiber screen, has resigned to join the Select forces at the St. Louis office.

"Open Your Eyes"

(Warner Brothers—Seven Reels)

ANOTHER one of the social hygeine pictures directed against the so-called prudish notions of false modesty that prevents parents from taking their children into their confidence at an early age and showing them the "mysteries" of life so that no false steps may be taken that would bring on dangerous sexual diseases.

That is the theme and theatres looking for this sort of subject to show can be sure that this picture covers the topic very thoroughly. Of course there is no entertainment in a production of this sort. It is purely health propaganda and the introductory descriptive matter on the film conveys the impression that the United States Public Health Bureau was interested with Warner Brothers in preparing this picture. The continuity is bound to keep you guessing as there are so many young persons introduced and they nearly all become afflicted.

A fake "specialist" who advertises is brought out in the picture, as is also the regular practicing M. D., who never advertises, if that's any recommendation. The photography is poor in many spots and the theme may do some good by showing to the young people the blessed advantages gained in making their physical good health the first perquisite to future happiness.

Offered as a clinical picture it is good propaganda, but don't make the mistake of offering it as entertainment for your regular film fans.—Tom Hamlin.

"Three Ford Educationals"

(Distributed by Goldwyn)

THE three latest Ford Educationals are "At the Crossroads," a glimpse of the inmates of the Federal Prison at Leavenworth, Kansas. "The Fable of the Olive and the Orange," in which the culture and the marketing of the olive and the orange are presented in full detail; and "School Days," a trip through a modern industrial school, where vocational training goes hand in hand with academic study.

"At the Crossroads" presents an atmospheric caption as an opener stating that the prison itself looks like a modern banking institution. It is built of white limestone instead of the proverbial dull grey. Then we are taken through the various shops. Entertaining side-lights as to the method of keeping records, the working of the Bertillion system, and the following up of old offenders, are interestingly presented.

"School Days" is an interesting number since it presents students being given a sound training in the different trades. Forge work, carpentering, cooking, sewing, modeling, and draughting are some of the subjects taught. In all these Fords are worth a bright spot on any exhibitor's program. The subject matter is interesting, the photography is exceptional, and these departments are emphasized with praiseworthy captions. Humor is used when it is needed.—Laurence Reid.

"The Solitary Sin"

(Solitary Sin Corporation—State Rights—Six Reels)

A SOCIAL hygiene educational six-reeler with a story involving three young men, who are first pictured in their boyhood days and later at marriageable age. One is pure because the father has taken him through several hospitals to register upon his mind the horrible effects of "sin." The parents of the other two boys refrained from warning and educating them, and as a result one youth becomes crazy from early excesses, and the other becomes diseased from later indulgences, while the pure boy marries happily. The moral is "parents warn your children." Three romances are shown in the picture which is well directed. An eminent physician and surgeon and also a quack doctor figure prominently in the story. If this is a theme you like for your theatre you can depend on this production filling the bill, as it handles the subject in a manner that displays no vulgar or extremely morbid scenes.—Tom Hamlin.

"The Breath of a Nation"

(International—Judge Rumhouser Cartoon Comedy—Educational Films)

HERE you have a topical subject full of action and ridiculously funny from start to finish. It will not offend the average Prohibitionist either. When the Judge's buxom wife orders him to hear a temperance lecturer he runs afoul of Silk Hat Harry's newly-installed "soda fountain" cafe, a la cabaret. The Judge wonders why it is so popular and saunters in to learn the cause of the hilarity. The mixer has a sort of secret "kick" which he uses in his drinks and that explains it. The antics of the temperance lecturer and the arrival of the Judge's wife who does a Carrie Nation stunt of smashing is side splitting. When a stray mouse licks a wasted drop of the "soda" from the floor it starts out to whip a cat and the cartoonist provides the feline. A crackerjack filler anywhere. The film, not the "soda."—Tom Hamlin.

"Why Beaches Are Popular"

(Mack Sennett—One Reel)

THE pulchritudinous appeal of Mack Sennett's bathing beauties is sufficient reason why the California sands are popular. For an Easterner it is almost worth a trip to that distant state to meet in the flesh what he has only known in cold celluloid. They have a big following, these girls. And why not, when they bedeck their symmetrical figures in daring and dashing costumes? And they are very easy to look at—oh, very easy.

Mr. Sennett tells us that they represent what clean living and the joys of the bath will do. Well, the Roman girls destroyed a city—aye, a nation—by intriguing the days of Caesar, Pompey, Antony, et al. Will the Sennett girls destroy a state? In New York at the premiere of "A Yankee Doodle in Berlin" and a close-up of a few of the girls in person, they very nearly succeeded in wrecking the Broadway theatre. This is significant of the parallel drawn above.

"Why Beaches Are Poular" presents a number of the pippins from the Sennett orchard cavorting about the California sands. It is a sort of side issue of the feature and tells in no uncertain terms why Germany lost the war according to Mr. Sennett. Is it any wonder the Kaiser, Willie, Hindy, and Ludy are vamped out of victory when they see Marie Prevost, Harriet Hammond, Phyllis Haver, Alice Mason and the other charmers in all their pulchritudinous appeal?—Laurence Reid.

"Hearts and Flowers"

(Sennett-Paramount Comedy—Two Reels—Released June 22)

HE was the handsome leader of the hotel orchestra and she was the eccentric flower girl. He treated her rough until he discovered a note left by a joker which stated that she had a fortune coming to her. But when the wedding ceremony was started he discovered that the fortune was a myth. Her three big brothers took an active part in the chase that ensued. The comedy is well mounted and directed and possesses a slender plot to give the proper excuse for the many real active comedy situations. The ensembles are good to look at both in the dining room and on the beach. It can be safely branded as a clean fast-moving high class comedy fit for any theatre and portrayed by a good all 'round cast, providing a lot of amusing entertainment and hearty laughs.—Tom Hamlin.

"Wee Bit O'Scotch"

(International Hooligan Cartoon—Half-reel Educational)

HERE is where Happy Hooligan is a Scotland soldier and his General orders him to capture the whole German Army single handed so that he (the General) could get all the glory. It was a big order but not for Happy.

After dodging cannon balls which persistently chased him in circles around No-Man's Land he fell into a shell hole. When a troup of Germans rush up he steps out and does the "Shimmie" for them. They thought he was a female woman and this brought out the entire German Army who gazed upon his alluring wriggles in rapt admiration. He dis-arms them and marches them to headquarters. The star is as perfect in his part as the pen and ink of a famous cartoonist could make him and it is well directed and ridiculously funny.—Tom Hamlin.

Index to Complete Plan Book and EXHIBITORS' BOX OFFICE REPORTS

EDITOR'S NOTE—Exhibitors will find here a complete list of all feature pictures for the current quarter arranged alphabetically as an index to The Complete Plan Book for this period, naming the picture, the producer, the star, the release date, and designating the issue of Motion Picture News which contained the original review.

The following also contains our reviewer's opinion encompassed in a brief single line and gives the comments of exhibitors who have shown the picture and forwarded their opinions. And we also publish a final line fairly summarizing a consensus of all opinions received on each picture. As many of the exhibitors do not comment on every picture (merely checking it Big, Average or Poor), we arrive at the consensus not only by the actual comments made and published, but are also guided by the reports from exhibitors who have made no actual comments, but have merely checked the box office value of the picture.

All the pictures mentioned are five-reel features, unless marked otherwise. Serials are reviewed also. At the conclusion of this department will be found the "Flash-Backs," being comments on films released prior to April 6, 1919.

"PAID IN ADVANCE"
(JEWEL-UNIVERSAL)

A Big Melodramatic Klondike Production

A MELODRAMATIC story of the Klondike portrayed in a faithfully realistic manner by a cast of clever principals and an army of extra people. The star does some of the best work in her career and the direction and settings are both correspondingly good. Virile action, many thrilling fights, and a neat little love element is interwoven in the story. Excellent photography is displayed on the many splendid exterior scenes. It has many intense moments and the suspense is keen.

She is persuaded to go to Dawson City as a nurse, but finds that her employer is keeper of the dance hall. And in her final choice of becoming his mistress or a dance hall girl she mounts a table and offers herself to the highest bidder. A drunken owner of a prosperous claim wins her and the big scene is where he decides to become a real man and cleans out the dance hall.

The action is fast and the thrilling activities finally focus into a quiet and pleasant happy ending. Nothing to offend unless your audience is exceptionally squeamish.

This is a picture that should draw big and thoroughly entertain the first run audiences and should also pull in the high class neighborhood houses and wholly satisfy unless you have a very prudish audience. In the popular and family theatres it should pull strongly and please mightily and in the theatres catering to the laboring people it should pull enormously and be a riot as a picture.—Length, 6 reels.—Released July 6.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Dorothy Phillips, the star in "The Heart of Humanity," appears in another big Canadian story at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. It is written, directed and produced by Allen Hulubar, director of the first production.

"Paid in Advance" is the title of this Jewel attraction and the action takes place in Western Canada and the Klondike. It is described as a thrilling melodrama of the gold-rush days of 1897 and Dorothy Phillips is said to have scored a tremendous success in the role of a beautiful young girl persuaded to accept a position in Dawson City to act as nurse. Her employer is the unprincipled owner of the notorious dance hall and tells her that all the dance hall girls are called nurses up there. She is frantic.

Forced to choose between becoming his mistress or throwing her lot with the other dance hall girls she makes a big decision and offers herself to the highest bidder. Many thrilling fights and intensely dramatic scenes are registered throughout this fast moving production, it is said, and this was but one of the big moments.

The "cur" of the camp wins her in the auction by offering his valuable claim and outbidding all the others. But the "cur" was also the coward of the camp and when threatened by the proprietor he cravenly yields possession of the girl. She stings him and ignited the slight spark of manhood in the "cur" when she scornfully taunts him by crying, "Oh, if you were only a man."

This awakens him and then things happen in real lively fashion. He cleans out the dance hall in short order in his anger and after that he manages to redeem himself so that he is worthy of the girl who had grown to worship him with a great love. The cast in support is said to contain a remarkable array of big names. Even Priscilla Dean, a star in her own right, appears in a striking character in "Paid in Advance."

SUGGESTIONS

Your big bet in exploitation if you have this picture booked is to capitalize the name of Dorothy Phillips, as she received so much publicity as the star in "The Heart of Humanity." And another good name to draw is Priscilla Dean. Miss Dean is a foremost star in her own right and has an important role in "Paid in Advance."

Every time the title is mentioned you should have a descriptive line as follows: "The thrilling melodrama of the Klondike." Otherwise many will think that this picture is along the war theme because of your tie-in with "The Heart of Humanity" picture.

Dorothy Phillips is star in "Paid in Advance," a Universal release

CATCH LINES

It was cash and carry for the high bidder and the prize was a pretty girl. See "Paid in Advance," with Dorothy Phillips at the ———theatre.

To be won by the coward and drunkard of this Western mining camp was her fate. See "Paid in Advance," starring Dorothy Phillips, at the ——— theatre.

Her taunt awakened all the latent manhood in him, although it was but a small remaining spark. See "Paid in Advance" at the ——— theatre with Dorothy Phillips.

PROGRAM READER

"Here I am boys. I am offering myself to the highest bidder," she cried gayly, although she was suffering bitter anguish.

"What am I bid?"

And the first bid was ten thousand dollars.

It was a crowded Klondike dance hall in Dawson City, 1897.

And she was the pure innocent girl called "The Angel."

Can you imagine a more dramatic situation?

Dorothy Phillips has a daring role in "Paid in Advance," and she makes it a sympathetic and lovable character. This is her latest Jewel production coming to this theatre next week.

It was a choice with her of finally becoming the mistress of the dance hall proprietor or taking a chance on some other man. She felt that no man in the world could be any worse.

"THE AVALANCHE"
(ARTCRAFT)

A Big Production with a Big Theme

A DRAMATIC PRODUCTION of an intensely human story with a moral which registers. This is a big picture with a big theme, and the star is wonderful in both roles and is supported by a most excellent cast. The skillful direction and splendid settings display the limit of artistic endeavor and the continuity is clear and shows careful editing. The photography and laboratory work is in keeping with the calibre of the picture.

Inheriting a taste for gambling she is determined that her fatherless daughter will be brought up in different environments, and after the girl escapes from the convent the mother sends her to New York to become the ward of an old respected friend. The girl marries, and when the mother marries a New York gambler she is horrified to find that the handsome young lady from Long Island who has been losing so heavily is her own daughter.

The intense moments are many and there is a double tragedy with the daughter and her husband re-united at the finale. The sympathetic appeal and suspense is maintained all through the picture.

A strong puller for any sort of an audience anywhere, but particularly strong in the big first run houses. It will assuredly entertain any audience immensely and has an appealing angle for women. This production will stand a longer run than the average good picture. It will also register as big with the labor audience as it will with the elite.—Length, 5 reels.—Released June 29.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Elsie Ferguson is coming to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her newest Artcraft production, "The Avalanche." This is described as an intensely human story with a tremendous moral and was written by Gertrude Atherton.

Under the direction of George Fitzmaurice it is stated that this is the most wonderful production of Miss Ferguson's screen career, and she appears in two impressive roles in the picture.

Helene has inherited a taste for gambling and her mother is determined that the daughter shall be raised in different environments. When the child becomes a young lady and escapes from the convent the mother sends her from Europe to New York City to become the ward of a respected friend. The young girl marries, but becomes lonesome when her husband is away on a long trip and visits a gambling house where she loses all her savings and pawns her jewels.

Her mother had married again and came to New York City. Her husband was the proprietor of this same gambling house and the mother is horrified to discover that the young woman pleading so dramatically to her husband for more time on her I. O. U.'s is her own daughter.

It is at this point that many of the very heavy dramatic moments occur. There are two tragedies and some intensely thrilling action.

When Helene discovers that the wife of the gambler is her mother and that she has made the supreme sacrifice to save her daughter she seeks her own husband, who has returned, and confesses her great loss at gambling, also telling him of the inherited trait which she knows has now disappeared entirely, washed by the blood of her mother and cleansed by her own bitter experience.

Prominent in the cast with Elsie Ferguson are Lumsden Hare and Warner Oland.

SUGGESTIONS

If you book this picture you have an excellent opportunity of cashing in on the many prominent names. Gertrude Atherton is very favorably and widely known as a writer. Elsie Ferguson is prominent on both stage and screen. And the Artcraft brand is a well advertised name. Warner Oland is well known as a heavy man. But don't forget either that you have a strong title. "The Avalanche" means heavy action and is descriptive of the theme.

Those that go in for lobby decorations could introduce the gambling paraphernalia generally borrowed from the sheriff or chief of police. That Miss Ferguson in reality plays three roles in this production is worthy of exploitation. As the settings are so splendid the photographs and paper should be likewise strikingly attractive and would therefore urge that a profuse display should bring them in.

Elsie Ferguson in "The Avalanche," her latest Artcraft picture

CATCH LINES

She was a gambler. Her jewels were pawned. Then her husband returned. See "The Avalanche" at the ——— theatre.

The mother made the supreme sacrifice to insure her daughter's happiness. See "The Avalanche" at the ——— theatre.

PROGRAM READER

It was her life or her daughter's salvation and she made the usual mother's sacrifice. This was a tremendous moment in an active life filed with sorrow although surrounded by wealth.

The daughter had inherited the terrible gambling taint from her mother and the mother had been marked with the curse by the grandmother. And the line of ruined homes along the trail was simply appalling.

And when prospective ruin touched her own daughter because of the gambling trait the mother was aroused to action. And her method of avoiding a tragedy was to invoke two other tragedies. And she valiantly arose to the supreme heights in this powerful drama in an intensely human manner.

Elsie Ferguson portrays most faithfully the roles of both mother and daughter in her latest Artcraft production coming to this theatre next week.

It is entitled "The Avalanche," and Gertrude Atherton wrote it. Lumsden Hare and Warner Oland support Miss Ferguson.

"YVONNE FROM PARIS"
(AMERICAN-PATHE)

Stage Story is Mild and Marshmallowy

QUITE a number of the producers are moving in the cycle of stage stories of late with the American people leading their rivals. The other day they presented Margarita Fisher as "Trixie from Broadway," and now they have followed with Mary Miles Minter as "Yvonne from Paris." This piece is a much milder offering than its forerunner, there being hardly any semblance of plot and characterization.

Yvonne runs away from a tyrannical aunt in Paris and comes to New York where she meets the greatest theatrical producer. But before she finds success she must needs be introduced as the most naive, innocent girl who ever trod the Paris boulevards. American lounge lizards and French Apache dancers shadow her for three reels before the most celebrated playwright saves her and the happy ending.

A few discrepancies creep in which are not in harmony with the characterization. Since when have Broadway managers become gullible? One has billed the blonde Yvonne all over town and on the eve of her premier he dares to risk his show by dismissing her for a brunette Apache. Fortunately for him aunty turns up with the proper credentials. Miss Minter adorns her role with plenty of grace and charm.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

Scenario by Frank Howard Clark.
Directed by Emmett J. Flynn.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Mary Miles Minter, the piquant American star, will be seen at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest comedy-drama entitled "Yvonne from Paris." This is said to be one of the best pictures in which she has appeared, as its central figure is ideally suited to her personality. It presents a delicious story of the stage and its complications are warranted to please the most exacting spectator. "Yvonne from Paris" was written specially for Miss Minter by Joseph Franklin Poland, one of the leading scenarists, and Emmett J. Flynn, the star's director these days, has succeeded in giving it a worthy presentation.

Miss Minter carries the role of Yvonne Halbert who runs away from her tyrannical aunt in Paris and makes her way to America via the steerage. David Marston has a contract for her appearance in New York, and Yvonne thinks it is delightful to impersonate herself. Naturally she doesn't tell him that she is the real Yvonne through fear of her aunt. So rehearsals start but the little dancer is not acquainted with the sordidness of the world and she is saved in the nick of time by the author, Lawrence Bartlett, who has fallen in love with her. Yvonne nearly loses her position when a Parisian Apache dancer, Cecile, emphatically states that she is the real Yvonne. Fortunately the aunt arrives and presents the proper credentials, and the Apache is exposed as a fraud. And so Yvonne consents to be the wife of an author. And her star in America shines brilliantly.

The highlights can well be imagined, or better yet, seen at the ——— theatre. Miss Minter is surrounded by a competent supporting cast including Alan Forrest, J. Barney Sherry, Bertram Grassby and Rosemary Theby.

SUGGESTIONS

If the previous Mary Miles Minter pictures were popular at your house advertise "Yvonne from Paris" as the latest delectable hit in which the captivating star appears. Advertisements written in the form of an invitation to meet Miss Minter again at your theatre would be attractive and if you have a mailing list of regular patrons play up her return. She has a decided following.

As regards the story you can go the limit on boosting its theme. It is a tale of the footlights—of a young Parisian dancer who comes to America to create the same sensation as in the French capital. You should arouse a lot of interest in her exploits in New York. She came unaccompanied and dangers lurked on every side. Feature this angle and bring out how she avoided them.

Mary Miles Minter in "Yvonne from Paris," her latest American picture distributed by Pathe

Play up that it offers the star an attractive role—the sort of role that sets off her colorful personality to splendid advantage. If you cater to a regular fan patronage you might mention the author's name. He is well known in the screen world and has turned out a number of offerings including several for Miss Minter in the past. Bring out the members of the cast. Rosemary Theby, J. Barney Sherry, Alan Forrest and Bertram Grassby are familiar to every steady picturegoer.

PROGRAM READER

Yvonne might have been a happy girl if her life wasn't presided over by a tyrannical aunt. Though she was the pet of Paris she was wholly miserable because Aunt Marie deprived her of every pleasure. The spirited girl resolved to run away and come to America and see what life had to offer her there. She was booked anyway to appear in New York so when she arrived in the metropolis her managers signed her for an American debut. But Yvonne didn't want to appear as herself through fear of her aunt. It was a great frolic she thought, to impersonate her own self.

Rehearsals started and things were getting on handsomely until Yvonne, unwise to New York's sordid life, very nearly stepped into the danger path.

CATCH LINES

Her aunt was a mean, horrid, old thing. The young dancer ached for pleasures when the theatre was over. But aunty packed her off to bed. One day she made up her mind to run away to America. She had a contract to appear there, anyway. How did she fare? Did she find life a bed of roses? See Yvonne from Paris."

"THE UPLIFTERS"
(METRO)

Will Entertain in High Class Neighborhoods

A SATIRE on the so-called parlor Bolshevists in New York City that paints the moneyed men with generous hearts and immaculate in body while the propagandists are pictured as selfish in heart and filthy in body. The picture will amuse some persons, entertain others, and appear very nonsensical to many. But it is well directed with a perfect balanced cast in support of dainty May Allison. Most of the scenes were taken in the studio with but few exteriors.

The story is a sort of travesty and the picture tends towards comedy-drama. There is a slight love element and the happy ending. The young heroine is in a tremendous predicament. She is forced to decide whether she will accept as husband a clean young man of wealth or a filthy older man of poverty.

This picture will draw above the average in an elite neighborhood and will be a sure-fire bet to amuse and please a high brow audience. It should draw average and get by generally in the first run houses. It will not pull so heavily in theatres catering to a family or popular audience nor will it please the majority of these people as a picture. And in a strictly working class neighborhood they are quick to resent ridicule and it would possibly irritate instead of entertain the majority in these labor audiences, although the picture is not really directed against them or their class.—Tom Hamlin.

THE CAST

Hortense Troutt .....May Allison

Saul Shilpick, Sr.....Alfred Hollingsworth
Harriet Peebles Cull.....Kathleen Kerrigan
Elsa .....Caroline Rankin
Larry Hoden.....Howard Gaye
Larry's wife.....Lois Wood
Story by Wallace Irwin.
Scenario by George D. Baker.
Directed by Herbert Blache.
Photographed by Eugene Gaudio.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Wallace Irwin's Saturday Evening Post story, "The Uplifters," has been screened by Metro with dainty May Allison appearing in the star role as Hortense Troutt. This photoplay will be shown at the ——— theatre on ——— of ———week.

A pretty stenographer is Hortense Troutt, hitting the keys in a high-class office, with the son of her employer madly in love with her.

While attending an "uplift" lecture in lower New York she absorbs much of what commonly passes for the so-named "Bull-Sheviki" doctrine. And when chided for arriving late at the office the next morning she roasts the capitalists and quits.

The woman lecturer prevails upon the new convert to do housework in her home and convinces the now enthusiastic Hortense Troutt that she would thus be helping the great cause of the suffering slaves of industry. She calls her "Comrade," but no wage is provided, only a bare living for the girl. The kitchen work grows more heavy as the long-haired ones are entertained, and the little stenographer and maid of all work is compelled to typewrite many speeches in her "spare" time. And she gives $49 to a male comrade so that he can buy a suit of clothes before he weds her.

But when another new "convert" appears and proves to be the live, alert and wealthy son of her former employer, and when she finds that her Bull-Shevist suitor was already married, she quits the toil, the cause, and all the comrades, and elopes with this young man whom she really loved.

This picture is a satire on the parlor propagandists and is said to present in an entertaining and amusing style the actual selfishness of many of the complainers and the eal generosity of some of the successful men.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have this picture booked you can depend upon it that many of your people have read the story by Wallace Irwin in the Saturday Evening Post. Therefore you should capitalize that. And also use the name of the star (May Allison) as she has a following also. Don't let your people think that this is a heavy anti-Bolshevist dramatic offering but feature the fact that it is a satirical travesty on economic propagandists and an entertaining comedy built around the so-called parlor "Bull-Shevists."

An advertisement addressed to "Bolsheviki—I. W. W.'s—Radical Socialists" inviting them to a gabfest anent the rights of Hortense Troutt to leave the kitchen of the parlor propagandists and fly on Cupid's arrow to the realms of the hated capitalists, should attract attention.

May Allison in her latest Metro Picture entitled "The Uplifters"

PROGRAM READER

But he loved her and even became a Bolshevist convert to be near her. She was an enthusiastic parlor propagandist, but was soon relegated to the kitchen. It was there that this wealthy youth found her and persuaded her to elope with him.

This was against all the doctrines of the Bolshevists and the combination of capital and labor united by ties of love did not appeal to the propagandists.

May Allison, the pretty stenographer in "The Uplifhters," certainly had a lot of work cut out for her dainty hands when she quit her job and joined the care-free crew. This is the story by Wallace Irwin that appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. It has been screened by Metro and will appear at this theatre next week.

The appeal of the propagandists won her over, but only temporarily. She became a drudge without even earning the right to be called a wage slave. For the propagandists paid her no wage at all. But they called her "comrade." And she was satisfied to do her bit for the down-trodden until the clean young man representing "capital" came down among the propagandists and rescued her from her own folly. And Cupid did the trick.

CATCH LINES

The parlor propagandists won her in the parlor and propagated her into the kitchen where she became a wage slave without the wage. See May Allison in "The Uplifters" at the ——— theatre.

She liked to be called "Comrade" but brilliant conversation did not repay her for the kitchen drudgery. Cupid won her to the capitalistic side. See "The Uplifters" at the ——— theatre.

"YANKEE DOODLE IN BERLIN"

(LESSER-SENNETT SPECIAL)

Mack Sennett Branches Out with Success

AND so it came to pass that Mack Sennett stopped his two-reel designs long enough to become the architect of a feature length comedy, "A Yankee Doodle in Berlin." The spectator, if he watches the canvas closely, will notice that the bathing girls are decidedly de trop and in their places are found that little group of wilful rulers, namely, Kaiser Bill, Hindy, Ludy, Tirpy, Willie and their goose-steppers.

The Americans are wise to the fact that Bill likes the ladies so they dispatch their leading Ace who is disguished as a vampire. The high jinks of the piece are humorously brought out when the hero shimmies Bill out of victory. In fact Bill and his boy and Hindy too, forget all about the war in their mad race for the vampire's favor. Laughable incidents are created in the Kaiser's game of croquet and his jealous fights with his wife and Hindy.

All the Sennett funmakers are there. Ben Turpin inspires a gale of laughter as a German private, and Ford Sterling makes a comical Kaiser. Bert Roach presents the best likeness of Hindy we've ever seen. Except for a brief repetition of scenes the picture is a genuinely funny adventure. It is broad slapstick without pie and pudding.—Length, 5 reels.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

On ——— of ——— week Mack Sennett's feature comedy, "A Yankee Doodle in Berlin," will appear at the ——— theatre. It is a burlesque of how the Yankees beat Germany, and its wealth of comical high lights is sufficient cause to send the spectator away in a humorous frame of mind. Mr. Sennett has heretofore identified himself with two-reel comedies, and picture-goers have found his name synonymous with fun as it is generated by his group of comedians and bathing girls. In this picture ——— patrons will be treated to something new and interesting from the Sennett studios.

The American forces, knowing the Kaiser's weakness for a pretty woman, dispatch Captain Bob disguised as a dashing girl into the German lines. He is commissioned to get the enemy's plans for an expected drive. His big opportunity comes when he meets Hindenburg, the Kaiser and the Crown Prince. Each one of these discredited men is jealous of the other, and it is a pretty race between them to see who is the favored in Bob's estimation. The Kaiser has plain sailing until his wife learns of his cute capers. But he steals away and gains admittance to Bob's chambers, where the latter lures him to his downfall through an Oriental dance. Hindenburg finds it out and tells the Kaiserin, who comes again on the scene and gives him a sample of his own Prussianism. He makes a rapid exit.. So does Willie and Hindenburg. Bob has gained the precious information and the enemy is beaten in no time.

It is a fast and highly amusing comedy and unfolds a variety of rich and excruciatingly funny situations. A sight for sore eyes is Ford Sterling as the Kaiser. And there is Ben Turpin in the uniform of a German private, who will bring more than one chuckle of satisfaction. Bothwell Browne makes a captivating siren who takes the refugee, Marie Prevost, as a bride when his military duty is over.

SUGGESTIONS

Every exhibitor knows what Mack Sennett's name stands for in the comedy field, and his two-reel comedies have found a place on the screen of nearly every picture house in America. The patrons are as familiar with his comedians and bathing girls as they are with Fairbanks and all the big names. But they have never seen one of Sennett's five-reel comedies before. So exploit the picture as something extraordinary from the Sennett camp. Tell them in the biggest kind of advertising that his super-comedy, "A Yankee Doodle in Berlin," will appear at your theatre in conjunction with a one-reel picture of his bathing girls entitled, "Why Beaches Are Popular." Catch the spirit of burlesque of the feature in all your word arguments. Catch lines would be a good angle. Our

A trio of bathing girls in the Mack Sennett production, "Yankee Doodle in Berlin," distributed by Lesser suggestions along this line have been written with this plan in mind. Advertise the picture as a rich burlesque of how the Germans lost the war. You might state that the Kaiser was vamped by an American aviator in woman's clothes. Stir up interest in the impersonator, Bothwell Browne. He is a big figure in the vaudeville field. You can play the picture as a special. Advertised for all it is worth and it will bring the money home to you.

PROGRAM READER

Manager ——— announces that the Mack Sennett comedy feature, "A Yankee Doodle in Berlin," will appear at the ——— theatre in the near future. Our patrons should by no means miss their opportunity of seeing this picture, as it marks Mr. Sennett's first venture in comedies of five reels. Furthermore they will get acquainted with his version of how the Germans lost the war. Everyone knows that the Kaiser had a weakness for a pretty face. So the Americans hatched the scheme of sending over a spy disguised as a woman, and what he didn't do in showing up the Kaiser and his crew isn't worth mentioning.

The Imperial potentate simply lost his head and forgot all about that dinner in Paris. And that speaks for Hindenburg, the Crown Prince, and all the rest of them. You will laugh until your sides ache over the Kaiser and his troubles. Remember Ford Sterling? Well, he plays the Kaiser. And there is funny Ben Turpin as a ferocious Prussian, to say nothing of the other Sennett favorites in comical roles. You will forget your troubles with "A Yankee Doodle in Berlin." A great burlesque of Germany's war madness.. Don't by any means miss it.

CATCH LINES

You'll be disappointed if you don't see "A Yankee Doodle in Berlin," Mack Sennett's feature comedy. Do you know how the Kaiser lost the war? Well, he was "vamped" by an American aviator.

"BE A LITTLE SPORT"

(FOX)

Time-Honored Story Appears Fresh and Up-to-Date

IT is a bigger feat in picturedom to refurbish an ancient and accepted pattern and make it seem like something up-to-date than it is to grope for something original and have it fail to hit the mark through technical difficulties. Here is "Be a Little Sport," for example. The time honored theme of a young man who is forced to marry within a stipulated period or forfeit a large sum of money has been used on the stage and screen until it is almost threadbare.

Yet it looks like a new pattern so finely detailed are its plot and characterization, so elaborate is its development. The idea is embroidered with richly humorous by-play which springs to the surface with remarkable spontaneity. No laborious attitudes have been struck off by those in charge. In fact it is finely spun with appropriate detail—detail that engenders a happy response in the spectator.

Author, scenarist, and director having done their work well, allow us to state a big share of the credit belongs to the co-stars, Albert Ray and Elinor Fair, not forgetting George Hernandez and Lulu Warrenton. Intelligence and appreciation by every one concerned makes this picture hit the bull's eye.—Length, 5 reels.—Released June 29.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Gerald Faulkner.....Albert Ray
Norma Martin.....Elinor Fair
Matilda Faulkner.....Lule Warrenton
Dunley Faulkner.....George Hernandez
Carlotta LaMere.....Leota Lorraine
Dick Nevins.....Eugene Pallette
By Hale Merriman.
Scenario by Joseph A. Roach.
Directed by Scott Dunlap.
Photographed by Roy Klaffki.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

William Fox's co-stars, Albert Ray and Elinor Fair, will appear in their newest attraction, "Be a Little Sport," at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. The story by Hale Merriman, scenarioized by Joseph A. Roach, treats of a young man who is promised $100,000 by his uncle if he marries within 48 hours. He is engaged to a sportively inclined chorus girl and when he broaches the subject to her she puts him in the "seventh heaven" through her consent. The wedding hour is almost at hand and uncle and aunt have arrived in town to witness the ceremony. But the girl asks to have the marriage postponed because she is one of uncle's favorites and she prefers his company and his money to her fiancee and his expected fortune. "Pooh! a mere $100,000," says she.

So Gerry Faulkner is up against it until he notices a flirtatious stenographer in the opposite office. Gladly does Norma Martin consent to go through a fake ceremony to help him out of his dilemma. But the bride and groom are really married because the minister turns up—the minister who was engaged for the real marriage. And so they are made man and wife. Carlotta LaMere is sent about her business by aunty, and uncle gives up his fortune. The happy couple realize that love is a glorious thing.

"Be a Little Sport" is a bubbling comedy which unfolds a rich assortment of amusing complications. It breezes through with plenty of spirit and tells its story in a straightforward way. The picture was produced under the direction of Scott Dunlap. He has kept alive its expression and has given it an appropriate background. The stars give a good account of themselves and receive excellent support from George Hernandez, Lulu Warrenton, Leota Lorraine, and Eugene Pallette.

SUGGESTIONS

It is a little too early to pass on the merits of the Albert Ray-Elinor Fair pictures whether the stars have established a following. But it can assuredly be put down that they are making a strong bid for popularity. You can use data published about the stars in the News when they made their debut a few weeks ago. Play them up as exceedingly clever comedians. In exploiting the story mention should be made of the underlying idea which is that the hero is promised $100,000 if he marries within 48 hours. Emphasize that the marriage turns out to be a mistake, that the wrong girl finds herself a wife.

In all your copy play it up lightly, for it is a spirited comedy. You might use a catch line that "the girl on the spot is the girl who gets the husband." The title is a teaser and can be used in a teaser campaign. You can print small cards titled with the name of the picture and distribute them about. The expense is small. Your word arguments should be based principally upon the catch line angle. Bring out the humorous complications. You might offer a small prize for the patron who gives the best answer to "Would you marry a strange man to make him rich?"

PROGRAM READER

Fellows, how would you like to be situat as Gerald Faulkner was when he receive wire from his uncle that if he married wit 48 hours he would be given a fortune $100,000? You see Gerry took the old n seriously when in reality he was a genu sport. And so he hustled and made his promise that she would be there to through the ceremony. He didn't know t she was one of uncle's favorites and that cared more for his good times than to come a dutiful bride. Girls, how would you like to be situated as Norma Martin was when she consented to go through a fake marriage with Gerry so he wouldn't lose his fortune? How would you like it if the marriage turned out to be the genuine thing and you had only known your husband a few hours? Well, these are the situations that confront Albert Ray and Elinor Fair, the Fox entertainers, who will appear at this theatre very shortly. The picture is "Be a Little Sport" and from all accounts it is one of the brightest, breeziest, and most bracing comedies that has been shown in many a day.

CATCH LINES

Uncle was some sport and he thought a great deal of the girl who was to marry his nephew. She didn't let him on her secret because she wanted the gifts the naughty old man promised to give her. What happened? See "Be a Little Sport."

Uncle was a cut-up, but little did he know that the girl he loved was the betrothed of his nephew. The young man was promised a cool $100,000 if he married within 48 hours. When the girl threw him down the agitated nephew had to find a substitute.

"PRUDENCE ON BROADWAY"
(TRIANGLE)

A Charming Story with Broad Appeal

A CLASSY comedy-drama with a charming story possessing a broad human appeal and entertainingly presented. The continuity is remarkably easy to follow and the sets are perfectly suited to the action. Well directed, with the cast fitted to each respective part. And the star has a role that she was born to and admirably suited to her style, carriage, beauty and talent.

She is a demure little Quaker girl, met first in the strictly religious home surroundings, then in a girls' seminary, and later in New York City among the elite. But she was mischievously wiser than her little grey-dove garments and demure mannerisms heralded. And her angle on what is good and bad morals brings her into predicaments that are highly amusing, but she always turns up right-side-up-with-care. It is a clean, whole-souled story with a happy ending.

This picture will undoubtedly pull strongly in the elite and first run theatres and thoroughly entertain. The family and popular houses should certainly draw heavily with this picture and it should highly amuse their audiences. The labor class will also patronize this picture in great numbers and they will admire its refreshing entertainment qualities.—Length, 5 reels.—Released July 6.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Olive Thomas comes to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest Triangle Special, "Prudence on Broadway." In this story a demure little Quaker girl visits New York City and certainly creates havoc. It was at a young ladies' seminary that our little Prudence learned to play bridge and other games fiercely frowned upon by her sect. She was a little grey dove but very mischievous. The best society of New York welcomed her as a refreshing novelty when she visited her distant relation in the Metropolis. The young men gathered around her in great numbers. And Grayson Mills, the greatest catch of the season, met her, and it was love at first sight. When John Melbourne, a parasitical husband living on his wife's wealth, loaned Prudence $200 which she had lost at poker, he forced her to meet him at a roadhouse by threatening to show the cancelled check to her stern old Quaker father in Pennsylvania. But Prudence had armed herself with one of the twenty love letters that Melbourne had sent to a discarded mistress and when the supper was ready at the roadhouse she showed him the letter and said that the other nineteen letters were with the hotel clerk under instructions to deliver them to Melbourne's wife unless Prudence was back by twelve o'clock. And Melbourne made such quick time back to the hotel with Prudence that she was able to see Grayson Mills and then all was well for the little grey dove. Olive Thomas is said to be perfectly fitted in the role owing to her demure prettiness.

CATCH LINES

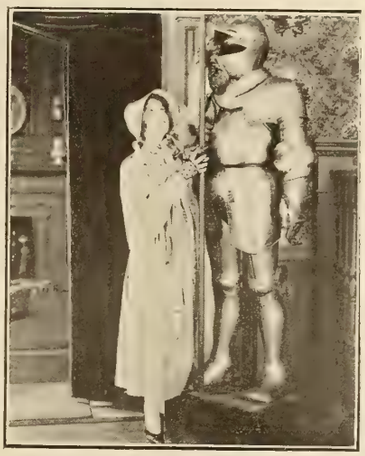
Prudence says: "It is folly to attach thy name to a paper when it may returneth some day and confront thee."

Prudence says: "Applejack is indeed a sin to drinketh at home with thy strict Quaker parents but it tasteth delicious in a big city."

Prudence says: "If little girls dance they must payeth the piper but I have never seen a devil yet among these musicians."

Prudence says: "It is wicked to winneth at bridge but leaveth a more agreeable sensation than losing at draw poker."

Prudence says: "I liketh not the present brazen styles of dress. My grandmother's is best, although shorter at both ends."



Olive Thomas in "Prudence on Broadway," her latest Triangle Special.

PROGRAM READER

"And dost thy wife not understand thee?" This theme sounds familiar.

But when a libertine is demurely asked this question by an unsophisticated little Quaker maid he is astounded.

She had anticipated his line of endeavor although she is only apparently a little grey dove among a lot of chattering magpies in the big metropolis.

And Prudence was her name. And she lives up to it. The cute little Puritan was as pure as the driven snow, but—oh how mischievous.

Can you picture a little ewe lamb cast among the elite in New York City and holding her own among the dashing debutantes and hungry wolves?

Olive Thomas is the little beauty portraying the star part in Triangle's great special photoplay, "Prudence on Broadway," to be seen at this theatre next week.

And she is perfectly fitted for this delicious role; the little Quaker girl who has left her strict religious environments at home in a small Pennsylvania village and succeeds in straightening the kinks on Broadway.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have this picture coming to your theatre you can plan a most effective campaign with the "mottoes" idea and display same through circulars, cards, and newspaper advertising. Such as "Prudence says:," etc., using catch lines, even referring to many local happenings. Olive Thomas, the little beauty of the Follies is now well exploited as a screen star and her name should be emphasized. You should taboo any circus or lobby "stunts" on this picture. Use clever catch lines wherever possible and the final tie-in comes when you announce that "Prudence on Broadway" will appear at your theatre.

"SAHARA"
(HODKINSON)

A Title Should Draw; a Heavy Dramatic Story

A HEAVY dramatic production, with the action in Paris and Egypt and a story that is quite tragic. The settings are unusually artistic and the exterior scenes are worthy of the best comment. Photography and laboratory work on this picture shows a great advancement in the art. Continuity is easily followed and the direction is masterly. The cast of five principals is perfectly fitted, and the little boy, Master Pat Moore, scores heavily. The star, Louise Glaum, has an emotional role that calls for no sympathetic appeal, even in the end.

The slight inconsistency in the story is where the runaway wife is still a "friend only" and not a mistress to the Russian baron, who keeps her in splendor for five years. Yes, it must be five years, according to the growth of the little boy.

This should be a strong drawing card everywhere, particularly because of the topical title, and should please generally those audiences who have had a big run of the lighter pictures. It offers the variety of being a "heavy" picture. A good two-reel comedy should go with this to balance your show, but as the feature is seven reels in length, it must run alone and stand on its own merits. The long run on this would not hold up in the reviewer's estimation, but it should be a sure fire draw for any class audience for the shorter run.—Length, 7 reels.—Released June 29.—Tom Hamlin.

THE CAST

Mignon.....Louise Glaum
John Stanley.....Matt Moore
Baron Alexis.....Edwin Stevens
The Boy.....Master Pat Moore
Mustapha.....Nigel de Brullier
Story by C. Gardner Sullivan.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Sahara" is not here yet. It is coming at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. And it is a massive screen production in seven reels with Louise Glaum, the emotional actress as its star.

C. Gardner Sullivan wrote the intensely dramatic story and Allen Dwan supervised the production personally. It pictures an American civil engineer in Paris who went broke on entertaining after marrying a Parisian stage favorite. A reclamation project is opened for him on the great Egyptian desert and he finally induces his frivolous and amusement-loving wife to accompany himself and the baby to the lonely desert camp.

A passing caravan headed by a Russian Baron stops at the camp after the loneliness has become almost unbearable to her and the wealthy Russian persuades her to leave her husband and child and go with him to Cairo where he surrounds her with riches and splendor, although she treats him as a friend only. Several years have passed and she is neither content or happy.

In a visit through beggars' row she recognizes in a filthy drug-driven wretch, her husband. And the little boy, now grown into quite a lad, is sharing his poverty. The work of redemption shows many emotional scenes and a tragedy. Back to the desert for the little re-united family after a series of intensely thrilling moments. And a great moral is shown in the new found happiness of John Stanley and his wife Mignon.

Matt Moore portrays the role of John Stanley and Edwin Stevens has the role of the Russian Baron. The little boy, Master Pat Moore, most realistically portrays the appealing and sympathetic role of the little boy.

"Sahara" comes heralded as one of the truly big photoplays of the year.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have this picture booked, your title is the one big thing to play up everywhere. "Sahara" is a topical title for the next twelve months. Snipe-strips with many of the catch lines provided should be displayed in every spot possible. For your lobby any good sign painter can paint you a huge banner portraying the desert with the pyramids and the Sphinx. The descriptive matter can read: "Louise Glaum is bringing this great dry place home to you in the great photoplay, 'Sahara.'"

Send a receipt around to the leading soda fountains, of lemon phosphate with a cherry in it to be advertised under the brand name, "Sahara Cocktails." They will be glad to get the tie-in with you if you send them printed strips to be pasted on their windows containing the words, "Sahara Cocktails" were invented by Louise Glaum the star in "Sahara."

PROGRAM READER

A vast wilderness of sand surrounded this woman. She was accustomed to the bright lights of Paris and the everlasting jollity. It almost broke her nerves. She had her husband and baby with her but the loneliness was almost unbearable. Her reason was tottering.

And along came the tempter. They can be found ever present at the critical time and even in such out-of-the-way places as the great Sahara desert. And he won her easily. She made the choice easily and without any apparent pangs. She accompanied the tempter to Cairo where he surrounded her with all the splendors that her heart craved.

Was she happy? No, this woman was neither happy nor contented. She was not satisfied. Her spare time one day several years later was passed in distributing alms in Beggars' row. And there she saw a poor drug fiend in the last stage of wretchedness. And the poor beggar had as a companion a bright little boy. And her work of redemption then started. She found something for her idle hands to do. For her discarded husband and child must be saved. It is intensely dramatic and is all told in the great photoplay, "Sahara," to be shown at this theatre next week.

Louise Glaum is the woman and Matt Moore is the man.

"CUPID FORECLOSES"
(VITAGRAPH)

Sweet Little Play of Home and Fireside

ONE of those tender little stories of home and fireside is offered in Bessie Love's latest Vitagraph picture, "Cupid Forecloses." It is extremely frail in plot material, its strength depending upon a bit of character drawing plus some remarkably beautiful locations and faithful atmospheric detail.

A broken down aristocratic family is about to be dispossessed for the sake of the mortgage when the daughter of the house finds evidence which frees it from any outside claim. Mistaken identity in the lawyers and the man who claims title to the property provides the backbone of the plot. The execution of it is laboriously worked out, though here and there sentimental interludes are interspersed which give it a certain appeal. Eventually the claimant is introduced as a young man of great love and generosity who never had any desire to evict a family, especially when a winsome girl is a member of the household.

It is quite anaemic, this picture, yet it sends out a fragrant breath through the colorful appeal of the countryside. Truly rural surroundings caught by an artistic cameraman lift the piece not a little. Miss Love arouses sympathy as always through her wistful expression. A good cast supports her.—Five reels.—Laurence Reid.

Bessie Love, in "Cupid Forecloses," her latest Vitagraph picture

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Bessie Love, the winsome Vitagraph star, will appear at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest picture entitled "Cupid Forecloses." This is an adaptation of Florence Morse Kingsley's popular novel, "Hurrying Fate and Geraldine." Miss Love is said to have an ideal role for her piquant personality in Geraldine Farleigh who belongs to a broken-down aristocratic family. It seems that the girl's grandfather, before his death, contracted a debt of $3,000 with General Fisk. The latter's heir, Bruce Cartwright, places the account in the hands of lawyers with the result that the mansion must be sold.

Geraldine detests Cartwright for this attitude but she is surprised to find his lawyer, Bullers, so gracious. The latter promises to intercede in her behalf and Geraldine shows her gratitude by falling in love with him. Smith, Bullers' partner, is as unscrupulous as the other is honest, and the old skinflint comes to threaten proceedings when Geraldine discovers a receipt for her grandfather's debt. She is amazed when she is finally introduced to the real Bullers, an elderly man. The impostor is none other than Cartwright. And explanations bring reconciliation and love.

A homely tale of homefolks is "Cupid Forecloses." It generates a fine humanity and is enhanced with remarkably picturesque scenery. Miss Love is thoroughly at her best in the part of Geraldine and she receives capable support from a cast that includes Wallace McDonald, Dorothea Wolbert, and others. David Smith directed from a scenario by Stanley Olmsted and Edward J. Montagne.

PROGRAM READER

Bessie Love, the Vitagraph favorite, will appear at the ——— theatre shortly in what is considered her best photoplay, "Cupid Forecloses." This is an adaptation of Florence Morse Kingsley's popular novel, "Hurrying Fate and Geraldine," which has undoubtedly been read by many of our patrons. It is a pathetic little tale—but the pathos is finely blended with quaint humor. You will see a family who is supposedly land poor, and the charming daughter of the house is deeply concerned over the problem that they are soon to be dispossessed. How she finds a solution for her worries, how she summons the aid of Cupid, how the old mansion is saved, how love comes with all its tugging at the heart are events that are finely brought out in the picture. It carries a vein of suspense and heart appeal. Beautiful scenery enhances the story not a little. Charming country rusticity will catch you with its fragrance. Remember the date ——— the ———.

SUGGESTIONS

In the exploitation of this picture make mention of the fact that it is adapted from Florence Morse Kingsley's popular novel, "Hurrying Fate and Geraldine." Get hold of a copy if you can, photograph the covers and an interesting page and use it for newspaper copy. Then bring out that it is a tale of the countryside, of a broken-down aristocratic family who dread the day that the house is to be sold in a sheriff's sale. Suggest the atmosphere of the story and try to get into your copy the idea that a pretty girl can outwit the most scheming of lawyers.

Play up Bessie Love and the fact that she has an ideal role in the picture. She takes a good photograph. The title. What about that? Surely it suggests advertising possibilities. Cupid Forecloses. Of course he does. He never fails. Your word arguments written in a light manner with catch lines emphasizing the title, there is no reason why you cannot make this picture a winner with your patrons.

CATCH LINES

The old homestead was about to be sold and it brought the biggest sorrow in her life. When things looked their blackets along came—see "Cupid Forecloses."

Remember next ——— Bessie Love will appear at the ——— theatre in "Cupid Forecloses," an adaptation of Florence Morse Kingsley's novel, "Hurrying Fate and Geraldine." It is a picture of homely life and homely people—the sort of picture which is relished like mother's home-made mince pie. Don't miss it.

She hated this man who would dispossess her family. Then his lawyer came and said he would see what he could do in saving her home. But the lawyer proved to be the man she thought she hated and the homestead was saved. And love came and sent her into his arms.

"GIRLS"
(PARAMOUNT)

Clyde Fitch Play Makes Good Picture

A VERY pleasing satire is offered in this screen adaptation of Clyde Fitch's play. The celebrated playwright occasionally wrote with his tongue in his cheek, especially, when dealing in the eternal feminine problem. His "Girls" was a delightful caprice because he seemingly understood the contrariness of the sex and exposed it to the light of mild ridicule.

As a picture its moods are as deftly shaded by appreciative architects and with the exception of the Fitch dialogue, it stands on the same excellent framework as the original. "Girls" is human, too, for everyone recognizes a man-hater as insincere in her scorn for the opposite sex. So when the triumvirate vow eternal hatred of poor little man one knows they will succumb to his blandishments before the words have scarcely left their lips. It may be mild of plot this "Girls," but it keeps one constantly interested through the development of its sparkling situations.

Walter Edwards is no amateur at this type of play and he brings out the tone and quality which the dramatist incorporated. Marguerite Clark is delightful as the leading man-hater. The others are interpreted by Mary Warren and Helene Chadwick. Harrison Ford drives the steam roller which breaks down the song of hate. expression. A good cast supports her.—Five reels.—Laurence Reid.

Marguerite Clark in "Girls," her latest Paramount picture

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

Marguerite Clark, the Paramount star, will appear at the ——— theatre on ——— in a screen adaptation of Clyde Fitch's great play, "Girls." At the time of its stage presentation it placed the late playwright at the pinnacle of popularity, and now that it has been translated into picture language it will carry Miss Clark still further along the high road to success. You cannot afford to miss it if you enjoy the eternal feminine, for it tells about the caprices, the moods of girls who look with scorn upon that creature known as man.

There is always a time in a girl's life when she considers herself a man-hater. It is mostly a huge bluff, for when the right fellow comes along he is simply irresistible. So it is with this triumvirate of girls, Pamela Gordon, Violet and Kate West. They roomed together, these adorable girls, and above their transom was written in bold and unmistakable language—"No man shall cross this threshold." You see they had been disappointed in love and they thought they had learned its lesson. But what do you suppose? Along comes Edgar Holt, a prepossessing young man, and he ridicules Pam's idea and takes her by storm, with the result that she capitulates. The girls have sworn to remain single. Yet when Pam discovers that Kate has been married for some time and that Violet is engaged, why she simply throws up the sponge and accepts Edgar for better for worse.

SUGGESTIONS

In advertising "Girls" make mention that it is an adaptation of Clyde Fitch's play of the same name. This playwright was considered the best contributor to the dramatic stage while he lived and his works are endurable. Play up his name because of the fact that it is well known. His plays are almost countless and he never turned in a poor one. Treat all your copy in a light vein as suggestive of the theme.

You might concentrate upon the idea of three adorable man-haters who resolved to have nothing to do with mere man. And they no sooner made their fine resolution than they succumbed to masculine love and determination. The story offers you a number of opportunities for clever advertising owing to its theme and the way it is worked out. Catch lines would make excellent teasers or throw-aways.

PROGRAM READER

Pamela Gordon, Violet and Kate West are a triumvirate of man-haters. Each had been disappointed in love and had resolved to have nothing further to do with the sterner sex. But girls are girls, y'know, and the adorable things simply cannot make up their minds. Down deep in their hearts they liked to be cuddled by the stupid males. But they wouldn't admit it. Well Pamela, Violet and Kate swore to remain in a single state of bliss. Men are horrid old things, so there.

When a girl declares herself a man-hater she usually succumbs to his blandishments at the first opportunity. So it is with Pam, Violet and Kate. A handsome young fellow by the name of Edgar Holt hopped into their room one night and he made himself so at home that the girls couldn't resist him, especially Pam. And before you know it she is engaged. The other girls break the resolution even earlier.

This is a brief outline of "Girls," the pictorial adaptation of Clyde Fitch's memorable play of that name, which presents Marguerite Clark at the ——— theatre very shortly. It is bright and interesting and should be seen by every picture-goer. The star is captivating and she receives excellent support from a picked company.

CATCH LINES

Clyde Fitch's great stage success, "Girls," will appear at the ——— theatre next ——— with Marguerite Clark as the star. She professes to be a man-hater, but deep down in her heart there is a fondness for the sterner sex. Does she give up her resolution not to marry? See "Girls."

She stamped her pretty foot and declared henceforth that man should be an object of scorn. But one stumbled into her chambers one night and he found such fun in her professed hatred that he simply refused to leave. Did she learn to love him? Did she overcome her hatred for the masculine sex? See "Girls."

A MAN'S COUNTRY"

(ROBERTSON-COLE-EXHIBITORS MUTUAL)

Alma Rubens Stars in Western Thriller

IT looks like a page from Bret Harte, this story which John Lynch has concocted for Alma Rubens. Well most any tale framed in the days of the California Argonauts might be said to be patterned after him. So this is no aspersion on Mr. Lynch.

He has fashioned a regular he-picture for the star-one that has to do with unadulterated villainy and virtue. The characters are either black or white, there being no blending of the colors. Kate Carewe cannot be called a model of purity, but her regeneration is brought about through a fighting parson—a parson who, while, his athletic prowess may be admired is nevertheless grating at times through his sanctimonious demeanor. Must a sky pilot always be deadly serious in these "westerns?" A pestilence leads the way to Kate's salvation and when she sees the heroic defense the preacher puts up for her sake the call of love is heard.

The action of the fight will hold you in a tight embrace so thoroughly in earnest are the contestants. Except for an occasional indulgence of heroics Miss Rubens and her players are excellent. The picture is rich in locations and atmosphere and action, and should appeal through its glamour of '49.—Length. 5 reels.—Released in July.—Laurence Reid.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"A Man's Country" which comes to the ——— theatre on ———presents the emotional star, Alma Rubens. This picture was especially written for her by John Lynch, one of the leading scenarists of the day. And knowing her histrionic capabilities he has provided her a role which taxes her art to the utmost. Yet she takes advantage of every situation. In fact she is mistress of herself in every scene. The picture was produced under the direction of Henry Kolker and he has succeeded in bringing out a wonderful line of action, to say nothing of picturesque locations and faithful atmosphere. The picture is a reminder of the days of '49 when men lived fast and died faster.

Miss Rubens is seen in the role of Kate Carewe, an embodiment of the best and worst in all the lawless West. She was the acknowledged queen of Kemp's dance hall, where she lauded it over the rough miners and cold-blooded gamblers. One evening "Three Card" Duncan shot the proprietor in a game of draw poker and Kate challenged him. She won. Then came the Rev. Ralph Bowen to regenerate the camp. They scoffed at him, these rough men and painted women, and Kate scoffed the most. Yet when the pestilence came he saved her and she was awakened in soul and heart.

How she administered to him, how he came to her rescue and fought a fight to the death to save her honor provides the framework of this drama of regeneration. It is sweeping in its action, powerful in its climaxes, and above it all is the glamour of the West of '49. Miss Rubens makes an attractive heroine and gives color to her role. A splendid cast contributes able support. Especially noticeable is the fine acting of Lon Chaney in the character of the bad man, Duncan.

PROGRAM READER

There was no getting away from it "Three Card" Duncan couldn't lose at cards. That was why he shot the proprietor of the dance hall out there in Huxley's Gulch. But he didn't reckon on one of the dance hall girls who bravely declared she would play him for the saloon or become his bride. Well she won the saloon all right. And she started business with a big celebration. But the Reverend Ralph Bowen came to the camp bent on stamping out its wickedness and giving it the bath of regeneration.

He didn't make any impression on the rough people and Kate Carewe laughed the hardest of all his listeners, yet one could see that she was doing a little thinking. He was a fighting parson and he surprised the natives who were not used to seeing a man of his profession so fearless. When the pestilence came he went to the relief of all and Kate eventually was redeemed. We cannot tell you the rousing finish of this picture, "A Man's Country"—you must simply see it for yourself when it comes to the ——— in the near future. Alma Rubens is the star.

Alma Rubens is the star in "A Man's Country," a Robertson-Cole picture distributed by Exhibitors Mutual

CATCH LINES

She was a dance hall queen and she didn't like preachers. When one came to camp she scorned him and heaped abuse on him at every opportunity. But he turned the other cheek and a time came when she needed his aid. He gave it to her. Thus the girl was regenerated. See this stirring picture, "A Man's Country."

What does a man's country suggest to you? Can't you see the rugged mountains of the West? Can't you see the endless stretches of plains—plains of sagebrush? Doesn't it suggest the days of the California Argonauts—the days of '49? Doesn't it suggest the land where men lived fast and died faster? Come to the ——— next ——— and see "A Man's Country." You'll not be disappointed.

SUGGESTIONS

If your audiences like "westerns," you needn't be afraid of booking "A Man's Country." It is a big "western" spelled with a capital W. It is a tale of the days of '49 when men paved the way and blazed the trail to the gold fields. Play up this argument. Every one is interested in those momentous days. There is a glamour about the period which fascinates us all. Bring out that it treats of a painted woman and a fighting parson. Each had their conceptions of right and wrong. Ask your patrons in the line of teasers which character won. Bring out the nature of the plot—that the parson came to the camp to clean it up. And tell how he brought salvation to the dance hall girl. Don't emphasize the action too much. It might scare away the easily offended. Just picture it as a stirring tale of the days of '49. That will be sufficient. You might provoke interest in the title. Mention the star. Miss Rubens is well known to most of your patrons. They will remember her from the Triangle days. Don't make any bid for display of the vivid climaxes unless you cater to an audience that wants red hot action right off the griddle. You are your own best judge.

"THE AMERICAN WAY"

Pleasant Light Comedy and Melodramatic Effects

A PLEASING picture produced with a light comedy angle and several melodramatic effects. This is fairly well directed with the exception of the rescue scene from the water. The scenes are placed first in England at a luxurious home, later in an American business office, and then in a logging camp.

The cast is capable, although the hero is at times quite effeminate in his mannerisms. One inconsistency is the prospective ruination of a large lumber concern by the attempted bombing of a train which merely carried about three hundred dollars worth of logs.

Both the interior settings and exteriors are very acceptable and the continuity is easily understood. The love element in the story, while not built around a new idea, is happily pleasing and the villains get their just deserts.

This picture should draw best and please the family, popular and labor audiences most. In many first-run houses in the larger cities it may not prove a big draw, but it is an entertaining offering as a picture. It is not intense but is breezy instead. The elite audiences will not rave about it but it will get by with the high class house nicely as a picture.—Length, 5 reels.—Released July 7.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"The American Way" is the World production with light comedy and melodramatic action coming to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

It portrays the ne'er do well in England who has inherited many American ideas from an American mother and visits the United States where he shows that he has the real democratic spirit and wins in not only business life but in love as well.

Dick Farrington, portrayed by Arthur Ashley, is the only son of an English lord and is sent to America because of his strenuous ways. Rather than visit the wealthy Van Allens he unwittingly through a miscarriage of calling cards is accepted by the pretty young ward of the Van Allens, as Richard Smithers.

He overhears her say that rather than wed an English nobleman she would sooner marry an American burglar. As a reward for a service the young man performed she secures for him an office position with Mr. Van Allen. From then on the activities of this strenuous young American-Englishman take him through many stirring adventures and from the offices to the logging camps.

A rescue of the young ward and the foiling of those who plotted against his employers, culminates with the arrival of his anxious father from England and his identification of the hero as his boy.

And the pretty young ward accepts him as both an American burglar and an English lord. Thrilling action is depicted amid the grandeur of the logging camp surroundings and "The American Way" is heralded as an attraction that will pleasantly entertain and thrill the classes and the masses.

SUGGESTIONS

If you have this picture booked it is advisable to mention the great logging camps in every line following the title to get people away from the idea that this is a war play or a training activities or spy picture because of the title. An especial display of all the many photographs in as many prominent locations as possible is a sure-fire way of tieing up this attention to its proper theme.

Another way of emphasizing that this is an entertaining story of business and romance is to use as many catch lines as possible in your advertising. If there are any international marriages scheduled between any noted Americans with any noted Britishers in the newspapers about the time you are showing this picture you can secure a topical tie-in by commenting upon this fact and then announce that Betty Winthrop startles Long Island society by stating that she would rather marry a good American burglar in preference to an English Lord. And let it be known that she is the leading woman role in "The American Way."

PROGRAM READER

"I would rather marry an American burglar than wed an English lord," said pretty little Betty Winthrop.

And the ne'er do well son of an English lord heard her and quickly decided that he would take a student's course in American burglary in order to win this daughter of democracy.

He never stole anything, though. Instead he managed to foil a group of plotters against his American employers. This strenuous action carries him through the logging camps and then back to the business offices in New York City.

Richard Farrington did not have to work. He was wealthy. But if it was necessary to toil in order to win the approval of this charming girl he would do it. And he did. They even accused him of burglary and he was sure that the girl would then consider him more democratic than ever.

All this can be learned and is told in entertaining style, embellished with thrills, in the World photoplay, "The American Way," at this theatre next week.

CATCH LINES

Aristocracy becomes democratic to win one American girl in "The American Way" at the ——— theatre.

He was the ne'er do well in England but in America he was inspired. See "The American Way" at the ——— theatre.

When he found that she admired burglars he proceeded to burgle. See Arthur Ashley in "The Amercan Way" at the ——— theatre.

"COLONEL BRIDAU"
(ENTENTE FILM CORP.)

A Good Average Picture of Foreign Make

A DRAMATIC photoplay based on Honore De Balzac's widely read novel, "La Raboulleuse," from which Otis Skinner produced his great stage success, "The Honor of the Family." Produced abroad and with a foreign cast and director, it pictures Paris one hundred years ago when Napoleon returned amid the plaudits of his people.

It is on a par with many other good foreign made pictures and the story is an excellent one. The settings are good in most spots and several of the mob scenes are very well handled. The star, Chv. Ralph Marianus, is a finished actor.

This picture may draw fairly well in some high class neighborhood houses because of the fame of both the play and book. And it will probably get by nicely with the elite audience as a picture. The time may be or may not be ripe for a fairly good average picture of foreign make. Therefore its merits as a puller and pleaser in first run, popular, family or labor audiences is merely conjecture. —Length, 6 reels.—Released July 7.—Tom Hamlin.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

"Colonel Bridau," an international photoplay with an international cast, is scheduled for the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

This is from the widely read De Balzac story, "La Rabouilleuse," from which Otis Skinner took his great stage success, "The Honor of the Family."

The story starts in Paris a century ago when Napoleon returns and appoints Philippe Bridau as Colonel of his body guard.

When Colonel Bridau learns that his sweetheart, a ballet girl of the opera, has become smitten with the Duke of Monfrigneuse, he leaves America, where he had gone after Napoleon met with disaster, and returns to France.

In the hope that he can win his sweetheart's love back again if he has money, the Colonel resorts to theft and his own mother drives him out of the house. In thwarting a pair of conspirators who were after his uncle's wealth he fights a duel and kills his man.

His uncle, in gratitude, confesses that his fortune really belongs to Colonel Bridau, as he had cheated him out of it when but a youngster. As the old officer comes again into his own he is more beloved than ever by the admiring Parisian people.

Chev. Ralph Marianus is the screen star appearing in the role of Colonel Bridau and the foreign cast is heralded as a real novelty in photoplay interpretation.

The part of Flora Brazier is portrayed by Pepa Bonafe, internationally prominent in vampire roles on the screen. The photoplay follows the book and play closely, it is said, and the foreign cast is declared to be exceptionally strong.

PROGRAM READER

Young Bridau was a proud young officer when Napoleon selected him as Colonel of his personal body guard in 1815 when the great soldier returned to Paris to receive the plaudits of his people.

But when Napoleon met with disaster the young Colonel escaped death because of his great personal popularity. He came to America. When he learned that his sweetheart of the ballet in Paris had apparently fallen in love with the Duke of Monfrigneuse Colonel Bridau returned hastily to Paris.

His arrest for thievery, the dual, the unfaithfulness of some women, and the final recovery of the great personal fortune which his uncle had formerly cheated him out of, and then the young Colonel's sudden rise to popularity again form a great theme for the international photoplay coming to this theatre next week.

"Colonel Bridau" is the title and the story is from De Balzac's famous novel, "La Rabouilleuse," from which Otis Skinner secured his great stage success, "The Honor of the Family."

THE LINE-UP

THE BOOK is Honore De Balzac's famous novel, "La Rabouilleuse."

THE PLAY is Otis Skinner's great stage success, "The Honor of the Family."

THE PHOTOPLAY is interpreted by an International cast.

It has the foreign flavor of Paris a century ago.

And it is in six massive parts.

Chev. Ralph Marionus is the star.

Pepa Bonafe is the international vamp.

SUGGESTIONS

If you book this picture do not make the mistake of deceiving your audience by letting them assume that it is a regular American-made production. Tell them outright that it is an International photoplay with an International cast and made abroad. If you advertise this as a foreign-made production it will bring many out of curiosity and you will not be deceiving them. Emphasize that it is from the De Balzac story, "La Rabouilleuse," and that Otis Skinner's great stage success, "The Honor of the Family," was taken from the same widely read book.

When you capitalize the above facts in your announcements you have gone the limit and can get the bookstore tie-in to help you if you can persuade the leading store to display the book and mention on a placard in the window the book's title, then the play's title, then the title of the photoplay. Make these titles in the form of three links, one title in each link, and you have an attractive display. You could repeat the same display in your lobby as any sign painter can make an attractive piece of work from the three-link idea.

CATCH LINES

Pepa Bonafe, the international vamp, appears in "Colonel Bridau," the big imported photoplay appearing at the ——— theatre.

"So this is Paris?" the centenarian inquired in 1915. "Colonel Bridau" at the ——— theatre.

"Colonel Bridau," the imported international photoplay at the ——— theatre is not a so-called "war" play.

A century cycle in "Colonel Bridau" at the ——— theatre shows that glory, women and gold still sway men.

France had its Foch in 1915 and Napoleon had its "Colonel Bridau" in 1815. See the imported international photoplay at the ——— theatre.

"PUTTING ONE OVER"
(FOX)

George Walsh's Athletic Tricks Are Buried Here

THE athletic George Walsh is not as successful in his latest venture as in some of his previous pieces for the simple reason that his stunts are mostly eliminated for a holiday of acting. And it cannot be said of George that he is the Mansfield of the screen. Better to keep him supplied with athletic roles as in the past.

The sponsors have placed him in a dual study which is not only improbable but impossible, and it is no fault of his that his bag of stunts are not opened until the concluding reel. And his personality is not suitable for melodramatic fare that does not a single flourish of humorous highlights. The story here is based upon mistaken identity and before it is straightened out it travels in several directions. Of subtleties and deft touches there are none; of jarring incidents there are many.

Yet it is always discernible in its development and it does carry an acceptable quota of action. This element redeems in a way the haphazard treatment of the plot, particularly when it presents the star in one of his exciting climaxes.—Length, 5 reels.—Released June 22.—Laurence Reid.

THE CAST

Horace Barney }
Jack Trevor } .....George Walsh
Helen Townsend.....Edith Stockton
Maurice Claypool.....Ralph J. Locke
Thomas Farrel.....Frank Beamish
Dr. John Wallace.....Robert L. Keeling
Giles.....Matthew L. Betts
Dobbs.....Jack Dillon
Mrs. Townsend.....Mrs. Eliz. Garrison
Mrs. Eleanor Davies.....Marcia Harris
Johnny Thompkins.....Henry Hallem
Directed by Edward Dillon.

PRESS NOTICE—STORY

George Walsh, the Fox athletic actor, will appear at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his latest picture entitled "Putting One Over." Like its forerunners the feature presents the star as a fighting, smiling athlete who never allows anything to worry him but goes about his task with perfect confidence in his ability to take care of himself. In "Putting One Over" he appears in a dual role which is certainly something new for him. But two roles or a dozen roles don't phase him. All he cares about is coming out on top.

The story tells of an incompetent Horace Barney, who is on his way to a sanitarium accompanied by a group of plotters who are scheming to get his estate. They don't want the property to revert to his cousin, Helen Townsend, and so they keep good watch over him. Jack Trevor is also on the train and he is a dead "ringer" for Horace except the latter is a brunette. The train is wrecked and Horace is killed and while Jack is unconscious the crooks dye his hair and take him to his double's home. There he meets Horace's cousin, Helen, who believes him to be Horace. He gives up his mission to Texas when he realizes that the crooks are up to some mischief. How he frustrates them in a maze of exciting situations, puts a rousing finish to the picture. It is needless to state that Helen comes to his rescue when he is about to be railroaded to an asylum. Thus he wins the girl and puts it all over the schemers.

The picture is piloted through a series of hair-raising stunts without which it would not be complete. Mr. Walsh is assisted by a large company that includes Edith Stockton, Frank Beamish, Robert Keeling and others. Edward Dillon has succeeded in giving the picture an adequate production.

SUGGESTIONS

In advertising this picture make it known that George Walsh is seen in another of his athletic parts. Your crowd is probably familiar in what to expect in his offerings. And they are not going to be disappointed with his athletic prowess here. Tell them in effective word arguments that he succeeds in putting one over on his adversaries as he always does. Use him in all your exploitation, for he makes his pictures through his personality.

You might bring out that he appears in a dual role here, which is something new for him. The title is catchy and will appeal to the crowd because it represents Americanism. So play it up in catchline teasers and also the star. They are your strongest selling points. If the director's name means anything to your patrons, use it. Edward Dillon has brought the star right out into the limelight through his past efforts.

George Walsh in "Putting One Over," his latest William Fox picture

PROGRAM READER

Putting one over on his adversaries never caused George Walsh any worry. They changed his identity to carry out their scheme of getting another man's money. He was in a train wreck as Horace and Jack and the former was killed while the latter lived. And they looked like one another except Horace was a blonde while Jack was a brunette. They were after Horace's money and when he died they put Jack in his shoes. And Jack didn't care because he met Horace's beautiful fiancee. And she believed him to be Horace—Horace, a little out of his mind. His aunt refused to recognize him because she knew him as a blonde.

He knew there was a dark plot against Horace somewhere. Now to unearth it was the question. But the schemers went a little too far in their attempt to railroad him to an asylum, for Jack proved himself something of an athlete. He put one over on them. And before he was through they knew something about warfare. Which is all said in favor of George Walsh in "Putting One Over." The picture is an exciting melodrama with a farcical finish. And the star is right in his element as the screen's best athlete. He appears at the ——— next ———. Come!

CATCH LINES

They persisted in calling him Horace when his name was Jack. But both Horace and Jack were on the train that was wrecked. And Horace died and Jack lived—lived to become Horace because he looked like the dead man. Conspirators were after Horace's money and they made Jack believe he was Horace. He didn't care after he saw the only girl. See "Putting One Over."

Did he put one over on them? You bet he did. They didn't bank upon his handy arms. And what he did to them! Oh boy! See George Walsh in his latest picture, "Putting One Over."

Railroader Helen Holmes, who will in future thrill in S. L. K. productions

"Fair and Warmer" Begun by May Allison

Within the next fortnight May Allison will start work before the camera on "Fair and Warmer," Avery Hopwood's best farce. Miss Allison is now taking a brief vacation after completing "The Uplifters," her last Metro program picture, a satire on so-called "parlor Bolshevism," adapted by George D. Baker from Wallace Irwin's story, which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post, under the title of "Free."

"Fair and Warmer" is one of the thirty-six established stage successes acquired by Screen Classics, Inc., for its stars, to be distributed by Metro under the new policy of "fewer and better" pictures recently announced by W. E. Atkinson, general manager.

Howard Gaye is Miss Allison's leading man and Alfred Hollingsworth and Caroline Rankin have excellent parts. The entire production was under the personal supervision of Mr. Karger.

Liked Through Country

Reports received from exhibitors in all parts of the country indicate, according to the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, that "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," the Paramount-Artcraft Special production of Hall Caine's famous story, which Hugh Ford directed, is scoring as big a success as it did in New York when it was presented at the Rivoli two weeks ago.

Screen Letter Box Benefits

Morris Kashin, Originator, Tells of Exhibitor Value, Seen by F. G. Hall

MORRIS KASHIN, who conceived the idea for the Screen Letter Box, a new short subject, released for the first time by Frank G. Hall, president of Independent Sales Corporation, July 15, in a recent interview, had the following to say on the newest of short subjects to be released for screening in any theatre:

"During the time that I have managed motion picture theatres I have, perhaps, received columns of publicity on exploitation suggestions. Some of this contained quotations telling the trade what I was doing in the way of drawing people to the theatres I was managing and how I was doing it."

Mr. Kashin continuing, told of the length of time it took producing organizations to establish departments to help sell their article to the public, and his idea was not taken up until Frank Hall took hold of it, seeing that it would give real service to exhibitors, and was the kind of material that would be a strong box-office drawing card. Mr. Kashin concluding, said:

"That is why Frank Hall signed to distribute the Screen Letter Box. It is film that is produced after a careful study of box-office conditions with the one idea of turning out something that would be decidedly attractive to the public, arouse their deepest interest, draw them to the theatres and at the same time advertise the theatres where it is shown.

"That is my idea of service, to provide the theatre manager with an attraction that will not only get him good business, but make friends and steady patrons for him, and advertise his theatre; all this will increase his business. It's looking at things from the box-office angle that means real service, service that cannot be given through the medium of the printed word of reams and reams of publicity matter.

"Frank Hall, largely because he is an exhibitor as well as producer and director, saw the possibilities in the Screen Letter Box, and saw that it would do for fellow exhibitors."

Complete Sunshine Comedies

Director Del Ruth Finishes Three; Trio of New Ones are in Preparation

THREE Fox Sunshine Comedies have just been completed under the supervision of Hampton Del Ruth. These are "Chicken a la Cabaret," directed by Victor Heerman, featuring Chester Conklin, Billy Armstrong and Dorothy Lee; "The Yellow Dog Catcher," directed by J. C. Blystone, featuring Jack Cooper, Glen Cavender and Bill Franey; and "Wild Waves and Women," directed by Frank C. Griffin, featuring Ethel Teare and Slim Summerville.

Hampton Del Ruth has begun work on three other Sunshine Comedies which are to have a number of special features. He is said to have introduced some new ideas, and is planning an original fun-making equipment. To this end he has employed an expert mechanical engineer to devise the apparatus.

"We are only at the beginning of the possibilities of screen comedy," said Mr. Del Ruth, according to a statement by the Exhibitors Service Bureau of the Fox Film Corporation. "While many novel stunts have been developed in the field of screen farce, there is unlimited opportunity to create not alone new situations, but odd fun-making devices which, although entailing much time and expense, will add immensely to the drawing powers of Fox Sunshine Comedies."

The beauty brigade to which Mr. Del Ruth has been giving so much attention is now assembled in full, and he claims that it takes the prize for variety, versatility and pulchritudinous charm. It is said to possess members who not only can act, but can dance, sing, dive, swim, run, wrestle, box, or do almost anything.

Still another director has been added to the long list recently acquired by Mr. Del Ruth for Fox Sunshine Comedies—Eddie Cline. Mr. Cline was formerly associated with Mr. Del Ruth for several years.

But Little Territory Open on "Beyond Law"

Emmett Dalton, president and general manager of the Southern Feature Film Corporation, has returned from Boston and announced the sale of the New England states, on his feature picture "Beyond the Law," to Mr. Herman Rifkin, of the Eastern Feature Film Co., of Boston, Mass.

Mr. Rifkin contemplates opening the picture in Boston, in one of the large theatres and is now trying to arrange with Mr. Dalton to make a personal appearance at the opening.

After closing the New England deal, Mr. Dalton stated that he has but a few more states to sell and expects to start producing other pictures soon.

Extend Robertson-Cole Canadian Deal

The contract announced last week whereby the Exhibitors Distributing Corporation purchased the entire Robertson-Cole output for the coming year for exploitation throughout the Dominion took on an even bigger aspect when it was learned that seven J. Warren Kerrigan pictures are also included in the deal. In addition to the Kerrigan features, the Canadian organization also purchased the Dominion rights to "Two Gun Betty" a Bessie Barriscale production, and "The Prodigal Wife" co-starring Lucy Cotton and Mary Boland, which was produced by Screencraft.

The exhibitors Distilling Corporation is after supremacy in the Canadian distributing field. With offices in Toronto, Montreal, St. John, Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver, the organization will direct its campaign throughout the entire Dominion beginning in September with "Tangled Threads" a Bessie Barriscale attraction.

The officers of the Exhibitors Distributing Corporation, are Arthur Cohen, of Toronto, president; William Sugerman of Edmonton, vice president; Elly Marks of Toronto, secretary and treasurer; Harry A. Kaufman of Toronto, General Manager for the Dominion; Charles L. Stevens of Winnipeg, Western General Manager.

"The Better Wife," New C. K. Young Subject

Select Pictures' forthcoming attraction, "The Better Wife," which is presented by Clara Kimball Young and her own company, is described as the story of an American girl's romance in England and the Continent. "The Better Wife" will be released druing this month, and work is now being rushed on the exhibitors' advertising, including the lithographs, lobby displays, cuts, mats and press book.

A Novel Press Book on "Yvonne from Paris"

American's Press Book on "Yvonne from Paris," the new Mary Miles Minter picture which is to be released July 13, is full of well written copy and helpful exploitation suggestions. One of the most interesting of its novelties is a synopsis in rhyme, telling just enough of the story to get the fan's interest nicely kindled.

Simple Statements About the Simplified Simplex

SOME YEARS AGO, MOTION PICTURE PROJECTORS WERE JUST DESIGNATED AS "PICTURE MACHINES." TODAY, THERE ARE PICTURE MACHINES AND SIMPLEX.

The builders of the Simplex have taken all of the guess work and chance out of projector purchasing. When you buy Simplex you bring to your theatre and projection room the following—

SAFETY—which assures you, just as long as the Simplex is used as designed, the fullest protection against fire for your film, your audience and your property.

PERFECT PROJECTION—which means that everything which the art and skill of the director has been able to put into the picture is clearly brought out through the scientifically constructed Simplex.

YEARS OF SERVICE AT MINIMUM COST—which the finest material, plus the highest type of workmanship makes possible, many Simplex users having spent less than $25.00 for upkeep during five years of Simplex service.

EXCLUSIVE FEATURES—which simplify the operation of projection and relieve the user of Simplex from the attending strain which the running of the average projector imposes.

SO—with all of these qualities and the price no greater —CAN YOU AFFORD TO BE WITHOUT A SIMPLEX?

The "Extralite" Shutter which is part of every new Simplex equipment is designed for other makes of machines too. Read what our satisfied users say of the "Extralite."

Gentlemen:—We are now using four Simplex "Extralite" Shutters and, I want to say they are positively the best shutter on the market today, giving us perfect satisfaction. Yours very truly,

A STORY of the great plains in a time when a man's worth was measured in the twinkling of an eye and the blood of his veins ran red.

He was a finish-fighter.

THEY thought he was the Colt Kid when he held up the rich stranger so easily in Miller's saloon. He twirled a nasty six-shooter, and there was no one to tell them it wasn't loaded.

The girl fell for him, too, either because or in spite of the fact that he had done time. And then they tried to frame him in a big job on a rich man's house. The only hitch in their plans was the fact that the house happened to be his. And the girl was his—for life—before they got through the ensuing complications.

Why Women Will Like "The Westerners"

It is a story that has romance, love and sentiment.

It is a story containing two wonderful children and the greatest little boy ever seen on the screen.

It has a vital appealing hero in Roy Stewart.

It has a beautiful girl star in Mildred Manning.

It has a thrilling and handsome villain in Robert McKim.

It has wonderful pathos.

TOM MOORE'S strong, vivid personality is shown in deeper colors than ever. He smiles only once in "The City of Comrades," but that smile means that your audience will go home with breasts heaving, and the "come-again" spirit in their hearts.

They had him down and were counting him out! Once a prominent clubman, now a drunkard, unkempt and starving.

One night he broke in to rob. There were jewels for him, but he did not take them; for the presence of a certain beautiful woman inspired, not Crime, but Love.

And thus began the story of a great redemption that helped to build "The City of Comrades." Everyone who sees this great picture will be sold forever on Tom Moore, Goldwyn, and your theatre.

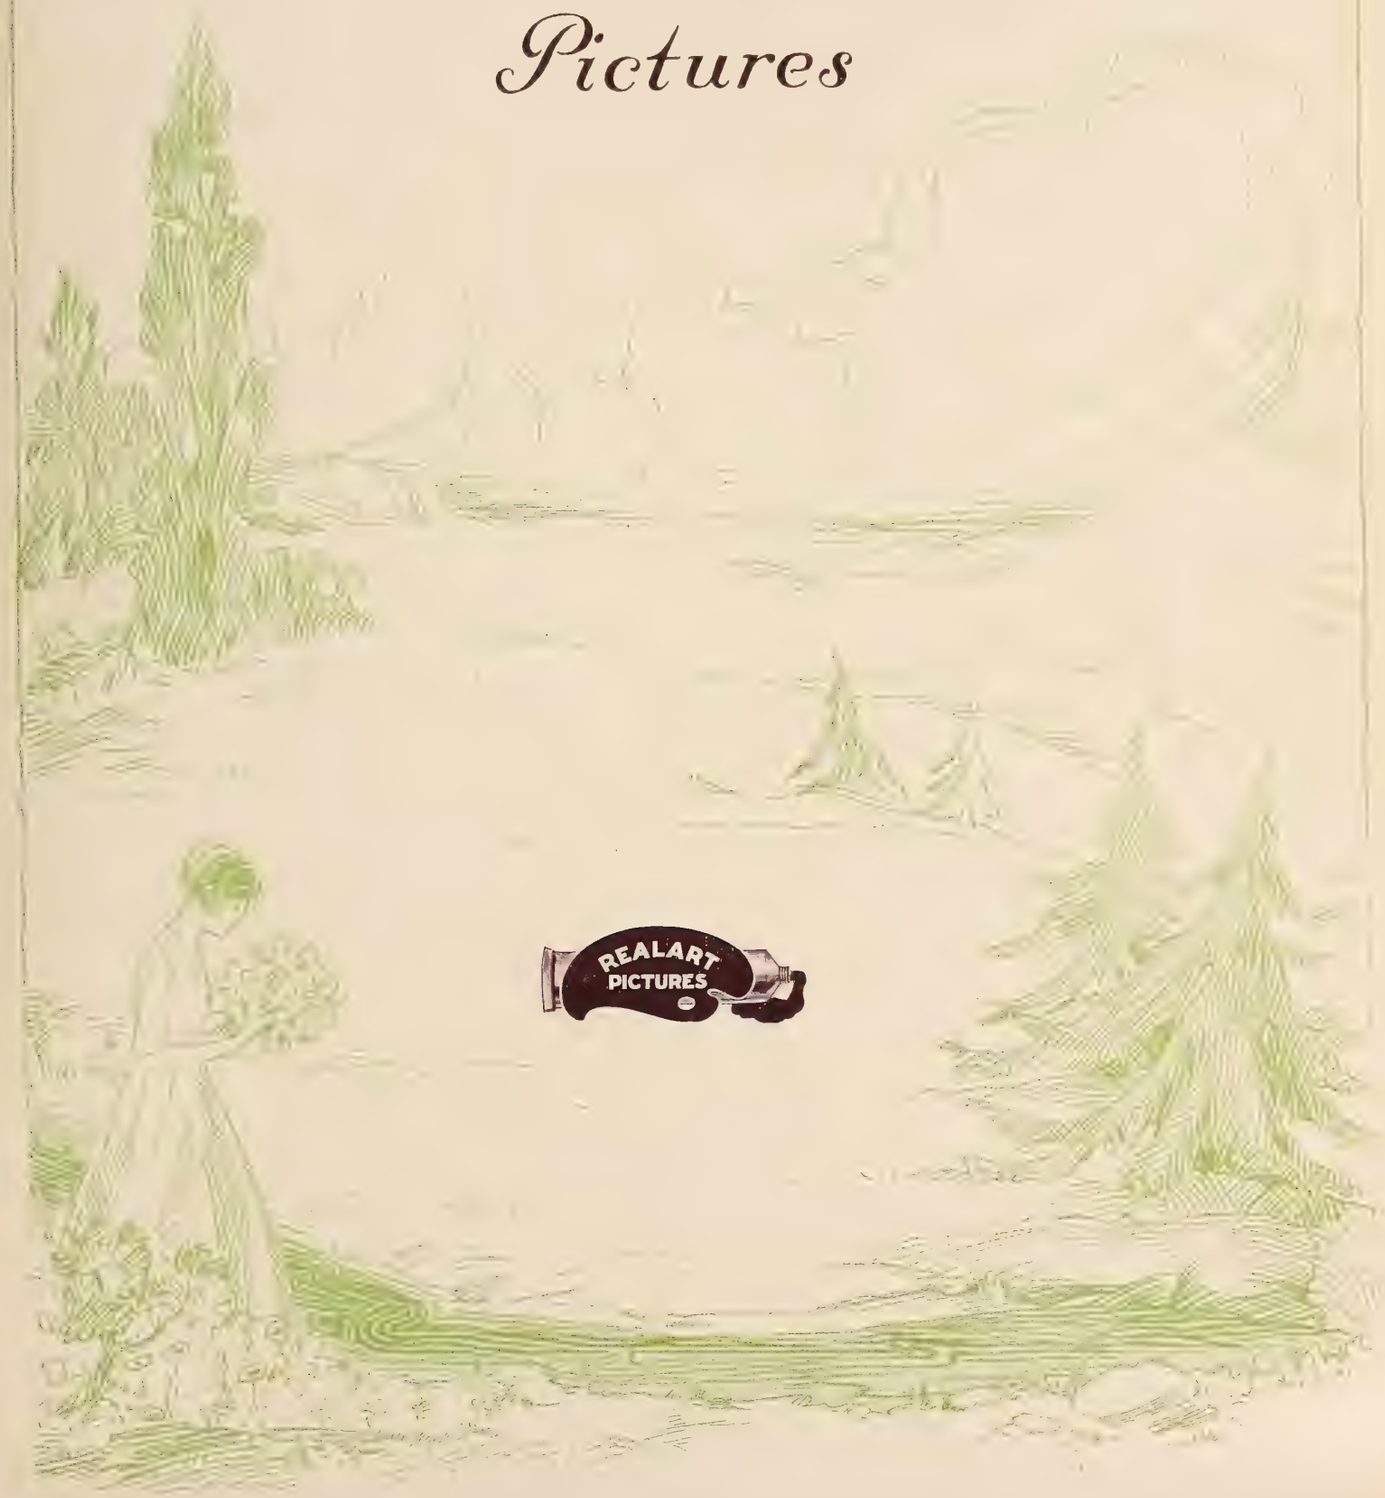
Announcing Realart Pictures



Dainty, Delicious, Delectable

MARY MILES MINTER

Where Youth and Beauty Meet

FIVE years the idol of millions of photoplay fans and still in her teens! Her coming Realart Pictures cover the largest sum of money ever contracted for by any star. In keeping with this is the scale on which production is being started.

Director - - WILLIAM D. TAYLOR, who directed Mary Pickford in "Johanna Enlists" and others.

Scenarioist - - FRANCES MARION, author or adaptor for Mary Pickford of "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm," "Johanna Enlists," "Amarilly of Clothes-line Alley" and "M'Liss."

For the coming season, Miss Minter will offer six Star Series pictures as clean and fresh and sweet as a May morning. The first, L. W. Montgomery's classic novels of American girlhood — the famous "Anne" books — takes its title from one of them,

ANNE OF GREEN GABLES

The sunny-tempered and vividly original "Anne" has a living counterpart in Mary Miles Minter whose bewitching charm, in five years of screen stardom, has made her one of America's national assets.

The "New York Evening Sun" says that

ALICE BRADY

"THROUGH her brilliant work behind the footlights has doubled the following which was hers as a star of the screen." That statement should be carefully considered by every Exhibitor in America because for him it is a matter of dollars and cents.

Miss Brady's remarkable record of 344 performances on Broadway in the Owen Davis play, "Forever After," has been one of the sensations of the theatrical season just closed. This brilliant young star of stage and screen will tour Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago and the larger cities the coming season, at the same time making her Star Series of eight Realart Pictures. Imagine the popularity that will be hers! Her sure grasp on the photoplay public already has been immeasurably heightened by recent smashing hits.

Miss Brady's commanding position and the importance of her new type of production, from big novels and plays, demand a supervehicle for the inauguration of her Realart Series. This has been found in the great Owen Davis play,

SINNERS

Produced four years ago by William A. Brady with Miss Brady herself in the leading part, little "Mary Horton."

This gripping play of elemental human emotions scored a tremendous success on Broadway, supplemented by a long season on tour.

Work on "Sinners" has already started, under the direction of Kenneth Webb. It is for release in September.

The Sensational Discovery of a
New York Theatrical Season is

CONSTANCE BINNEY

whose smashing success in "39 East" has been responsible for the phenomenal run of that play at the Broadhurst Theatre.

THIS bewitching, youthful, little star, bubbling over with human appeal in the Rachel Crothers play, has revealed how delightful her personality is on the screen in Maurice Tourneur's production, "Sporting Life," and opposite John Barrymore in his fine picture, "The Test of Honor." Miss Binney has been signed for a period of years to star in Realart Pictures. Her first will be a portrayal of the engaging Mennonite maid, "Barnabetta," in

Erstwhile Susan

This play is from the widely popular novel by Helen R. Martin and had, a season or two ago, a remarkable Broadway run with Mrs. Fiske in the title role. The delicious unfolding of character in the little 13-year old household drudge and her transition into winsome and lovable young womanhood fits Constance Binney like a glove.

This picture will be something for Exhibitors to wait for.

Planned for early Fall release.

The Hall Mark of Superiority

THE splendid trinity of youthful stars introduced on the preceding pages—each big by achievement and popular demand, but each still in the early morning of her full powers—presents the best sort of quality guarantee of forthcoming Realart Pictures. Its field, however, is not to be circumscribed by any given number of stars; but will include sterling special features by producers and directors of international reputation. It will be an open market for those who have distribution rights to place for the world for unusual screen productions and invites negotiations.

Realart's sponsors are men who have been schooled in every detail of the motion picture profession. They realize thoroughly that the Exhibitors of this country are the accredited representatives of millions of patrons of picture theatres, and it will be the aim always to "play up" to this great buying public through these representatives. Already the work of establishing exchanges in the principal cities is well under way and the Exhibitor, no matter where located, will be served promptly and intelligently. Realart bases its assurance of success on its determination to give each Exhibitor client a square deal and his local clientele the very top-notch of picture excellence.

VITAGRAPH

Do You Exhibitors Want Better Stories?

By F. McGrew Willis

(Formerly of Ince, Fox, Pathe, Universal, etc.)

I feel that the time has come when better motion picture stories must be secured if the interests of both the producer and the exhibitor are to be safeguarded. I am sure there are few exhibitors indeed who will not agree that the story is now and has got to be the thing. But I personally believe this: Stories are like gold—they are where you find them. It is absolutely impossible for staff writers time after time to deliver good stories because their viewpoint gets to be too narrow—they are hemmed in in too limited an environment. And the companies can not and must not depend upon stories that have to be adapted to the screen—stories written primarily for other purposes or written by writers who do not know motion pictures thoroughly or understand picture requirements. In order to get proper motion picture stories, these stories must be written solely with the screen in mind.

I firmly believe that there are hundreds and thousands of people in different walks of life who can write real motion picture stories, worth-while stories, stories that might be as big as any yet produced if only they would learn motion picture writing. But they can not do this until they learn it. They must learn the requirements of a successful motion picture story before they can construct one. A story must have so much of so much in it. The cast must be properly balanced. The characters and atmosphere properly contrasted. The story must be logical. There are dozens of these little things that must be woven into every story if it is to make the producer and the exhibitor money. And these things can not be put in haphazardly—they cannot be put in until the writers have learned them. Their scripts must be written fully and in detail. They must be written exactly as the directors want them written. Everything vital to the production must be put in—everything unnecessary left out. This branch of writing must be separate and distinct from any other.

Believing this, I have severed all connection with the Studios as a writer and have opened this Institute. I have been in the different studios for over five years writing original stories and adapting books and plays. I have made a study of studio requirements. I have the confidence of the directors and their support in this attempt I am now making. I am teaching writers the direct, detailed way of writing—a method that requires no technical terms or phrases. My whole idea is to get everyone who can write really worth while stories to write them. I believe that talent and genius can be found, encouraged and developed the same as magazine editors and stage producers find it and nourish it. The whole thing must be a combination of underlying talent and proper teaching. But the teaching is as necessary as the talent. Each needs the other and neither can make good without the other.

I have founded this Institute solely to make possible better stories. I believe this is the first time that an honest genuine attempt has been made to improve the quality of pictures by giving the producers a better foundation to build upon. This is the Institute's one aim. I am the sole head of it and there is no one else who has anything financially, or otherwise, to say about it. I am now maintaining a bureau where directors are selecting stories written by writers who are students of this Institute. This service is absolutely free. There is no charge to the producer nor is there any commission exacted from the writer for the sale of his stories. If you, as an exhibitor, are interested in this, all I ask is that you make it known to people whom you think have ability to create plots. If they are interested, they can get further information about the Institute by sending me their name and address. The literature they will receive in reply is absolutely free and it explains about the Institute, its policy, the help it offers and its terms.

A PERSONAL WORD TO THE EXHIBITORS: For more than five years I have known F. McGrew Willis personally. During this period he has been identified with the leading West Coast Studios both as a writer of original photoplays and as an adapter of books and plays. He has written innumerable feature stories and has prepared vehicles for more than twenty of the different big stars. His total produced stories run into the hundreds. He knows, absolutely, the motion picture game.

I am giving him my personal support because he is honestly trying to better conditions by establishing an Institute to help producers secure better stories. And I believe him thoroughly qualified to undertake this work. There is no question as to the integrity and reliability of the Institute of which he is the head.

Picture Ranks High as an Entertainment—Notable Players Also Figure in Unfolding Story.

A distinguished gathering saw the story of the "Lost Battalion" retold on the motion picture screen at the Ritz-Carlton last night. The picture, presented by Edward A. MacManus, is one of the first film romances of the exploits of the war. Officers and men of the famous battalion played their original roles, and the original official documents are used as subtitles.

The showing last night was attended by guests of Major General Robert Alexander, commander of the Seventy-seventh Division. The picture had a particular and personal interest for many in the audience. It deals exclusively with the record of heroism of New York's own troops. Lieutenant Colonel Whittlesley, whose answer "Go to hell" has become one of the historic sayings of the war, saw himself and his comrades immortalized on the screen.

As a film entertainment, the picture ranks unusually high. The scenario was prepared by Charles A. Logue from the true stories of the men of the Lost Battalion. The direction is credited to Burton King, who has given the picture remarkable human interest as well as patriotic fire. To see the story of the Lost Battalion is like viewing "The Birth of a Nation" with its original cast of Civil War heroes.

NEW YORK HERALD

At the Ritz Carlton last night a motion picture entitled "The Lost Battalion," in which the survivors of that famous detachment of the American forces in France posed for a feature reproduction of their great exploit in the Argonne Forest, was shown before a distinguished audience assembled on invitation of Major General Robert Alexander, commanding the Seventy-seventh Division.

The film was made under the direction of Edward A. MacManus with the co-operation of General Alexander and Lieutenant Colonel Charles W. Whittlesey, commander of "The Lost Battalion," for the purpose of perpetuating in active pictorial form the participation by the United States troops in the great war forming one of the most vivid chapters in the history of the conflict.

The net income from the film, which will be shown in a theatre in this city and later throughout the country, will be turned over to the Welfare Association of the Seventy-seventh Division which has established its headquarters and permanent club house in the old Astor Library in Lafayette place.

LOST BATTALION ON SCREEN

Gen. Alexander Sees First Showing of Film of Argonne Defense.

Major Gen. Robert Alexander, U. S. A., was the host last night for a reception and entertainment to the survivors of the Lost Battalion, the unit of the Seventy-seventh Division which under his command penetrated the Forest of the Argonne and held out for six days in one of the most spectacular defenses of the war. The entertainment, given in the ballroom of the Ritz-Carlton, included the first showing of the screen reproduction of the "Lost Battalion" and was the first re-enactment of a history-making battle of this war.

The picture was reproduced by Edward A. MacManus, under the personal supervision of General Alexander. The United States Signal Corps collaborated in the photoplay, making it possible to show the public the original maps and documents used by the staff officers of our army during the fighting. Lieut. Col. Whittlesey, commanding the six companies which were trapped, Companies A, C, D, F, G, and K, was one of the "stars" who acted in the picture.

MOVIES SHOW LOST BATTALION IN WAR

Heroes See Pictures of Themselves in Action.

The career of the Lost Battalion of the 308th Infantry, from its genesis in the draft, at Camp Upton, through the training in France, its magnificent six day fight against overwhelming odds in the Argonne, to the last triumphal march up Fifth avenue, was shown to the members of the battalion and their friends last night at the Ritz. The heroic stand of the battalion in the forest is the theme of a considerable portion of the film, and is depicted with great realism.

The German demand for the organization's surrender, a typewritten sheet in awkward English and alternating between ungraceful compliments and threats, was exhibited, and Major Whittlessey and the men who were with him when the document was received reenacted the scene in person. I Am a Business Man!

My business is to produce Serials that will make money for the Distributor and the Exhibitor — and give the fans their money's worth.

I do this so that I can stay on good terms with my market — and make a fair profit for myself.

I gave you "The Silent Mystery" and you cleaned up. Now I give you my word that The MYSTERY of "13" has even more of that punch and pulling power that registers in the Box-Office.

As a business man of the Theatre I know that to be true. As business men let us get together.

Why I Perfected Mystery Serials

With more successful Serials to my credit than any other Serial Director or Star—I have found that heart-interest, action, and punch, must be held together by constant suspense situations—in other words—a mystery element.

My long string of mystery serials developed the fact that mystery appealed to all the fans.

Therefore, to do my duty to the Producer, the Distributor, the Exhibitor and the Fans, I have given seven of my most active years to the perfection of Mystery Serials.

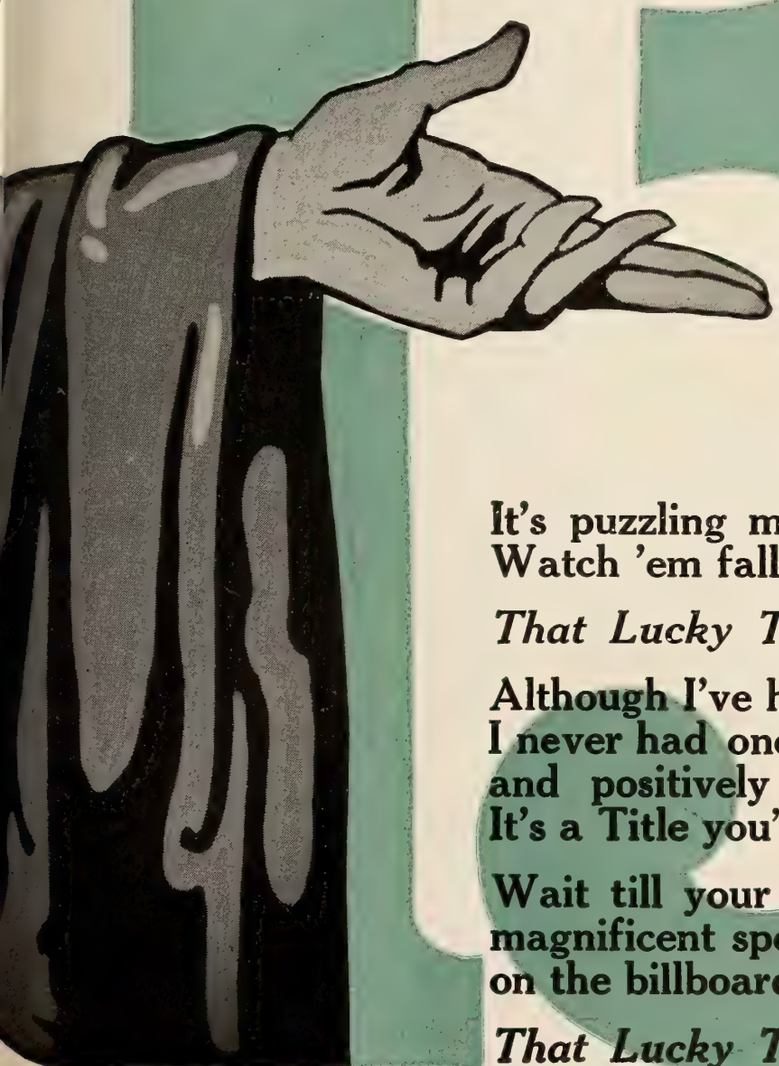
That Lucky Title!

I knew it was a Mascot Title the minute it came to me.

It's got mystery, thrills, speed, and advertising and stunt possibilities galore—and that weird and enticing allure that will jam your house to the doors.

That Lucky Title!

I've kept it a secret—hidden it—taken it out and looked at it—and thought and dreamed of what could be done with it to last for "13" weeks. Now it's ripe.



That Lucky Title!

A "13" time winner, as the old saying is. It grows on you. It's a find! The MYSTERY of "13"—What is the mystery of "13"? It has puzzled the wise men of the ages.

It's puzzling millions of fans right now. Watch 'em fall for it.

That Lucky Title!

Although I've handled thousands of titles I never had one before that I absolutely and positively KNEW was PERFECT. It's a Title you'll never forget.

Wait till your patrons see the magnificent special "13" paper on the billboards—Oh, Boy!

EVOLUTION

Number Two

My first advertisement, "EVOLUTION," appeared in the trade papers of June 28th. It brought many letters, which are receiving careful consideration.

I expressed the opinion that the system of national film distribution through a group of exchanges owned, controlled and managed, from a New York or Chicago executive office, is wasteful, and declared my intention of obtaining an interest in a group of independent exchanges, locally controlled

SELF-PRESERVATION is the first law of the film business, as it is of nature.

The chief concern of the Exhibitor, the Exchange and Producer, is HIS OWN PROSPERITY.

Business is unavoidably SELFISH; professions of philanthrophy from Producer or Distributor toward the Exhibitor are as sounding brass and tinkling cymbals and hollow as the flare of a horn. But — — —:

ENLIGHTENED SELF-INTEREST conserves the welfare of those with whom one does business — — —:

That means to the Exchange, the welfare of BOTH Producer and Exhibitor.

In line with the spirit of the times I believe that ultimately every SUBORDINATE employe of an exchange should become a PARTNER during his employment — — —:

Not the receiver of a casual bonus, but the assured OWNER of a share in the business at a percentage fixed when he is employed, based upon the economic value of his services, and such partnership to be surrendered upon discharge or resignation.

This would make the poster boy, the film inspector, the shipper, the bookkeeper, the salesman and the booker, PARTNERS in the BUSINESS.

The best men would be attracted from every department of the exchange business, all being ENTHUSIASTIC WORKERS — — —:

Such a TYPICAL EXCHANGE then becomes a living, VITAL ORGANISM, aggressive at every point because every factor has a strong personal SELF-INTEREST in its success.

The typical INDEPENDENT Exchange will be UNHAMPERED by outside dictation, having no reports, explanations or apologies to make to a distant superior officer.

The office can give its time to the legitimate purpose of GETTING BUSINESS and taking proper CARE of ORDERS.

The typical exchange will not be told by New York or Chicago that the town of PEWEE must pay $42.50 for a film because it has a population of 5000, when the exchange manager KNOWS a lot more about Pewee and its ABILITY TO PAY than do we of the HOME OFFICE swivel chair.

The active managers of a typical independent exchange, being OWNERS or part owners, cannot shift responsibility to a DISTANT EXECUTIVE; they deal with exhibitors EYE to EYE; they have a direct PERSONAL GAIN if their customer is held by SERVICE, and SUFFER if they lose him.

Why these advertisements?

BECAUSE — — —: I want to attract the attention of the BEST MEN in the film Exchange business.

BECAUSE — — —: I want to help BUILD and hold an interest in the most EFFICIENT and ENDURING group of Exchanges in the country; independent yet allied; acting in CO-OPERATION, NOT in COMBINATION.

BECAUSE — — —: I want to be close to such a group, as I am going to resume PRODUCTION and want my films to be distributed by the most CAPABLE organization in the business.

BECAUSE — — —: I want Independent Producers of the first rank to release their product through this group of Exchanges, recognizing their strength and high efficiency.

BECAUSE — — —: I want to see the theory of PARTNERSHIP extended to Directors of Production, as well as Camera Men and others whose work counts importantly in the STUDIO.

¶ A recent test of trade paper circulation and influence, made in thorough fashion, by a prominent concern shows that MOTION PICTURE NEWS leads any other paper in this field by at least 3 to 1.

This agrees almost identically with a previous test, made as thoroughly by another prominent company.

Another exhaustive test not yet completed shows MOTION PICTURE NEWS away in the lead.

Think this over—or make your own test.

If the advertising pages of MOTION PICTURE NEWS are three times as valuable as those of any other publication you are cheating yourself unless you put your main selling campaign in the dominating paper.

You waste at least one third of your appropriation if you do otherwise.

That's the plain truth.

¶ Right above, Mr. Advertiser, is the trade paper situation.

Plain as daylight.

The "NEWS" is three times stronger than any other medium.

That's what the tests show right along, every one.

Three times the punch to your advertising—three times the value to every dollar—three times the selling force back of your pictures and equipment.

Use that middle avenue.

There's your one, main, plain road to the exhibitor, to the public.

Put right there the bulk—three times by every plain law of advertising logic—of your advertising campaign.

The exhibitor will thank you.

You will thank yourself.

Charlie Chaplin Has Another Rival and This Time It's a Woman

GALE HENRY is the most unrestrained comic in the movies.

The joy of the pictures in which she is featured is unconfined, and unrefined. Fortunately the period has passed when the test of any art was whether or not it is refined. The proper, recognized test of poetry is "Is it poetic?" The test of a comic, now, is, "Is it funny?"

Gale Henry is funny!

Not always, but often, and that is more than can be said of many in the movies or on the stage.

Her Style

A specimen of the robust style is to be seen currently in a comic called "Her Honor, the Scrub Lady."

Gale Henry, in all her comics, plays a witless, awkward woman. In this particular work she is a scrub woman in a summer hotel who is persuaded by the management to impersonate a countess.

She makes her appearance in a ball gown at the head of the stairs leading to the supper room.

She bows elegantly, and falls down the stairs to the bottom step, where she sits up and surveys the fashionable gathering thru her lorgnette, superciliously.

The Steak

She is led to a place of honor at the table, where she bends her knife and fork on a tough steak. It slips off her plate to the floor, and a dog runs away with it. She directs her neighbor's attention to the ceiling and snitches his steak. It is as tough as the other.

She takes it in her hand, hunts up the cook in the kitchen, opens his mouth, pounds the steak into it, and makes him swallow his steak whole.

The guests burn rum on lumps of sugar with their coffee. One of the guests, so engaged, sets fire to his whiskers. She puts him out with the fire-hose from the dining room wall.

Two Gale Henry comedies soon to be released are "Her First Flame" and "The Detectress."

THE real showmen of this country, men with big ideas and clear vision, realize that Essanay-Chaplin comedies are classics—and like books of exceptional merit, are enjoyed a second or third time as much or more than the first. The Essanay-Chaplin revivals have demonstrated this beyond question. There are real showmen in towns of 500 to 5,000,000. Are you one of them? Fifty-fifty or Fight!

"I formerly believed that "dealer cooperation" was possible, between the producer and distributor on the one hand and the exhibitor on the other: but I long ago came to the realization that the interests of these elements are diametrically opposed."

This comes from an exhibitor, a thinking exhibitor apparently, one of quite a number who have learned business logic in other businesses and wants to see it applied in this business.

His declaration so parallels the statements we are getting right along from exhibitors that we feature it here as hitting the keynote of the large and perhaps ominous situation now looming larger and larger upon the picture horizon.

We have already outlined this situation.

Open booking has arrived.

For years the exhibitor has wanted it: now, evidently, he is uneasy.

He is uneasy over rental prices.

And right here suspends a crisis, perhaps the greatest crisis this business has thus far faced. Already the rumblings of a conflict, a considerable conflict, are audible.

Let's state the situation baldly.

The house in a non-competitive location isn't worrying. Such a house has its local situation tied up—its own way; or it belongs to a chain or booking circuit. In the one event the theatre feels it can dictate prices; in the other it has the protecting power of the booking chain.

The house facing competition is worrying. It fears that once it plays a single picture or a star series—and does well, that rentals on the following pictures will be elevated out of reach.

So a tug of war impends. Each side—the exhibitor on one, the producer-distributor on the other—is reaching out to fortify his position.

It is not to be wondered at that chain theatres and booking circuits are increasing everywhere.

It is not unnatural that the producer-distributor should reach out to acquire theatres and so become a producer-distributor-exhibitor.

But is this situation sound?

The answer is a big one—too big for this space, if all points are to be carried.

May we point out two simple business truths, however? They are simple but very large ones.

First the elimination of competition, in any business, is only a short cut to temporary relief. It isn't economically sound. No business thrives on it, nor expands as it should, broadly, healthfully and permanently. This has been proven time and again.

Secondly, what becomes of the cooperation, the mutual upholding of interests between producer, distributor and exhibitor—that same manufacture-dealer cooperation and mutuality which flourish in every sound business and which we know and say must be brought about in this business?

Are these interests to be "diametrically opposed?" Are we to see this year an out and out war, a purely selfish struggle, and a stern survival of the fittest?

We believe not: such blindness is inconceivable.

Just the same, there is a danger.

There must be fairness, there must be give and take all along the line; there must be intellignce and organization to carry out intelligent policies.

Neither side is blameless. There are exhibitors who want rentals too low and there are distributors who want them too high.

The right price basis is mighty difficult to arrive at: because, as we have pointed out, advertising is the motive power behind pictures and it makes the most widely varying box office receipts at the present time due simply to the fact that some exhibitors know how and some don't.

So the rental price question must be solved, fairly, in the interests equally of the manufacturer and dealer.

It must be fifty-fifty: or it will be—fight!

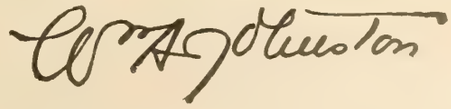
Perhaps a percentage or part percentage arrangement will be the answer. But surely there is some fair answer.

The right way is certainly not the way of forcing the other fellow to do what you selfishly want—by so lining up your forces as to say: "take it or leave it."



Speaking Editorially

The Boycott Through English Eyes

WITH the arrival of the British trade publications in this country it becomes possible to secure some sort of perspective on the recent Glasgow exhibitors' conference and its resolutions regarding the Famous Players-Lasky Company.

Considerable light is also thrown on the subject by clippings from the British daily press which Motion Picture News has received.

The outstanding point—at least to a newspaper man—is the disclosure that it was the familiar "Trust" bogey at which the Glasgow meeting shied. Not so much were they wrought up because British interests allied with Famous Players are going into the exhibiting end—many English producers have been in a similar situation for a long time—but because the speakers pointed out the threatening shadow of a "Trust."

It is a known fact that no cry of "Wolf" ever surpassed in attention-value that one word "Trust." And in England it is emphasized into "American Trust Methods."

An appraisal of the unbiased British attitude can probably be based on the view of The Bioscope which, after stating its belief in the sincere purpose and integrity of the exhibitors at the meeting, goes on to say:

"From the tone of the meeting and the opinions expressed in the speeches, we take it that the view of the gathering is that any further considerable addition to the number of picture theatres in the country is undesirable as a matter of general policy, whilst, as a point of particular principle, it is especially felt that any such developments should be left to the discretion and enterprise of existing exhibitors.

"By the familiar bogey of the "American Trust," we do not conceive that the more level-headed members of the industry are genuinely scared.

"If it be really true that the promoters of the much-criticised new concern are cut-throat conspirators hungry for the flesh of the defenceless customers they themselves helped to fatten, we can only express wonder that so much blank idiocy should be concealed beneath an apparently intelligent exterior. Cannibalism is not commerce. You cannot eat your client and have him too. If the Famous-Lasky group are eager to devour the British exhibitor, it may be regarded as certain that they in turn will perish of starvation without any external assistance at this slaughter."

The Subject of Reviews

EVERY now and then an exhibitor enters our office with indignation writ large on his face. "Your reviews are sometimes so far off I don't know how you can get that far away. Why you said 'Tessie Tootsies' was a good picture and it was an awful piece of cheese. I played it; I know. And any exhibitor in my section will tell you the same thing."

"Just a minute," we reply. "'Tessie Tootsies' did you say?" And we look up our file of Exhibitor Box Office Reports.

In a few minutes we have placed before our irate friend a dozen or so reports from exhibitors, big and little, who declare, "'Tessie Tootsies' a masterpiece." "'Tessie Tootsies' cleaned-up for me." "Extended the run another week."

Our exhibitor cools down, "Well, maybe they liked it. But it died for me."

"What are we going to do about it?" we ask. "We engage the best men available. We place them in touch in every possible way with the thoughts and desires of exhibitors in the field. But don't forget—that a review has to express the opinion of but one man, while four thousand men with four thousand different opinions are going to book the picture."

Listen for the Cry of "Help!"

SCREEN rights to plays are being bought before the dramas see the boards; magazine stories are scanned in the wet proofs for possible film subjects; novels old and new are being read by a hundred eager eyes in search of opportunities to expend checks for fabulous sums.

Along about November and December listen for the cry of "Help!"

The sure-fire novels and plays will have reached heights that even the "star evil" never dreamed of. Fifty per cent of the adaptations will have flivvered miserably; fifty per cent will have made good. But two or three big original scenarios will have scored smashing hits.

And—just as the Saturday Evening Post craze came overnight—everyone will be "following the leader." There'll be a helter-skelter scramble for "Sure-fire original scenario writers—screen creators—where are they?"

Where will they be? Driven to other pursuits long ago? Crippled and perverted by days and nights of continuity grinding?

Why not?

International Bonds of Sympathy

MOVING forward a step in our discussion of the British viewpoint towards American producers we invite the attention of the latter to the letter from an English theatre owner on page 687 of this issue.

"American producers are too much like the parrot—they talk too much—and too big," says this well-wisher in a tone of kindly advice.

A word to the wise on the danger of too many words should help.

And there are those among our readers who will add a further word to the effect that the application of our British friend's advice should not be limited to the far side of the pond.

Pictures—Not Policies

WILLIAM FOX takes the limelight this week in the popular vaudeville performance, "Making the Fall Announcements."

There are two outstanding thoughts born by a glance over the announcement of the Fox organization. The first is that Mr. Fox seems to lay more emphasis on pictures than on policy.

The second is that Mr. Fox seems able to see a pretty broad expanse of picture theatres, and that his production aims are directed at meeting the desires of every sort of theatre. A cursory glance at the announcement would seem to disclose a nice balance between "class" and "mass."

* * * * *

Where Are the Men?

"WE have the money to build more houses in our chain, we know good locations," said a circuit head to us recently. "But we are actually hesitating solely because of the scarcity of good house managers. A high-calibred house manager measuring up to the value of your investment in the house is as rare as snow in Patagonia."

This friend of ours is not the first to mention the scarcity of top-notch managers. And we have heard the same report regarding the difficulty of securing high-speed advertising men for circuits and large houses, not to mention the troubles distributors have encountered when they set out on the ambitious plan of "putting a live wire exploitation man in every exchange."

Where are the men?

Are they coming up from "the sticks"? Or is it true even in "the sticks" that it is too easy in this game for the good field man to "go it on his own" in preference to salaried submission to a boss?

Dealing in Personalities

DO you enjoy a good fight? A real two-fisted scrap? Of course you can't do anything else until you have finished this palpitating page but as soon as you do, turn to Page 687. Let your eye drop to the article on the outside column, which we have headed "Wow! Biff! Zowie!"

'Tisn't much of a heading, we'll admit, but it is a darn good scrap. It's a case of one exhibitor calling another—and calling him considerable.

Of course you're going to read that—no film man ever let a good battle pass by. And while you are at it, don't miss any of the other zippy split-reel feature articles that the next four pages present.

F'r instance, the page of photos of English exhibitors. These British subscribers to MOTION PICTURE NEWS offer some real worth while advice to American producers. Especially worth while in view of acute developments certain to come soon in the market across the pond.

Life is not all dear and drab. Mr. Astor Muschenheim, who was bewailing the loss of revenue due to prohibition, has discovered that he will make up a large part of it in the saving on laundry bills. The film sessions don't seem to have the energy any more to mark the tablecloths up with ciphers and diagrams. The midnight meetings are almost mournful in their quietude. The noon gatherings occasionally get as far as $1000, but no quantity of coffee could inspire them to millions.

THERE'S a great big pair of shoes vacant over at the Strand theatre—and it will require a big man to fill them. Joe Plunkitt has been grabbed by Famous Players-Lasky. And we envy Joe the popularity evidenced by the hearty chorus of good wishes following the announcement.

Just what Joe's new duties are to be is something of a mystery. In fact, it has been impossible to secure an official statement from Famous Players regarding the new appointee. But we may take it for granted that it will have something to do with the theatre plans concerning which there is so much buzzing.

The strange part about that theatre buzzing is that everybody seems to know everything—the men out in the "sticks" hear all sorts of versions from every different salesman—and still the men in New York who should see the wisdom in clearing the air are playing ostrich.

Well, it's a great life, if you don't weaken.

Last week we chronicled on this page the news that the hand of S. A. Lynch was stretching out to Oklahoma. This week we may give you the news that the same hand has laid its touch on the Wilby houses in Alabama. And so the merry war goes on. Then, as we go to press, comes the news that the S. A. Lynch Enterprises have acquired the Alcazar and Bonita in Tampa, Florida, and acquired the lease on the Grand. And so it goes. And—as we said before—while film salesmen spread their own versions New York plays ostrich.

STILL another film distributing organization enters the field. This one called the Equity, and with faces formerly prominent in Universal among the organizers. Remember the hint we gave you last week about the story about to break in the neighborhood of 1600 Broadway. This is half of it—but someone is still holding out on us, boys.

Equity will distribute the productions of Clara Kimball Young and another star as yet unnamed. In addition, we understand, there are plans for a few big specials during the year.

Just another of the many reasons why it is going to be a great big merry Fall, boys and girls. There'll be so many big pictures we won't be able to turn around. And each one is going to have "the last word in exploitation." We asked Joe Lee where they were going to get all the exploitation geniuses required to meet the plans.

"They're not going to get them," said Joe. "They may as well search for a thousand a week booking at the Methodist convention."

Speaking of the Methodist convention reminds us that "Hopp" Hadley has returned from vacationing in his flivver. "Hopp" slipped something over at the Columbus convention by using his real name, Samuel Hopkins Hadley, which happens to be that of an uncle who was considerable shining light in church circles. Returning to the vacation talk, we might tell you that "Hopp" saw close to three quarters of the earth's surface in his flivvering and now has a badly crippled bus in the hospital.

LARGELY in the hopes that we might pry a story loose we wish to spread the hint on the records that there will soon be a big story breaking in the neighborhood of the Gaumont Flushing plant. Colonel Bromhead, of the English house, is in this city for one thing. Secondly, we hear from College Point that Gaumont has taken over the Powell studio there. So keep your ears to the ground, boys and girls.

Gaumont has met with considerable success during the past year marketing short subjects on state rights. Wonder if this organization is among those which plan to take advantage of open market conditions by supplying the independent exchange with feature subjects during the coming year.

Seems to us that the reliable independent exchange, if furnished with real product, will have the opportunity of its life this year. But our guess as to what present developments are going to bring about three months from now is no better than yours—so make your own.

Famous Players-Lasky isn't going to be alone over there in Long Island City. Now we hear that Lewis J. Selznick is also going to turn his footsteps across the bridge and erect a big producing plant on the other side of the river. Where is the fellow who said six months ago that the New York territory was dead as a producing center? Mr. Fox, Mr. Zukor, Mr. Laemmle and Mr. Selznick want to speak to him.

DID you ever see so much activity in the serial field? If there is one serial at work in the studios now there must be at least twenty. And there are those who can prove to you that seven serials is the maximum that the field can absorb at any one time!

From what we hear the export field is responsible in large part for the serial boom. "Why," said one producer to us, "you can get the cost of production on export sales in many cases merely by showing the scenario. The Far East is bringing over fifteen thousand; Spain and Portugal six thousand; and the prices mean cash."

The desire of the export field for the thrills and sensations of the serial is probably a forecast of the after-the-war attitude that will soon predominate in this country. Light comedy drama, melodramatic thrills, anything that gets away from the morbid and sordid problem stuff seems to have the call.

A batch of personals: Edgar Lewis postcards from Shanghai that he met Ethel Clayton there. Arthur Levey has arrived in Paris. H. H. Van Loan has completed a motor trip up the coast from Los Angeles. Jake Wilk postcards from the Great Lakes that it's a great place for an editor. W. R. Rothacker has been in Los Angeles, but will start soon for New York. Charles Garfield, of the Orpheum, Flint, Mich., was a recent exhibitor visitor to Motion Picture News. Another is John J. Walker, of the Lincoln, Schenectady, who is working on a new 1200 seat house at State and Barrett streets, that city. Merle Smith, George Kleine's representative, is in town.

THIS week MOTION PICTURE NEWS shakes hands in good-by to R. E. Pritchard. And to say that we are as sorry to lose him as many exhibitor friends will be to lose his aid is putting it mildly.

Mr. Pritchard joins the staff of the Allen Theatrical Enterprises, and is tackling something that is more than a man's-size job. Since it does measure up that big we don't suppose we can express our faith in Bob Pritchard any more strongly than to say that we know he will more than fill the bill.

OUR OWN "HELP WANTED"

AT ONCE—Seventy-eight high speed, super-six, ninety-horse-power rewrite men. Must be inhuman dynamos. Fall indications are that at least sixteen of them will be needed to handle the daily publicity output of one large producing company, six for another and one, two or three for the balance. Preference will be given to men who can double in brass by explaining to publicity men why all their stuff could not be used in a two hundred page book.—Apply R. E. W., Motion Picture News.

The Studio Millennium

An Ambitious Scheme for Ideal Production Management Is Suggested in J. Arthur Nelson's Second Article—Next, the Exhibitor

TWO things stand out with cameo-clearness when we come to consider the shortcomings of production activity. One is the plan of organization under which the average studio operates—the other is our present inefficient type of studio management. This condition is due to our inability to effect an elastic plan of organization which will meet the peculiar requirements of motion picture production. Under the present system waste and lost motion is predominant on one hand and, on the other, initiative is throttled, genius stifled and originality smothered to death under a multiplicity of rules whose inelasticity defeat the very object—quality, economy and speed—for which a truly efficient system should stand.

In its mechanical application the manufacture of motion pictures does not differ from that of any other product. There is a science as well as an art in the making of pictures—one has to do with the rigid application of economic principles—the other is concerned with the intangible and elastic application of creative thought. One may be expressed in a code of exact terms, but no one can definitely determine the other. One cannot, for example, say to a portrait painter that he shall begin at seven minutes to seven and complete his picture at ten minutes to ten. Nor should we, on the other hand, permit him to spend his nights selecting his paints and his waking hours to supervising mechanical detail. The only system that is fundamentally correct is that which surrounds the director with a capable organization and insists upon him devoting his undivided attention to his story.

The manufacturing organizations of modern systematized industries are built upon lines which have for their object—(1) Quality, (2) Economy, (3) Speed.

In this business we are popularly, but often erroneously, supposed to be more concerned with quality than we are with economy and speed—but results do not always show it. Constant ding-donging on the overly long time and fabulous sums expended upon productions has come to be regarded, ipso facto, as an expression of quality. Unfortunately, however, this theory does not work out in practice. In excluding the economical consideration of time conservation from our manufacturing program we have deliberately, if unconsciously, defeated the very object—quality of production—which this "exclusion" was supposedly designed to encompass. Speeding up production is, however, just as necessary in this industry as in any other—if anything it is even more important. But this "speeding up" should not be confounded with undue or unorganized haste, or with a false conservation of time or money. Each production, for example, while in the hands of the writer or director, is a law unto itself. In so far, then, as these two forces are concerned, elasticity, rather than set rules, must prevail if quality is to be assured.

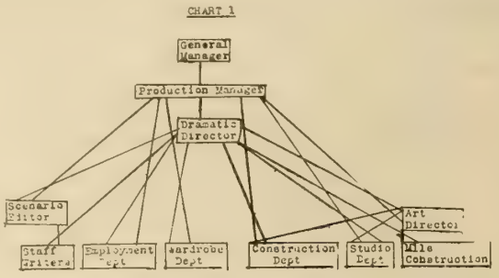

Chart I

Organization is not red tape. It is system—intelligent co-ordination—a machine whose every part functions. Efficiency, moreover, does not mean cumbersome methods and restrictions. Efficiency is applied common sense.

As a substitute for present disorganized methods I propose a scientific systematization of the whole manufacturing organization, which will co-ordinate and function.

In order to conserve time and space, as well as to save a mass of technical explanation, I offer herewith two organization charts.

Chart 1 illustrates the sort of studio organization now most in use.

Under this system the production manager is little more than a lackey to fetch and carry for the director. On the other hand, the director assumes responsibility out of all proportion to the time he has to expend upon it.

Note how under this system orders (typified by lines) cross and recross each other. This leads to confusion, favoritism, mediocrity and waste. In order to make this chart as simple as possible I have shown the activity of but one director. Add a half dozen others (which most studios employ) and you have one of the reasons for high rentals and poor productions. By comparing this system with Chart 2, which is the form of organization that I advocate, the difference in methods will be apparent. Here all orders come through one channel. There is no overlapping of responsibility. This is the only method by which conflict of authority can be eliminated and responsibility accurately fixed.

Even in systems which vary from the one now in use the director is permitted to pass upon manuscripts, to make changes in sets and working schedules, or to effect compromises which naturally prevent such organizations from moving as effectually as they should.

Under the system I propose (Chart 2) the director of productions is the responsible head of the manufacturing organization. To be capable he should be an able executive with trained technical ability, who is well versed in economic principles as applied to modern business methods, conversant with scientific factory management and approved accounting practice, and know production values from the unwritten idea to the successfully completed production. The right kind of man will see that he is put in touch with the general and specific policies of his company, the tendencies and impending changes in home and foreign markets, exhibitors' problems, competitors' activity, and other related and pertinent information. He should have control of the accounting department of the studio from which, if it is properly organized, he would be able to learn the exact cost of any production, with all related details, up to any given time so that he may anticipate leaks which are now seldom if ever found, or, if found, are only dimly recognizable for what they really are.

One of the conditions which this plan of organization aims to correct is the present method of selecting stories, and putting them into "work."

No story should be even tentatively ac-

White Slave Picture Stirs Up Nebraska to Demand Censor Board —American Films Keep Up British Market

"THE Trey O' Hearts" is the fifteen-episode serial by Louis Joseph Vance, announced by Universal.

Jane Grey appears in a four-reel Famous Players Film Company feature, "The Little Gray Lady."

The Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company announces that Max Figman and Lolita Robertson will appear in Harold MacGrath's great novel, "The Man on the Box," released July 13.

Mutual Film Corporation is selling to states rights buyers a Mexican War Thriller in seven massive reels portraying vivid actual battles taken by their cameramen under fire on the stirring scene of action. It is entitled "General Villa in Battle."

The second split in the ranks of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League is threatened as M. A. Neff, former President of the League, withdraws after M. A. Pearce of Maryland is elected President at the Dayton convention. The amalgamation of the two rival exhibitors' associations is looked upon as a certainty, with Neff removed.

Major Metellus L. Funkhouser, Chicago Police Deputy and film censor, is on the witness stand trying to justify his film censoring peculiarities.

A legitimate theatre in Omaha has just run a white slave picture and so stirred up the folks there that a censor board is threatened to embarrass the regular exhibitors of motion pictures.

As several exchanges have entered Washington, D. C., recently it looks as if this will become a film distributing point of some prominence.

At last the motion picture theatre de luxe and the Follies Bergere of picturedom has arrived. Charles J. Hite, president of Thanhouser Film Corporation, has installed the Broadway Rose Gardens Theatre and Danse de Pierrette at 52nd Street and Broadway, New York City.

The handsome Maxine Theatre opened in Buffalo and it will maintain the high-class ten-cent standard admission prices although its immediate competitors are five-cent houses.

Horace G. Plimpton declares that at the present time the American made pictures are the backbone of the British market.

David Horsley announces that he will produce seven comedies a week under his new plan. He declares that the big feature film as a steady diet is bound to go, as the falling of receipts will force the long features out.

The recently organized Paramount announces that it will go into the open market and buy the best films of all producing companies.

Harry H. Green and W. Al. Steffes of Minneapolis are rejoicing at the withdrawal of Neff.

The English Situation

A Good Humored Warning From An English Exhibitor—"Don't Talk So Blame Much"

FROM W. Harlan, a subscriber to Motion Picture News, and manager of the Bungalow, Portobellow, Midlothian, comes the following interesting comment regarding the recent British exhibitor conference that threatened a boycott of Famous Players-Lasky Pictures.

"Dear Mr. Johnston:

"I am enclosing herewith clippings giving a report of a meeting of exhibitors at Glasgow today. As you can judge therefrom, there is a pretty stern feeling against the American film producers and especially so against the Famous Players-Lasky Company.

"They are not alone, however, in stirring up the ire of exhibitors, renters, and all interested in the trade. I am certain the attitude of some of the big concerns in America is doing more to injure the film trade of the States with Great Britain than their united efforts can undo in months to come.

"These fellows from the U. S. A. are like the parrot: They talk too much—and too big. And this present time is most inopportune to talk at all.

"The production end of the film business here is open to much improvement, but just the same, allied with the renters and exhibitors, they are capable of putting up a resistance that would put a crimp in the operations as well as the bankroll of American corporations who incur their enmity.

"Co-operation and legitimate rivalry they will accept in the right spirit, but they will not stand for the trust game."

Here's a Fight Started!—It's Private But You Can Look on Anyway— Dodge the Fists!

SOLELY because we deal only in gentle humor and serious trade discussions, we have had to make some slight amendments in the following letter. The exhibitor who wrote it probably didn't care whether we used his name and all the details, but, being the referee, we have to be fair to both sides.

So, since the other fellow can't be heard from immediately we have omitted the name of the town and the exhibitor, and changed the name of the writer's theatre to the Strand. While the theatre of his rival has been given the name Rialto by our editorial pen.

Here's the rip-snorting essence of Donnybrook:

"Have just read your issue of July 5th with the page headed, 'One Page of Dynamite.' Say, man, you have headed it wrong. It should be, 'One Exhibitor vs. Another Exhibitor.'

"I am taking for my topic the letter written by an exhibitor from my own home town. To say the least, the stuff he puts in print is laughable.

"Did you ever see a devil but what he wanted to make out he was an angel? Shades of Hades! My worthy rival claims he spent $500 in advertising Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks! Please cut off two ciphers and you will have it right.

"I wonder who first exploited Mary Pickford in 'Tess of the Storm Country' in this town? I think you will find it was my house, the Strand. I wonder who wrote a letter to the Famous Players asking them for Mary Pickford and gave them a bribe of $50 to take it away from me? Why the same guy who wrote that piece of Dynamite and is now howling.

And, pray, why should he get Mary Pickford now? He runs Paramount and the Strand runs First National. Seems to me he tried to outbid the Strand and First National turned him down for their regular account.

"Now let us go a little further with this same man who knocks the single picture contract. Four years ago he was a clothing merchant who put a suit in the window and when a customer came along would grab him by the arm and say:

"'See that suit? The merchant next store says it's worth $100. I marked it $75. Give me $50—oh,, take it along for $25.'

"He decided that there was untold riches in the moving picture game and he ought to have some of it. So he built the Rialto and today if you were to ask him what a lens was he'd tell you it is something to eat like an ice-cream cone.

"Furthermore, let me give you a sample of the show he puts on Sunday and Monday. Four acts of vaudeville, a five-reel feature, a comedy and a scenic. In fact the traveling men around here call it a three-ring circus. The other two theatres in this town have held to straight pictures and are old-time showmen

Our English Cousins

Our Get Acquainted Department Introduces You to a Few of the British Subscribers to MOTION PICTURE NEWS

EDWARD J. LINDSELL, of Blackly, Manchester, has been in the picture business sixteen years—interrupted by service in Belgium and Flanders in 1914.

He makes two constructive suggestions for American producers catering to the British market. One is against the profuse use of Western slang in sub-titles—they are not understood by English audiences and could be easily avoided. His other suggestions is "Make less 'adult only' pictures. They are not wanted."

He finds room for improvement in the quality of advertising aid furnished by British renters—particularly the use of posters showing only the star's head. "An ideal way to create business for the opposition," says Mr. Lindsell, "Since one exhibitor cannot possibly book all the pictures of a particular star."

J. HOWSON is secretary and manager of the Whithall Picture House, Morecambe, W. E., Yancashire, England. At our request Mr. Howson recently wrote us a most interesting letter of advice to American producers as seen through English exhibitors' eyes. This will appear in full in a later issue.

"One or two of the biggest American producers," he says, "are too prone to produce the sexual stuff, or the extremely sordid films."

WILLIAM J. ANDREWS is general manager of the Walsall Theaters Co. Ltd., running the Grand theatre, Her Majesty's theatre, and the Imperial picture house, Walsall.

At the request of MOTION PICTURE NEWS he recently sent us this resume of British views and news:

"Quite recently it has been my pleasure to view some British made films that in my opinion show vast improvement on anything I have previously seen.

"I think it fair to record my opinion that if the high standard attained in these British productions is maintained then there need be no fear of comparison with the American production.

"But alas to relate there are others. This is bad for British prestige. My opinion is strong that Britishers can make just as good pictures as Americans—but they don't. Not yet!

"On the question of marketing American films in the British Isles I think it would be a great improvement if there were less people handling them, there are so many so called renters now, that exhibitors may well wonder what their films are like.

"I should like to see the big American film producing corporations establishing their own depots on this side of the Atlantic, have their own representatives here to get the British views, and tastes in films, and then supply the exhibitor direct with good material at fair prices. Squeeze out the multifarious mushroom renting agencies and let the manufacturer of the film, supply the exhibitor direct.

"Motion picture conditions in this country will suffer unless this film fungi is exterminated, many exhibitors have at times taken their goods on trust to find out later what rubbish they handle. Exhibition of poor stuff injures the manufacture of good goods.

"The future of American productions is I think just as secure as the past and present.

A. E. WATSON is resident manager of the Picture Salon, Glasgow, which is declared to be the leading theatre in Scotland. The doors open at the Salon at 11 o'clock every morning, and from 2 in the afternoon until closing hour at 10:30, it is a safe bet that the Salon and its tea rooms will be crowded. Sunday performances, however, are not permitted in Scotland.

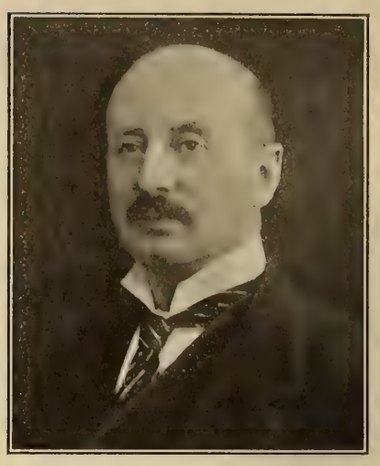
The corporation controlling the Picture Salon is at present building a house which will seat six thousand, to be run after the plan of the Rialto and Rivoli, of New York. Lighting effects and specially arranged music will be a feature. The admission prices will range from one shilling to ten shillings, six pence.

"The new house will cover one acre of ground," declares Mr. Watson, "located in the heart of Glasgow, whose population is now one and a half million. In common with the best theatres in this country it will have lunch and tea rooms adjoining.

"May I not make a suggestion to American producers? Why do they not hire the films to the theatres in this country themselves, by establishing a branch here? Perhaps they will wake up to this fact some day and then realize what a mint of money they have been losing for so many years."

Regarding the sort of subject most likely to be popular in his theatre, Mr. Watson declares, "As a general thing a film which has done well in American theatres will do big business here. This excepts war pictures, which have been 'off' here for some time. Ninety-nine per cent of the films shown here are of American origin. So far British productions cannot touch them for acting, production, etc."

Mr. Watson has promised us a detailed description of the new six thousand seat house for MOTION PICTURE NEWS readers in the near future.



ALFRED M. LOADER is general manager of the Palladium, Oldham; the Palladium, Stockport; the Princess, Dukinfield; and the Star, Hyde. American pictures make up the bulk of his programs, Paramount being principally found, in addition to First National, Robertson-Cole, Goldwyn, Triangle and Fox. Also a selection of English productions is shown. These, Mr. Loader finds, are rapidly improving.

Mr. Loader is among the English exhibitors who finds that one great trouble with the films when they reach "the other side" is the use of slang expressions in sub-titles. "It would serve all interests if these sub-titles were re-edited for the English market," he says.

"The future of American films here depends solely on how much of the best we secure and how little of the poor," he continues. "As you can see from our advertising matter, our houses use the motto 'only the best is good enough,' and we live up to it. We also specialize in high class popular music.

"In conclusion let me congratulate you on the way MOTION PICTURE NEWS is put together. I always look forward to an interesting and instructive hour when perusing its pages."

GEORGE P. FENTON is one of the English exhibitors who expects to see considerable development in the production line in that country, but who admits, "As long as the U. S. A. sends us the right goods there will always be a good market for its product in Great Britain."

Mr. Fenton, in co-operation with Stanley Rogers, is the lessee of a string of houses.

ODDS AND ENDS OF INTEREST

Working for Uncle Sam

Exhibitors Are Giving it All to Him and the Distributors, This Fellow Says—Pans the Exchanges

July 1, 1919.

THE letter from the exhibitor with a grouch and H. M. Thomas' excellent communication from Omaha were particularly good reading for one like myself, who has been engaged at one time or other in almost all branches of the business and knows just how rotten the entire producing and distributing proposition really is.

I formerly believed that " dealer co-operation " was possible between the producer and distributor on the one hand and the exhibitor on the other, but I long ago came to the unhappy realization that the interests of these elements are diametrically opposed. Under the present deposit system, many producers are operating very largely on exhibitor's money, and when any of them go under, as has General Film for example, the exhibitor loses his deposit.

Theoretically " selective booking " is a fine thing—I have always been a wild-catter so far as possible. But when one feel morally certain that the companies who are going to this policy are doing so, simply in the effort to squeeze larger rentals and more deposits from the exhibitor, it is difficult to arouse any great amount of enthusiasm. Recently Paramount tried in on the dog by selling a Class C subject, without anything to commend it to the public except free 24-sheets, as a big special and of course the exhibitor got badly burnt.

The other day we requested bookings from a friend of mine specifying one star for Sundays and the other on week days—Monday. We sent in the requests sixty days ahead, yet the booker reversed each one, and when we remonstrated my friend said, " There is no one I would like to favor any more than yourself, but you must understand that it is impossible for us to give one exhibitor special favors over another."

And this simply because we asked to be permitted to run his stars in a way to make us money instead of losing us money. Ye Gods.

Suppose a dry goods jobbing house would attempt to sell its customers in such a manner—making them take the entire line or refusing to co-operate—to enable the retail merchant to satisfy his trade—how long would it remain in business?

Yet I am credibly informed that even under the " selective booking " system, the ordinary exhibitor will wherever possible, not only be compelled to pay double for each picture, but will either have to take the entire output at hold-up prices or see the pictures he has exploited for the past year go to his competitor.

Of course, in non-competitive locations this will not be possible, but this is the general plan.

Will Louis Mayer or the Big Four Get the Services of Charles Chaplin, Jr.?

"Cut Out the Bunk"

An Exhibitor Advises Us to Charge Double Rates for Bunk About "Helping the Exhibitor"

"AT least us fellows up in the tall grass get a little satisfaction out of life—we can lean back and laugh at some of the fool suggestions offered by the big fellows. For instance, I just read in your paper that what we need is one big film centre where all makes of films can be booked from one centre or depot.

" In the past year I have booked a few of these films that have been handled through an exchange other than the producer's own, and in every case I find the films shipped in the most careless manner, no bands on the reels, films not rewound and never inspected. No, sir, I am telling you the only remedy is for every producer to market his own film. When a producer is not large enough to maintain his own exchange, let him sell his product to some larger producer.

" As long as film exchanges are managed as at present, the exhibitor will be compelled to pay more for his films than he ought to. They will send you a dozen film bills and parcel post bills ranging in all the way from six cents up, where one stamp will mail all of them and with only one envelope to address, they will send you a dozen separate envelopes with one bill in each. These wise fellows will come around and tell you that if you book my films you will make more money than you ever made before, but listen, they have mighty poor faith in their product when an old exhibitor who pays his bills cannot get a cent's worth of advertising or films out of that office without putting up a deposit or paying for his goods in advance before they leave the office. If they are so darned sure that their goods will get the money and make the exhibitor money they should not be afraid to take a chance along with the exhibitor.

" One thing that makes us sore, though, is the bull these fellows sling in the trade papers. I really think the trade papers should double their rates on all this slush about open booking, and what the producer is going to do for the exhibitor. If it cut this stuff down one-half it would help the paper, it would give that much more space for something else, and your paper would get the same amount of money for half the space. Sometimes I read this bunk and get so disgusted that I throw the paper aside and sometimes miss some of the good things. It's just like the exhibitor who hands his patrons a lot of junk before he starts his feature—the patron leaves before the good picture starts. Raise your rates for this kind of bunk and you may chase out some of the bull. Thanking you for your indulgence,

Those Trade Rules

They Are Merely Layman's English for the Regular Contract Says W. E. Lusk, Who Invites Discussion

Editor, MOTION PICTURE NEWS:

YOUR editorial in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS dated June 28 on the subject of Trade Rules seems more or less to invite comment.

If you will obtain from the different releasing companies copies of their respective contracts and compare these contracts with the so-called " Trade Rules," I believe you will find that the Trade Rules are merely a statement in Layman's English of the terms and conditions which are generally included in contracts.

The payment in advance clause which is embodied in most of the sets of Trade Rules I have seen is emphasized in practically every releasing contract in use. This clause is usually printed in large type.

Do you believe, fairly and honestly, that an Exchange Manager who asks his customers to conduct their business on the basis of the contract signed by the customer is asking more than he should?

I am not writing a brief for Exchange Managers Boards, neither am I attempting to set myself up as a Dunn and Bradstreet of the Motion Picture business, but I wish to bring out this point—that if an exhibitor does not want to pay for film service before it is shipped, that he should make this a stipulation of the order for service rather than condemning an Exchange Manager who attempts to render service, as per the signed order he has received for such service.

Relative to Exchange Managers' Organizations, I happen to have been one of the first Exchange Managers in the country to assist in organizing an Exchange Board of Trade. Nearly three years ago Mr. E. A. Eichman, then of the World, and myself, at that time with the Mutual Film Corporation, were able to get a number of our associate Film Exchange Managers to join with us under the Chamber of Commerce of Cleveland in an organization which should exist for the purpose of promoting better conditions in our business in Northern Ohio territory.

Since that time the movement has spread, and there are now Exchange Boards affiliated with commercial organizations in a great many cities.

It is certainly possible that an association of Film Exchange Managers may attempt things which are entirely selfish. On the other hand, the benefits to the industry which come from the frequent meeting of men actively engaged in a business, and who discuss openly the several problems which confront them in the pursuit of their trade, are too many to enumerate.

In Cleveland we have exhibitor members of our Exchange Board. Both men now sitting on the Board were as strongly against the Board as any exhibitor could be. In fact, their very opposition to the Board was one of the things which caused the Board to invite them to join with us. If you want to know

Legislative Attacks are Beaten in Part

Though Neglectful in Lobbying, Pennsylvania Exhibitors Are but Little Scratched by Passage of Restricting Measures

DUE more to good luck than to any apparent organized effort on the part of the motion picture interests of Pennsylvania, the net result of legislation relating to the picture industry that was disposed of by the 1919 session of the Pennsylvania Legislature, just closed, was rather favorable than otherwise to both the exhibiting and producing ends of the business.

While a number of measures which would have done serious injury to the picture business died from one cause or another before they could reach the statute books of the state, there was at no time during the session anything that resembled an aggressive lobby looking out for the interests of the industry, unless it kept itself very much under cover.

A Horde of Bills

About the only group of exhibitors who sent representatives to Harrisburg to work for or against a bill were the independent Pittsburgh exhibitors who sent a committee headed by Fred Herrington, the aggressive former president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, to work for the passage of the Soffel bill. This is the measure aimed at preventing film distributors from requiring advance deposits from exhibitors on film rental contracts, by making it a legal requirement that the distributors deposit collateral with the State Board of Censors equal to the amount of the advance payments they require of the theatre men. Herrington and his committee succeeded in getting the measure adopted by both houses with practically no opposition. At this writing the bill is awaiting the action of Govenor Sproul.

This Soffel bill was one of the only four, out of more than a score of motion picture bills introduced, to be adopted by the Legislature. The other three to pass were the Flynn bill which increased the fee charged by the State Board of Censors for examining each reel of film, from $1 to $2; the Mearkle measure creating the post of Deputy State Censor to conduct in Pittsburgh a branch of the state censorship office, and the Leiby bill which bars from theatres during school hours all children between 8 and 16 years old unless they have permits from their teacher.

Seven bills, which were regarded as more or less hostile to the motion picture business and which for one reason or another failed of passage were: the Zook bill requiring a large number of changes in the construction of theatres and requiring expensive additional fire prevention devices, which passed the House unanimously but died in a Senate committee; the Crockett bill barring children under 16 years old from theatres, unless accompanied by adults, which was reported negatively by the House Law and Order Committee; the Crockett bill which would have placed a heavy tax on profits from the operation of theatres and which died in the Judiciary General Committee of the House; the Bucher measure prohibiting theatres from admitting patrons to standing room after all seats in the theatre were filled, which was dropped from the House calendar on June 24; the Baldi bill which would have placed a tax of one dollar a square foot on all theatrical bill-boards or posters along the route of a city street or improvised highway, which was smothered in the Ways and Means Committee of the House; The Geary bill requiring equal rights in theatres for members of the white and colored races and preventing the segregation of negroes which was bowled out of the House by a vote of 89 to 45; and the similar Norton equal rights bill which died in the Judiciary Special Committee of the House.

EXPERIENCE TALKS

"WHEN we first looked over the various trade papers on the market, we considered the News as second best only, and therefore passed it up. e have since engaged a manager, and he feels that in order to successfully operate our theatre, he must have the Motion Picture News. He tells us that the News is foremost, and the best guide for exhibitors on the market today."

R. E. Bradford Goes to Lynch Enterprises

Ralph E. Bradford, for nearly two years manager of the Chicago exchange of Triangle Film Corporation, recently resigned and is now with the S. A. Lynch Enterprises at Atlanta, Georgia. Five years previous, he was manager of the Chicago exchange of Mutual Film Corporation.

Mr. Bradford was the first manager of Triangle at Minneapolis and was also the first manager for First National when the Minneapolis exchange was opened. He managed the Universal exchange at Minneapolis before taking charge of the Chicago office of Triangle.

TO THE CHAPLINS IS BORN A SON

JULY seventh will go down in history—film history anyhow—as the day on which Charles Chaplin, Jr. made his world bow. For telegraphic dispatches from the coast relate that Charlie and Mildred Chaplin are the proud parents of a seven pound, twelve ounce youngster.

Incidently, the child starts off being as expensive to his father, as his father has been to a number of film magnates. For 'tis said Charles Senior had bet $10,000 it would be a girl. and Mildred had the right side of the argument. However, it's all in the family.

At the same time these momentous tidings were received, Charlie's brother, Sid Chaplin, was making ready to sail for Liverpool on July 18. He will be accompanied by his wife and Carlyle Robinson. After a week in London he will go to Paris to make his first five reel comedy drama for Artcraft.

League's Side of Controversy

President of M. P. E. L. Answers Open Letter of New York State Exhibitors

ALFRED S. BLACK, President of Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., decries the controversy arising at the St. Louis convention and makes the following reply to the open letter of the officials of the New York State Exhibitors' League:

"It is a source of deep regret to me that the Executive Committee of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the State of New York has decided not to accept the will of the majority at the St. Louis Convention, but in an open letter emphasizing their own accomplishments and defending the attitude of their representatives at St. Louis attack the personnel of our National organization, the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc.

"The New York State Exhibitors' League, through its duly appointed committee of Messrs. Cohen, Berman and Reilly, did wonderful work in the campaign for legalized Sunday opening in New York State, for which they have and will continue to receive full credit, but because of this successful campaign it seems hardly fair that they should insist upon ruling the National organization. Their representatives, Messrs. Berman and Hayman, were delegates to the St. Louis Convention. They were both given every opportunity and possible courtesy upon the floor of the convention to present their views, even to the privilege of writing the Resolution for the proposed change to the Constitution. This they cannot deny. The Resolution which they brought before the Convention was so radical that it was turned down by the Convention by an overwhelming vote.

"The officials of the National organization are not wedded to any set plan of operating. What they are earnestly endeavoring to do is to perfest an organization that will be a credit to the Motion Picture end of the industry. They feel that the present Constitution and method of operating should be given a fair trial.

"It is not the intent of this reply to indulge in personalities. I believe that men like Messrs. Marcus Loew, Jake Wells, Peter J. Schaefer, Harry T. Nolan, Frank J. Rembusch and Ernest H. Horstmann, together with the members of the Executive Committee, are men whose reputations can be trusted to act honestly for the best interests of the exhibitors of the United States. As for myself, I am willing to stand upon my record in working independently from the exhibitor's standpoint, first, last and always. The Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., has already started upon a concrete, forceful plan covering the whole United States for the purpose of getting taxation relief.

"Other important plans will be very shortly announced. The organization has gone on record this year to get results and make promises afterwards. We ask the earnest cooperation of every exhibitor of the United States and perhaps the members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of New York State may deem it advisable to reconsider their recent action."

Each picture, too, will have its separate contract protected by a bigger deposit than ever and, in short, every possible effort is to be made by these distributors to put the exhibitor out of his misery in as short a period as possible.

And, perhaps, it is just as well, for recently the average exhibitor has been working almost if not quite solely for the distributors and Uncle Sam. Undoubtedly the star series with its cancellation clause, while decidedly unfair, is decidedly beter than the so-called "selective booking," which has no intention of giving a competitive exhibitor any opportunity of selection.

Yours very truly,

J. P. GRUWELL,

Equity Pictures Corporation Formed

Clara Kimball Young Will Make Four Pictures a Year for Company; Four to Six Other Films to be Handled; Work is Begun

THE culmination of the horde of rumors which have gone filmdom's round, in regard to the future plans of Clara Kimball Young, comes in the announcement of the formation of Equity Pictures Corporation which will henceforth care for the output of this star.

Herbert K. Somborn, recently sales manager in charge of distribution of "The Unpardonable Sin," is president of the new firm. Joseph I. Schnitzer is treasurer. The incorporation is under the laws of the state of Delaware. Capitalization is $500,000. The contract through which Miss Young's pictures will be released is signed, and the star is on her way to Los Angeles to begin production of her first picture under the new brand.

Clara Kimball Young

"Different" Operation

In the charter granted the Equity Corporation they are authorized to do "a general motion picture business," but Mr. Somborn emphasizes the poin that the company will operate for distributing purposes only.

It is claimed for the newly formed distributing organization that it will operate along lines which are entirely different from those laid down for any previously formed company engaged in the same line of work. Mr. Somborn found himself unable to announce the plan of operation in detail at this particular time for the reason that certain arrangements which have been tentatively made have not yet been set forth in contractual form. He pointed out, however, that the name "Equity" which had been chosen for the company was not an accident but had been adopted because it expressed the fundamental idea of the plan.

The pictures are to be distributed on the franchise basis, but with supplementary sales and promotion helps emanating from the home office which it is said have never before been attempted in the motion picture industry. The home office will not only pass each release along to the franchise holder who will deal with the exchanges and exhibitors but will be equipped to "sell" each picture to every man, woman, and child, who is a prospective customer at the box-office.

The Clara Kimball Young pictures, which will be important among the products handled by the Equity corporation, have been acquired from th Fine Arts Film Corporation whic will produce all of them in the futur The first release, which is expecte to be ready about the middle of Octo ber, will be "Eyes of Youth" which was purchased for Miss Young.

"Eyes of Youth" will be the first of four pictures which Miss Young will release for distribution through the Equity corporation during the ensuing twelve months, her new plan of production calling for only four pictures per year, each of them a special production in every sense of the word. Four, or at the outside, six, more pictures per year, making eight or ten in all, will constitute the total of pictures

TABULATING PUBLIC OPINION

IN an effort to gauge the sentiment of the ordinary motion picture patron of the country, J. A. Quinn, President of the Motion Picture and Theatrical Co-operative Association of the World, has prepared a questionnaire for distribution. It is submitted to Producer, Exhibitor, Artist, Author and Patron.

The questions embodied touch on every phase of picture presentation, request opinions on casts; advertising value of stars; merit of pictures, stars and corporations; proper admission prices; conditions of employment in pictures including whether or not it is believed applicants get a fair deal; and many other topics.

A check of the answers will it is believed give a fair indication of the mind of the public toward each branch of the industry.

Statements received will not be published unless authorized.

Ohio Exhibitors Up in Arms

Further Details of Opposition Against Rulings in Effect by Film Exchanges

FOLLOWING the telegraphic denial of its officials, published in last week's issue of MOTION PICTURE NEWS, the Miami Valley Exhibitor's League, through its president John Siefert, has issued a detailed statement to the effect that the exhibitors are entirely at odds with the new rulings put into effect by the Associated Film Exchanges of Cincinnati.

In his argument Mr. Siefert wishes to impress that the exhibitor does not want a lengthy credit—in fact no credit is asked. It is the policy of the members of the League to pay for their films on time. A new ruling that states however, that film will not be shipped unless a check in payment arrives previous to shipment is the point in question that the League does not agree with.

Illustrating how the new plan worked out to the inconvenience of the World exchange at Cincinnati and how that exchange finally dropped out of the Chamber of Commerce of Cincinnati is the best argument against the pay in advance system. According to a representative of the World film that company's account were five times greater in outstanding moneys after the new plan was put into effect than before. For this reason the World resigned from the Chamber of Commerce and the Managers' Association. It is said that some of the exchanges have opened "cancellation" departments since the formation of the Association. It is also rumored that two more of the leading Cincinnati exchanges will have dropped out of the Association before time of going to press.

In addition to the trouble that the exchanges are having in enforcing their unjust rulings they are at the present time, according to Siefert, having trouble with the employes who have formed a union for their own good.

Picketing has been going on in Cincinnati for the past week, it is said, and no one can enter any of the several exchanges without a signed permit.

Censors in Border Town

Brownsville, Texas, officials have put in the latest claim to fame as censor advocates, by the appointment of a board to censor all motion pictures that are thought to require it. Mayor Browne made the appointments, which followed some criticism of certain films said not to promote good feeling between American and Mexican citizens.

Suit for Violation of the Music Tax

The Monarch Theatre, Cleveland, is the first motion picture house in the city to come into open conflict with the Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers. Last week, the music organization filed suit against the Monarch theatre, claiming $250 damages on the ground that the theatre's orchestra played George M. Cohan's "When You Come Back," without paying the annual license tax. In the case of the Monarch Theatre, the annual license tax amounts to approximately $80. Manager Goldman had not decided what he will do in the matter, whether he will fight or pay.

Cleveland long ago took the stand of officially opposing the payment of the music tax. And in such cases where it became necessary to do so, it was agreed that as little music be used as possible of a taxable nature.

Erect Branch Structure

The local Famous Players-Lasky branch will build a new exchange at Franklin and Chippewa streets. The structure will cost almost $100,000. Work began on the new building Monday, July 7, and it is expected that the forty-two employes of the exchange will be able to enter the structure about October 1, according to an announcement by Richard C. Fox, local manager.

Educational Subjects Shown at Convention

A catalog of "Motion Picture Films Valuable for Education," listing 650 travel, scenic, nature and science pictures, handled by various companies, has been issued by The National Board of Review in time for distribution at the convention of the National Education Association. Orrin G. Cocks, of the National Board staff, is chairman of the committee on visual education exhibits at the convention, in Milwaukee which he is attending during the week of June 30-July 4.

Films Now Off Export Conservation List

A long distance telephone message received at the offices of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry from Harry M. Crandall, the Washington representative of the Association, advised that the War Trade Board has removed motion picture film from the export conservation list.

Under this ruling films may now be sent abroad without restriction to other than enemy or ally of enemy countries.

United Field Forces Hold Convention

Meetings Held in Chicago Under Ochs and in New York with Berst Presiding; Policies for Future Activities Under Discussion

CONVENTIONS in Chicago and New York of the managerial and field forces of United Picture Theatres, Inc., have been held at which details of plans for the coming year were presented by United's executive officials. Special attention was given the recently announced United Picture Productions Corporation.

J. A. Berst spoke before the New York gathering and most enthusiastically outlined United's growth, and its aims for the future. He was followed by C. E. Seelye, secretary of United, who recounted some of the dangers menacing the industry today.

The Chicago gathering, with Lee A. Ochs presiding, was held at the Sherman House, June 29, 30 and July 1, and included representatives from the Central and Western divisions.

Eastern convention United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., in New York July 5 and 6. In the picture are H. C. Arthur, L. A. Bachman, Juel Sarzin, G. C. Reid, Lester D. Wolfe, O. P. Hall, Leon J. Bamberger, Henry Thomas, Wm. T. Butler, Neil M. Birke, Stanley W. Hand, D. F. O'Donnell, Harry Ertel, M. A. Zamar, James W. Hanlon, J. D. Levine, D. M. Mitchell, Horace Judge, H. W. Given, Jack Levy, Lloyd Willis, C. R. Seelye, C. C. Johnson, Ira Aronson and Lawrence Romine

Demand Increasing Daily

The New York Convention, comprising the New England, Eastern Division and Southern representatives, was held at the home executive offices in the Mecca Building, July 5th and 6th, J. A. Berst presiding. Following the receipt and discussion of reports from the various United Branches and the exposition of future plans, business proceeded to the details and purposes of the United Picture Productions Corporation, the $3,000,000 Corporation recently formed for the purpose of providing additional purchase and supply of pictures from larger sources than have hitherto been at the disposal of the exhibitor-members of the United organization, and thus act as a feeder for United Picture Theatres, Inc.

Of special interest in both Conventions were the addresses of Mr. Ochs and Mr. Berst on the subject of United's arrangement to cope with the daily increasing demand for United products.

"The time has arrived" the addresses set forth in part, "when with the astonishing growth of our organization still larger means and still more effective machinery, as it were, must be employed to meet the growing demand for United pictures. When you consider that the number of theatres we supply has increased in a few months from less than five hundred to more than twenty-seven hundred, and that this increase is going on from day to day and week to week, you will readily realize that there must be simultaneous and corresponding expansion in the means provided for the securing of additional stars and additional pictures. To that end United Picture Productions Corporation has been formed. Through that corporation there will be opened up to United's exhibitor members a greatly increased source of feature offerings to meet the big demands that have recently been made upon us by United's unprecedented growth. That some of you have already familiarized yourself with the details of the Productions Corporation is evidenced by the sales you have already made. Your initiative and forethought do you credit. United is essentially a co-operative organization and as it grows you have every opportunity to grow with it. We look back with pride on a year of great accomplishment; we look forward with confidence and certainty to a year of still greater accomplishment."

C. E. Seelye, secretry of United, evoked enthusiastic response from the members of the convention by a convincing address which imbued his hearers with his own manifest enthusiasm. Mr. Seelye told his audience of the vital dangers that today menace the exhibitor. He dwelt on the danger of absorption to which the exhibitor is at this moment exposed.

Present at the Chicago meeting, in addition to Mr. Ochs, were E. J. O'Donnell and Alfred Eden, Central and Western Division manager; David G. Rodgers, and Milton Simon, special representatives; C. W. Bunn, Chicago; D. M. Thomas, Cincinnati; Sydney Rosenthal, Cleveland; Ralph Myerson, Kansas City; E. J. O'Toole, Minneapolis; E. J. Lipson, Omaha; Branch Managers—whilst the salesforce was represented by C. H. Sedell, C. C.

G. A. SMITH BACK FROM WAR

G. A. SMITH, known in the film industry through his four years' connection with Pathe, returned recently after eleven months' service in France. Following the armistice, Mr. Smith, formerly a newspaper man, was sent by the Government on a tour of France and Germany, visiting every place where the American forces operated.

"Wherever I went," he said, "I found the motion picture. During the war there were not the same opportunities but when the fighting stopped there were motion picture shows almost every night. I do not believe the folks back home realize how eagerly the boys looked forward to this entertainment. Generally it was their only form of amusement."

Re-titling Suit Discontinued

Federal Trade Commission's Action Against W. H. Productions is Closed

ANNOUNCEMENT was made this week at the office of W. H. Productions Co. that the proceeding instituted against that company by the Federal Trade Commission had been terminated by the entry of a consent order on an agreed statement of facts.

This proceeding arose out of the release by the W. H. Productions Company of reissued pictures, principally featuring William S. Hart under new titles. Joseph Simmonds, the proprietor of W. H. Productions Company made the following statement:

"The order, to the entry of which we have consented, brings to a very satisfactory close, the proceeding instituted by the Federal Trade Commission. From the moment that we commenced reissing the older pictures which have become in a way screen classics and which set the standard for the productions of today, we have been subjected to attacks from all of those who wish to sacrifice their old productions for the advantage of the current releases. We have felt that the market demanded these old pictures and that the public were entitled to see them.

"When the Federal Trade Commission instituted this proceeding we were charged generally with various unfair practices. Much testimony has been taken and no one of the unfair practices charged has been proved, and some of them have been specifically withdrawn. Counsel for the Commission felt, however, that in changing the titles of the old Hart pictures we should from the outset have referred to the change of title on the film and in the advertising matter. Of course, everybody in the motion picture business knew that two-reel Hart pictures were flooding the market, and that they were old pictures, whatever their titles. We believe also that all the picture "fans" knew this situation. However, as soon as criticism was made in the trade press about the change of titles, we adopted the policy of emphasizing the fact that the pictures were re-issues. It was only long after all the pictures had been released that the Federal Trade Commission began the proceeding, and the net result of the injunction order which is about to be entered is to stop the re-titling of the re-issues unless announcement is made that the titles have been changed."

Church Recognizes the Efficacy of Films

Another church to recognize the efficiency of the films for delivery of a message, and at the same time for attracting a congregation, which otherwise might prove listless, is the Central Church of Newburyport, Mass., which recently gave over the evening generally devoted to mid-week services to an exhibition of the five-reel Pathe picture, the "Passion and Death of Christ."

When the first picture was shown, a jury of ecclesiastical critics pronounced the action tableaux as having been produced with a marked deference for proprieties and all reverence; and there was no lack of other testimonials as to the beauty of thought and dignity with which the film had been prepared for exhibition before all creeds. It remained, however, for the Massachusetts church to be the first to house in the Atlantic States the picture and give a performance to which the public was invited free.

Chicago Film Thieves Driven to Bay

Film Theft Committee of National Association Makes Sudden Descent in Windy City, Finding Evidence, it is Claimed, of Thefts

CHICAGO has felt the hand of the Film Theft Committee, of the N. A. M. P. I. Many reels of stolen film were recovered, and the parties in whose possession they were, were arrested in a sudden descent of the committee's agents in conjunction with the State Attorney's office, and with the aid of four city detectives.

The round-up started, according to the statement issued by the committee at the Magnet Feature Film Exchange, where, after a number of big subjects were purchased in several different days. The proprietors name was given as J. E. Coursens. A chain involving employees of several concerns was unravelled on investigation of this case.

Ring Within a Ring

A man whose name is given as Leavinson of the Magnet Feature Film Exchange, delivered the films to the planted customer. He is credited with a statement that he would be able to "deliver films out of any exchange in Chicago on twenty-four hours' notice, providing the exchange named had Union employees."

The Committee's agents do not believe that Union officials sanctioned such sentiment, or would tolerate dishonest men in their organizations, though it is said Leavinson was actually a member of a Chicago local.

Leavinson is said to have confessed that certain Goldwyn subjects were obtained through Izzy Kahn, an employe of the Goldwyn exchange. Other information of dishonest employees was also said to have been given.

On the order of the district attorney a man named Titus, who is alleged to be actively connected with this traffic; Morris Kline, who also is said to have participated; Leavinson and Izzy Kahn were locked up, according to the committee's statements. Two thousand dollars bail was fixed in the case of each and the court hearing set for July 16th. By that time it is expected the other alleged traffickers will have been located and held for trial.

The Chicago activities of the Film Theft Committee were supervised by W. C. Hawkins, who has just returned from Mexico, where he was the agent of the Committee on Public Information, and who will shortly return there as the Mexican representative of the new Byoir-Hart firm.

Chairman Pitman is now preparing a similar round-up in a Pacific Coast city; and last week in New York, is said to have procured the arrest of one, Gustav Lanzke, on the charge of receiving stolen reels. Although Lanzke was dismissed by Magistrate McQuaid on the ground that it could not be proved that the accused had knowledge that such films were stolen, the Vitagraph and Pathe Companies are said to have replevined next day films bearing their trade mark which it was claimed were found in Lanzke's possession.

The personnel of the Film Theft Committee in addition to Chairman Pitman is William Wright, L. E. Franconi, Samuel Eckman, Jr., Tarkington Baker and Bert Adler.

FOX'S BROADENED PLANS

STRIKING hard on his announcement of the building of an enormous studio and office building in New York, William Fox has come forth with the season's plans of his organization—plans which in scope fit well with the new Fox home.

A News Weekly, which will contain the real news of the day in picture form, is to be inaugurated. It is told of on Page 732.

More and More Sunshine Comedies will delight.

Mr. Fox in a general way tells of his plans on Page 731.

Excel pictures will be better than ever. They are told of on Page 736.

Brunet on the Booking Topic

Pathe Vice-President Has Say on the Prevailing Discussion; Hits Hard Too

PAUL BRUNET, Vice-President and General Manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., whose voice has not hitherto been heard in connection with the controversy which has been raging recently on the question of Open Booking vs. Program Booking, has now come out with a statement which should interest every exhibitor.

"There's an old saying," said Mr. Brunet, "which runs something like this—'The customer is always right.' Well, I am going to take the liberty of paraphrasing that saying in this wise: 'Pathe customers dictate Pathe policy.' This is strictly a fact.

"Why should we have the presumption to tell the exhibitor in Great Falls, Montana, or in Tampa, Fla., the manner in which we should book Pathe films?

"Pathe has film service to sell. If the exhibitor expresses a desire to book fifty Pathe features at the rate of one, two or three a week, we are there to furnish his requirements.

"The moment we sensed the movement against program booking—we were just a little ahead of the majority in this, considering we threw the bars down as long ago as 1918, more than eighteen months back—instructions were given to all of our managers and salesmen to the effect that Open Booking, Star Series Booking, or Program Booking, would all be equally acceptable to us, as we considered ourselves the servant of the exhibitor, pledged to give him service of the type best suited to his business. And surely that is the true province of the film distributor.

"Personally I find very little difference between merchandising film service and merchandising other commodities. A film distributor who attempts to dictate to his customers what goods they shall purchase, the manner in which they shall purchase them, and (as in some isolated cases) goes to the extent of regulating admission prices—that distributor is headed rapidly for the discard heap.

"It is interesting to me to read the announcements of certain distributors who are dishing up the eighteen-months-old Pathe policy of 'book how you please' as a startling 'innovation,' with appeals to the exhibitor, seeking to impress him with the 'novelty' of a fair trading policy—the very policy upon which Pathe has builded its Gibraltar-like foundation.

"This is my first—and my last—word upon the controversy."

OHIO BANS FIGHT FILMS

THE last word received at the time of going to press, concerning the status of the pictures taken of the Willard-Dempsey fight, indicates that the crowd may have to content itself with imagining the scenes which prevailed at the ringside.

After showing to capacity houses in Cleveland on July 6 and part of July 7, the Ohio censors rejected the films.

Every effort is being made to obtain a reversed decision.

Second of Griffith Repertory on July 21

"The Fall of Babylon," an expansion and amplification of the brilliant Babylonian feature in D. W. Griffith's production of "Intolerance," will be the second offering in the Griffith repertory season at the Geo. M. Cohan theatre, opening Monday evening, July 21.

"The Fall of Babylon," originally produced at the Kinema theatre, Los Angeles, is said to be a super-spectacle of mammoth proportions, with more than fifty thousand men and women taking part.

Among the more prominent players to be seen in this romance are Constance Talmadge, George Fawcett, Mildred Harris Chaplin, Tully Marshall, George Siegmann, Elmer Clifton, Seena Owen, Alma Rubens, Alfred Paget, Loyola O'Connor, Elmo Lincoln, Kate Bruce, Pauline Stark and Winnifred Westover.

Three New Theatres to Build in Allentown

Three new theatres are projected in Allentown, Pa., to be erected before the winter months. One to be built on a hotel site will cost $300,000. Sidney Wilmer is behind it.

Chanock and Senderowitz, theatre men, will erect a house costing $125,000. Messrs. Joseph and Thomas Herrity will erect a neighborhood house at a cost of $42,000.

Los Angeles Men Fight Exorbitant Tax

Los Angeles Film Exchange men learning that it is impossible to secure a ruling from the License Department of Los Angeles respecting the interpretation of the present license tax law, at a meeting held July first, decided to petition the City Council recently elected and installed in office for amendment to the present city ordinance respecting film exchange license tax. The Act effective at this time provides a license tax of $1 per reel for each release and the city administration interpret the word "release" to mean each individual rental of a given film.

In the event the City Council will not grant an amendment to the present ordinance injunction, proceedings will be brought to prevent the city from collecting such a tax, which is exorbitant.

In the hopes of securing an ordinance for Los Angeles satisfactory to the exchanges an investigation has been made with respect to the license tax collected in other cities which are as follows:

Seattle, $15 per year; Denver, $40; Atlanta, $50; New Orleans, $52.50, and Salt Lake, $25. San Francisco and Cincinnati do not have license tax for exchanges.

Select Branch Manager

General Manager Sam E. Morris, of Select Pictures Corporation, announces the appointment of S. W. Hatch as Select's Branch Executive in St. Louis. Mr. Hatch took charge of the St. Louis Branch Office on July 7th.

INDUSTRY ASKED TO AID POLICE FIELD DAYS

APPEAL is made for the co-operation of the Motion Picture Industry in participation in the events on the program for Police Field Days, to be held at Sheepshead Bay, New York, July 19 and July 26. Creighton Hale, of serial fame, has interested himself and is rousing spirit among the film folk for the event.

The assistance of every branch of the industry, producing, distribution and exhibiting is hoped for. Stars whose services would afford the spectators added entertainment are asked to enlist their services.

Theatres in Two Cities Form Small Circuit

The theatres in South Norwalk and Norwalk, Conn., have consolidated under the name of K and C Theatre Company. Andrew J. Collins, owner of the Palace and Hoyt's in South Norwalk has been elected President of the company.

Samuel J. Kantor, owner of the Regent in Norwalk is vice-president while A. Hamilton, owner of the Empress in Danbury, Conn., is secretary and treasurer.

The main offices of the company will be at the Palace theatre, South Norwalk. Only big features will be booked, those that can stand two or three day runs in each of the four theatres.

Theatre Owners Meet

The first annual meeting of the Theater Owners' Corporation of Minnesota was held in Minneapolis June 11. The following officers were elected: Thomas Furniss, Duluth, president; J. J. McCarthy, Watertown, vice-president; William Hay, Fairmount, secretary and treasurer; William Sandon, Mankato, and H. B. Smoots, Little Falls, executive officers.

Kashin's Novelty to Be Released July 15

The first Screen Letter Box, a novelty short subject, conceived by Morris Kashin, produced by Jack Cohn and released by Frank G. Hall through his program of Independent Sales and Film Clearing House releases, will be given to the public, for the first time, next week. The initial release of these subjects is scheduled for July, 15th.

Exchange Men Shifted

A change of interest to film men and exhibitors took place last week in the management of the United Picture Theatres corporation, Minneapolis office. John E. O'Toole, local branch manager, left to assume the district management with headquarters at St. Louis, and Steven O'Brien, assistant manager of the office became manager.

"Day of Film Readjustment"

Prominent Boston Exhibitor Declares Producer Must Now Consider Showmen

A READJUSTMENT in the amusement and theatrical world, as well as reconstruction of social and industrial conditions throughout the country, is an inevitable aftermath of the war, according to Thomas D. Soriere, manager of the Park theatre, Boston, whose ideas regarding many of the principal points of dissension in the industry at present are worthy of note. Mr. Soriero writes:

"It is my belief that the moving picture theatre business is about to start on a new era of greater artistic and financial success than has ever attended it, but whether the success will last for long seems to remain entirely with the manufacturers. Admittedly exhibitors will have to raise their prices if a closer relationship between the manufacturer, that will unite them in common bond, is not affected.

"One of the glaring bridges between the two at present is the so-called 'one picture booking' plan, or, less politely, the 'cut-throat' system, whereby the exhibitors bid against one another for their wares. This does not make concord and good feeling. It defeats the very spirit of friendliness that should prevail between the trade.

"The public is not going to pay the same price to see pictures alone when they can see good pictures and vaudeville. Of course the exception is Griffith's features. This brings us back to the manufacturer. There should be some disposition to protect the trade, for without the exhibitor there certainly can be no manufacturer.

"The manufacturer of course can say he will charge what he wants to for his goods. This is true enough, but when these charges are excessive and gained through a system that is manifestly unfair and impractical they reflect so unfavorably on the purchaser that he will be forced to close his theatre or take on vaudeville as a justification for charging more for admission to his theatre.

"I deprecate this spirit of apparent disinterestedness on the part of the producer for the exhibitor on the grounds that sooner or later they will waken to the realization that post-war conditions are not the same as they dealt with during the war. Some constructive plan must be suggested to remedy it. Perhaps a better understanding of the mutual interests, a more open method of purchase, a fairer system to deal with the film buyers of sound reputation, and less general exaggeration all around are a few that I suggest.

"It is my belief that the builder of films could devote a little less money to 'famous' authors for worn-out themes. We hear much of 'fewer and better pictures' policies, but no mention is made of less costly pictures. The picture with the heavy cost is not always successful. Cost is not commensurate with art."

Annual Report of Eastman

Net Profits Somewhat Lower Than in Previous Year; Extra Dividends Paid

THE annual report of the Eastman Kodak Company recently announced by the board of directors from the executive offices at Rochester, showed that net profits for the year ending December 31, 1918, including all subsidiary companies, amounted to $14,051,969.17, a figure somewhat lower than the year before, owing principally to the increased war levies on excess profits and incomes. The net profits in 1917 were $14,542,567.33, and in 1916, the banner year in the history of the organization, they were $17,289,206.31.

Extra dividends amounting to 35 per cent. were paid on the common stock, in addition to four quarterly dividends of 2½ per cent. each and four of 1½ per cent. each on the preferred stock. The total amount of the dividends on he preferred sock was $369,942, and on the common stock the amount was $8,792,280, compared to $5,861,520 in 1917 and $13,674,635 in 1916, the record year.

The balance sheet shows carried to surplus for the twelve months the amount of $4,889,747.17, after charging off liberal amounts for depreciation and paying the dividends mentioned. The total surplus on December 31 was $31,871,770.91. In the sixteen and a half years of the company's existence the net profits have amounted to $161,186,425.13, the preferred dividends to $6,065,234.60, the common stock dividends to $102,201,338.49, and the surplus to $47,669,852.04.

The capital stock consists of 100,000 shares of preferred stock of a total par value of $10,000,000 and 250,000 shares of common stock of par value of $25,000,000. The books are certified by Price, Waterhouse Company. Directors of the company are George Eastman, Henry A. Strong, Walter S. Hubbell, Alexander M. Lindsay, James S. Watson, Frank S. Noble, Daniel E. Evarts, Frank W. Lovejoy and William S. Gifford.

Convicted of Arson; to Get Another Trial

Motion has been made for a new trial for Frank S. Emmet, manager of the Regent Theatre, Allentown, Pa., and Roy W. Middlecamp, a moving picture machine operator, who were convicted a short time ago of arson in connection with the Lyceum Theatre fire which occurred in 1916. Judge C. A. Groman, of the Lehigh County Court, has granted thirty days for filing reasons and the first Tuesday in September has been set for the hearing. Frank W. Wernett, an apprentice-operator, whose confession of guilt resulted in the arrest of Emmet and Middlecamp, is in jail awaiting sentence.

Cleveland Once Again Dodges Censor Evil

Again, and for the second time within a year, Cleveland motion picture exhibitors have escaped the local license tax on movie theatres, and the appointment of a special local censor. This evil bobbed up at a recent meeting of the council, where the representatives of the clergy demanded that a local censor be named, whose duty it shall be to pass on the respectability of all shows, both movie and legitimate.

The discussion was referred to the judiciary committee of the city council. When the matter came up there, both sides of the argument were presented, and the movie men pleaded their cause so well that they succeeded in divorcing the motion picture from the bill. This doesn't mean that the proposition is definitely killed. But it does mean that it is laid to rest for a time, at any rate, and any further annoyance to the exhibitor on that score, is indefinitely postponed.

Prudential Fire Damages Agreed Upon

At a meeting of exhibitors, exchange men and others interested in the Prudential automobile delivery fire, an agreement was reached after much discussion that forty-five dollars per reel would cover the average cost of replacement.

This sum was to be divided in the following manner: The exhibitors were to pay fifteen dollars for each reel booked. The carrier paid the same amount for each reel destroyed, and the film exchanges are to stand the remainder of the loss. The number of reels destroyed was 160.

Cincinnati Exchange Employees to Band

It is possible that within the next few weeks a union of film exchange employees,—shipping and poster clerks,—may be organized in Cinti. The attitude of the managers toward the proposed union is as yet undefined, although a special meeting of the Associated Film Exchanges of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce was held last week, at which the general feeling of the managers was quite unfavorable to such a move on the part of the employees. In event a union of employees is perfected, the organizers state tht no demands would be made for at least a year.

EXCHANGE TRADE RULES

FOLLOWING in the footsteps of many such bodies throughout the country, the Los Angeles Film Exchange Board of Trade, has issued to all exhibitors in its territory, a set of rules covering the rental, payment, transportation, etc., relative to business of the several Los Angeles exchanges.

Emphasis is laid on the rule requiring the return of film in the best of condition, exhibitors being held responsible for all damages.

And Still They Come!

DEAR MR. JOHNSTON:

I have just had the pleasure of looking over a copy of the NEWS in its enlarged form and I wish to say that I regard it as one of the best arranged publications devoted to the trade interests of the industry that I have seen.

Unquestionably the new format with the four columns and larger spread is a distinct improvement, while the content matter is not only interesting, but timely.

Congratulations and best wishes for the success of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS this coming year.

Sincerely yours,

JESSE L. LASKY,
First Vice-President
FAMOUS PLAYERS—LASKY

MY DEAR MR. JOHNSTON:

It hardly seemed possible to me that the increase in size of your magazine would make the improvement it has. Not only does it better the appearance of the book in general, but it seems to afford your advertisers an opportunity to make their copy more effective in every way.

Congratulating you on the latest of your many steps in advance, I am,

Yours sincerely,

MARSHALL A. NEILAN

WILLIAM A. JOHNSTON, Esq.,
Editor, The Motion Picture News,
729 Seventh Avenue,
New York City

DEAR BROTHER JOHNSTON:

Congratulations on your new size. It gives the paper an extraordinarily brilliant and attractive appearance on the stands, besides furnishing splendid facilities, interiorly, for the display of advertising and pictorial matter. I certainly like it.

Yours,

JULIAN JOHNSON

DEAR MR. JOHNSTON:

I have been out of the city on a little rest cure and have just returned and scanned carefully the new edition of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

I expected great things of you and am not disappointed; in fact, agreeably surprised. The atmosphere of the whole work is indicative of the advance of the motion picture, and you and your entire staff are to be congratulated upon the creation and fulfillment of a trade paper that to me is most complete in every way.

Yours very sincerely,

S. L. ROTHAPFEL

MY DEAR MR. JOHNSTON:

In news interest—in service value—in physical attractiveness, the new NEWS must enlist the enthusiasm of everyone in the industry. It has but one fault—it is so inviting in appearance and so filled with helpful material that it interferes with business.

Cordially yours,

E. LANNING MASTERS,
President

DEAR MR. JOHNSTON:

The NEWS of the 28th is a wonder.

I like its design, cover and contents; it is always on my desk for ready reference.

Success to you in this new venture.

Sincerely yours,

"O.K.!" Says Adolph Zukor of the News' Editorial

July 2, 1919.

Mr. W. A. Johnston,
Editor, Motion Picture News,
729 Seventh Ave., New York City.

My Dear Mr. Johnston:

Your splendid editorial, "The Bull's-Eye of Open Booking," in the July 5 issue of Motion Picture News has impressed me more deeply than any other message spread before the motion picture industry in many a day.

Possibly the reason why your words carry so much weight with me in this particular instance is that you and I seem to agree perfectly.

If I were to attempt the difficult task of picking out particular sentences which I would emphasize through repetition, might I be permitted to quote you as follows:

"The bull's-eye of open booking is advertising."

"You cannot, of course, have unfettered competition—beginning with the making of pictures—until you have pictures sold on a basis of unfettered competition, a basis where merit is the one and only sales argument in consideration."

"Open booking calls for better pictures, because only better pictures can be sold openly."

". . . now it (advertising) is to be the ruling factor."

"Advertising won't be fully free to develop until the routine of production has been so changed that pictures can be seen before the producer's advertising has been prepared; and newspapers everywhere must awaken to the possibilities of picture advertising."

"Advertising, at its best, must be co-operative—co-operative between producer and exhibitor; and that means that both will have to sense more fully its importance and be prepared to give the appropriation and ability and all that modern day advertising demands."

Now then, let us see how completely we agree. The first statement quoted above was of course meant by you to be more or less introductory. Open booking—"Selective Booking," we of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation term it—means progress. If it did not, we would have none of it. Here, indeed, there is no chance for argument. And to state that the bull's-eye of business progress is advertising, is to state something which, in this day and age, is axiomatic.

Touching upon what you say as to merit as the one and only sales argument to be considered when pictures are sold on a basis of unfettered competition, I refer you to my statement published in your issue of June 28, wherein I said: "Every individual picture will be put on its own merit, to succeed or fail by its own drawing power—and by nothing else." Here, again, we are in perfect accord.

In your third statement which I have quoted, I would make one slight change. I would say: "Open booking forces better pictures, because only better pictures can be sold openly." And with this change permitted, I refer you to our announcement in your issue of June 28, in which was stated: "The principal advantages of the Selective Booking Policy, as pointed out by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, are as follows: . . . It will necessitate greater care in the selection and the production of pictures, as a poor picture cannot possibly earn, under the Selective Booking Policy, a sum sufficient to make its production and distribution profitable."

"Now," you say, "advertising is to be the ruling factor." That advertising is the ruling factor, we have recognized for years, and in substantiation I have only to point to the fact that we have been judiciously expending approximately a million dollars a year for several years in advertising in the motion picture trade papers to exhibitors and in national magazines and in a great number of newspapers, in co-operation with exhibitors, direct to the ultimate consumer. But from now on, advertising is going to reign supreme as never before, and in anticipation of this condition we have revolutionized our department of advertising and publicity, converting it into a department of exploitation, with greatly enlarged personnel, and extending its ramifications through every conceivable channel of publicity, with expert advertising and exploitation men assigned to every one of our branch exchanges.

You have spoken well with regard to the freedom of development of advertising of pictures being contingent upon their being seen before the advertising is prepared. In realization that this is a real necessity, it is our purpose, as we have announced, to have every picture not only completed but shown in our projection room and in all our exchanges at least two months before the date of release. Furthermore, we are going to spare no effort or expense in bringing the newspapers, even in the smallest towns, to a realization that they "must awaken to the possibilities of picture advertising."

And finally, Mr. Johnston, it is a corollary of our advertising policy, already well established but now so broadly expanding, that "advertising, at its best, must be co-operative—co-operative between producer and exhibitor."

So you see, you and I are really traveling the same road, sharing the same ideals, and in this fact I am happy.

May Motion Picture News, such a splendidly influential factor in the campaign for better pictures and in the entire development of our industry, continue to prosper as it so richly deserves! And more power to your pen which carries your message as a personal influence for the good of us all!

Cordially yours,
Adolph Zukor,
President.

OVERFLOW—And still the letters keep coming praising the new, enlarged Motion Picture News.

Here's one the postman just brought in:

PALACE THEATRE
Wichita, Kansas

Mr. Wm. A. Johnson,
729 7th Ave.,
New York City.

Dear Sir:

I wish to congratulate you on the enlarged edition of your valuable trade paper.

I can truthfully say that the Motion Picture News is a very helpful publication for the exhibitor. Your Exhibitors' Service Bureau in criticizing newspaper advertisements, and your special Service Sections, along with your Complete Plan Book, are a great help to every exhibitor, including myself, and can say that many a suggestion I have found in your trade paper has proved profitable in putting over pictures.

With best wishes,

Sincerely yours,

Striking Cuts, Drawn Lettering Make Distinctive Appeal to Atlanta Patrons

By Willard C. Patterson
Managing Director, Criterion Theatre, Atlanta, Ga.

(Theatre managers who will follow this series carefully will get the ideas of the best motion picture advertisers in the country. These articles will continue to appear each week.)

CRITERION theatre as a rule presents big pictures, and the idea that we try to put over in our advertising is that we are giving the Atlanta public the class of motion pictures. We believe in keeping the house the dominant thing, but at the same time in emphasizing the quality of the productions that we are offering week after week.

When we began to advertise the Criterion attractions along the present lines practically all of the other theatres were using type effects and everyone knows that no matter how good the content of the advertising may be, no matter how striking the cuts there is a certain tiresome effect upon the patron who is called upon to look upon straight type to get his knowledge of the current attractions.

Therefore the drawn display is different. It attracts attention because of that difference. But it has another effect. It impresses artistry, and quality, upon the patron. The moment that the reader of the newspaper turns to the two pages carrying the motion picture news and advertising and sees one announcement that stands out against the others there is very likely to be that psychological persuasion that here is an offering so different and of such better quality than the other that there is no question of which one should be selected.

We believe in availing ourselves of all the aids that the producers supply. Very seldom do we use a cut just as it comes from them, because we prefer that the matter fit in more exactly with the style that we are employing. Often the trade paper announcements supply suggestions for our local display and we watch these pages carefully, filing the advertising of the pictures that we expect to play. We alternate between the use of halftone and hand drawn illustration, preferring the latter because with them we can generally emphasize the point that we want to put over.

This twelve inch, four column display bases the argument on one of the most striking scenes in the picture, around which the plot turns

Our biggest advertising is in the Sunday papers, for all three of the dailies have Sunday issues, two of them being afternoon issues on week-days. But motion picture theatres are not open on Sundays and so we strive to leave the impress of our announcement so strong that it will hold over to Monday or Tuesday or even further and get the attention of the patron then. One can readily see that the style of the advertisement that invites you to come right down and see the show and the one that has to range its quality against the other and let the patron decide, after reflection, which he will see on a special day has to be different.

We use a name plate for the Criterion. That immediately identifies it as soon as the reader turns to the photoplay pages. Then another thing that we try to make typify outer displays is the style of the hand-drawn letters that we use. We employ this hand-drawn letter only for the large announcements. When we have to go more into detail as we have done in the boxed matter in the "Daddy Long Legs" display referring to the fact that this is the first of Mary Pickford's own productions and the cost of the play itself we use straight type matter because it is less confusing in small space than the drawn letter would be.

W. C. Patterson

You will observe that white space is one of our hobbies. I learned long ago that the way to prepare an advertisement was to write out the smallest number possible of words that you thought you had to use and then prune them to the limit. They figure on just about the space that the ordinary theatre would use for such a message and double or triple the space. Then you are sure of plenty of white, getting away from the crowded appearance—and therefore readers. I doubt very much whether the general public stops to consider anything about the technical side of advertising, whether the average reader appreciates the fact that we are taking three times as much space for a less wordy message than another house—but the average patron certainly does get the quality idea, because that necessarily stands out.

For our eye getter, or illustration, we try to either get the big point of the story from some scene picture or to use some drawing of cut of the star that is suggestive of the character of the picture. There is generally a theme to each production and if you can put over this theme through your advertising you generally get a better effect than if you tried to tell the story itself. We work on the belief that the public does not want to know just exactly what it is going to see before it comes to the theatre, it certainly doesn't want the picture diagrammed and the advertiser literally turning over to the last chapter and showing "how it is going to come out." But the public does want to know the general nature of the picture. If it is light and frothy, suggest that point in your illustration. If it is a story with a big punch and a heart throb, a story that can be suggested by a single scene such as that of the mother and daughter in "The Unpardonable Sin" that point should be illustrated and the advertisement built around it.

Now in the case of the "Mary Regan" display, here is a cut that really gets at the sub-strata of the photoplay. It is not a picture of the underworld in the sense that photoplay goers generally know it and to play it as such would cheapen the

HERE is a clever advertisement when one considers that it was used at the beginning of the second week's showing of a picture that had originally been booked for a single week. It is a three column, 7½ inch display of the Lyric theatre, Cincinnati.

Now the picture had been advertised for the showing the first week with cuts of the star and scenes of the production and the designer of this advertising figured that the two things that had left their greatest impress on the people who had seen it was the artistry of the production and the work of the star. So decidedly the right thing was to make the display artistic and then to use the minimum amount of reading matter.

The phrase "Another enchanted week" is a good one and it's likely to make people who have not seen the picture reflect whether they have not missed something worth while. The brief selling argument says:

The teasing charm of incense, the romantic glow of mystic splendor, the lure of Oriental melody have captured Cincinnati. This engagement simply had to be extended.

Just the hanging red lantern was sufficient illustration in this case. The whole effect was that of an engraved invitation to some special function.

Some advertising is like the amateur artist's pictures—has to be labelled.

MRS. JOSEPH GROSSMAN has left her sales argument largely to illustrations here as she generally does in the quarter pages used for the

TOM MOORE

Standard theatre, Cleveland, O.

The link effect has brought the picture of Tom Moore in real life and as he appears in the course of this production together with a scene picture in the middle and then the name of the star and the title. We do not know whether Harry Beaumont has any especial pulling power as a director among patrons of the Standard, but certainly the display has been weakened from a typographical appearance by that line being put in where it is. We would much rather have referred to the fact that this was taken from the Saturday Evening Post story and then have used the Salvation Army slogan "A man may be down, but he is never out."

Then below that should have been the additional selling argument that is carried: "That's the motto that hangs over the door of the modern Down and Out Club. Tom Moore was a living example of the motto. He never gave up."

You've got to have the confidence yourself first before you can convince the other fellow.

THIS five inch, double column is rather best than most of the Rochester, N. Y., advertising, though there is considerable room for improvement. First the theatre needs the sort of a name plate that would save space and at the same time attract more attention than the 60 pt. John Hancock type that is used. It would then have been more distinctive without dominating.

However we want to comment the Rialto on getting away from the massed type effect that marks most displays in that city. It has taken the selling argument and has placed it below the picture of Miss Baird whom it calls "the picture girl beautiful." This selling argument says:

Since the world began woman has been entrusted with the purity of the race—and has been denied the liberty accorded to man.

"As a Man Thinks" answers the perplexing question of the "double standard" of morality.

A great play embodying a great moral message.

Arrangement of the border here serves to call attention to the cut and make the black type stand out all the stronger.

Ancient history may be interesting reading, but it is poor advice.

HERE is a clever stunt, differing from most of the cooperating advertisements, that was put over by George A. Bleich, the Owensboro, Ky. magnate. Just as soon as he looked at the cuts supplied by the Big Features Right Corporation, of Louisville, Ky., owners of the First National franchise, Mr. Bleich had an idea. So he took the advertisement over to the offices of the Devonian Mineral Springs Company and made arrangements whereby the latter should give a free ticket to a matinee performance to every child under fifteen who would draw a picture of "Daddy Long Legs." We presume that Mr. Bleich made a rate on these tickets, but in any case he landed the page advertisement, which was almost as good as if it had come from the theatre itself in its general pulling power, and better still because there was something that would get every child talking.

It's a good idea that can be used in connection with most any business. Only the cormice with the nae of the water has been added to the stock advertisement.

Let it be always TODAY.

HERE is an excellent advertisement for comparatively small space. It occupies 5¼ inches across four columns and contains just about everything that an ad ought to carry about this picture. The only improvement was for the scene picture to have stood out better.

Miss Barriscale has been used in the largest type and then the title of the picture featured with the added announcement that this is a picturization of Kathleen Norris' novel. Emphasis to this fact is given by a reproduction of the cover of the book at the right. Then here is the selling argument:

Lillian Josselyn was a society love-pirate who lived on flattery and the adulation of men, and did not scruple to ensnare her own stepson. How her schemes were foiled by the love of a true wife is the theme of this thrilling photodrama.

Then the main selling line "A drama of woman wiles" is certain to get the attention. The Symphony has been fortunate in getting a comedy that fits in with the general tone of the feature in title, at least, "Tell Your Wife Everything."

WE have commented here a number of times on advertisements in which covers of the volume from which the story was taken have been used in the display, but this is just about the best piece of "book" exploitation that we have seen yet. It is a three column, thirteen inch display of Quinn's Rialto theatre, Los Angeles. If there is a person who has read this book will willingly fail to see it in picture form after reading this story we are bad judges of human nature. To those who have not read the book there is a strong suggestion that here is something that they should not miss and most of them are likely to "follow the crowds."

Right at the start we are told that as this great story unfolds,—and then a reproduction of the cover—that chapter by chapter you will marvel at this man, Stewart Edward White, and the characters that he has brought to life. Then follow the names of the principal players. Our only criticism is that one has to read to the left of the volume to get the continuity and a straightaway effect would have been better.

The fellow who is always looking for an excuse generally finds himself an "ex."

OUR attention has been called to a campaign of the Lyceum theatre for the summer season with a policy of double bills and a number of specimens of the advertising has been sent us. We are reproducing the one with the first announcement, for the others, varying in size, are absolutely balanced between the two features offered, generally with a cut of a star at either side.

Every one knows our idea about the double bill and the advertising of it. Such advertising as this is simply quantity advertising when you get down to the bottom of it; no matter what may be the quality of the pictures.

Certainly this sixteen inch, five column display stands out like a "house afire" and it is bound to impress a lot of people. As an announcement of the new policy of the house we must admit that it is good work, but after a single announcement such as that we would much rather sell the quality of the pictures offered.

Anybody can have a past, but it takes a man to smile into the future.

AFTER all that we have had to say against crowded effects and the urge we have made of using striking cuts properly, there will probably be a lot of people wondering why we say that this 7½ inch double column of the Bijou, Lansing, Mich., was good advertising under certain circumstances.

If there was display matter used in advance of this one and attention called to the fact that Anita Stewart was to be seen at the Bijou, then this one served as an accentuated "reading notice" and doubtless got more attention than if it had appeared in the regular amusement column. For here we have a bare outline of the story, with some suggestion of the thrills of New York's fast life told in a way that is not sensational, but the more convincing because there is an absence of big black type. If the Bijou had people looking for this they read it. If this display here was sprung "cold" we fear it escaped a lot of readers.

Those who "sit back and wait" are very to find both their feet and their heads going to sleep.

WITH the use of one of the double column cuts supplied by Goldwyn and then the theatre has very properly added the selling argument at the right. The cut, while not particularly striking and somewhat weakened by the considerable amount of white space on it will certainly get the attention and then the matter at the right is fairly sure to be read. Material used is large press book copy.

We believe that one striking cut in outline is always more convincing than the black and white effect employed in the producers' cut here. Of course the face of the sphinx is used to carry out the idea that the story of the eternal Magdalene is the strong of all the ages. But these are severe criticisms, for the Crystal theatre, Greenville, Tex., is entitled to credit for the results that it got out of this three column, 9½ inch display.

Your patron comes to your theatre to forget his worries, not to think about yours.

WE have said so much about the use of name plates in motion picture theatre advertising that we are glad to be able to point out a display where it is the name plate only that saves the whole thing. This is the case of the eight inch, four column ad of the Strand theatre, Ottumwa, Iowa.

Now the content of the selling matter is good, but the display of it is bad, yet we believe that the greater part of it will be read for the reason that it is better than the other matter on the same page of the newspaper. But now when we start to read we find repetition galore. First the picture is referred to as Beach's "powerful story of Alaska" and then we have the same production called in the "tremendous drama of Alaska." Similarly there is no reason for two references to the fact that Kay Laurel is in the cast.

Now directly under the two lines of 24 pt. Cheltenham type we have this: "Famous Author's Powerful Portrayal for His Newest Goldwyn Production" and then in the same type we have "Screen Talent Matches Her Beauty." This refers to the

THIS half page display of the New Diamond theatre, East Liverpool, O., is a very bad case of mixing things up. Here the designer tried to say a lot about the improvements of the new house and to talk about the opening bill at the same time. It would have been better to have placed the emphasis on either one of the other. In this case we would have devoted the talk to the big points of the new house and would have mentioned the opening bill as incidental, merely calling attention to the fact that we had picked a feature in keeping with the occasion and then announcing Dorothy Dalton in

There is no excuse for the series of box effects here. They mean nothing and the only thing that they serve to do is to break the selling argument on the picture at either side. The display would have been much improved simply by devoting one side to the theatre and the other to the attraction, with the matter neatly paragraphed and indented and without the foolish boxes.

THIS is an advertisement that is out of the ordinary and as such is bound to get attention. Small scene pictures have been used and the reading matter contains extracts from the story together with descriptive matter that to an extent explains the situations, but at the same time leaves the mystery element dominant.

But at the same time this has been a little awkwardly done. Just why the dates of showing and the caption "Extracts from 'Mary Regan'" should be used in the same line we cannot see. Then, again the line "Sounds interest don't it?" should not have been quoted in the newspaper copy and then there is the grammatical error that is always bad. Another thing bad is the way that the name of Miss Stewart and the title break into the center of the display and then with the sentence "Yes'm, this is Mary Regan" we have the single quotes used for that matter instead of the double and the matter that follows, also supposed to be the spoken words of Miss Regan are not quoted. It's a good idea, but poorly carried out both so far as punctuation and typography are concerned.

It is a fifteen inch, three column advertisement of the Murrette theatre, Richmond, Ind.

Wrinkles are proud heritages when they have come from thought.

WE'VE got a lot of kins folk and friends down in Tyler, Texas, and one of them may be running the Queen Theatre there for all we know, but we can't help it if we have to say some unpleasant things about this two column, eight inch "affair"—because there is nothing else to call it.

There has been a two-column cut used that prints badly and is meaningless because it is not explained in the selling talk. Then it goes ahead with the lines, "A Girl for Sale. 'What Am

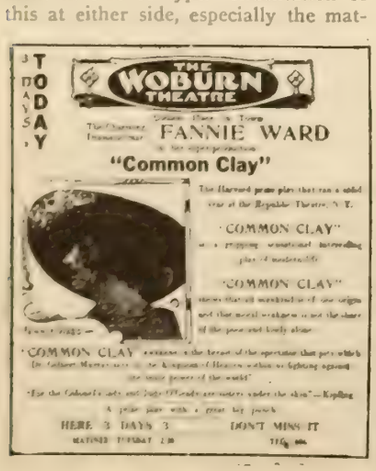
I Bid'", and so doesn't even indicate the title of the picture. The name of Mase Murray is buried. This is absolute waste of money. We would a whole lot rather have used a single inch of space with the name of the star and the title of the picture to this abomination. This copy must have been left to the mercy of the printer, and certainly he was no Venician judge.

The fellow who quits will find his patron getting the habit.

HERE is a quarter page display of the Woburn theatre, Woburn, Mass., that could have been improved typographically, but which still has many good points. The first creditable thing is that the theatre has adopted a name plate but we do not believe that the "flowers" and the bother fancy work add anything to this. Name plates should be as simple as possible and nothing should be added to them unless there is a reason for so found.

We would have played the title of the picture and the name of Fannie Ward both much stronger and would then have reduced the selling argument in size of type. Indentation of this at either side, especially the matter alongside the cut would have resulted in considerable improvement. While we oppose using a large number of different type faces in one display there is so much of the same type here that it becomes rather tiresome, while the larger display lines on the star and the title and smaller indented matter for the rest would have afforded a distinct relief.



Yesterday always will be yesterday and tomorrow opportunity.

IF we were conducting a newspaper we would never permit a theatre to use one of these heavy one inch black borders, but they certainly do make an advertisement stand out on the page and at the same time kill everything else on the page.

Our objection to it from the point of view of the theatre is that it cheapens the picture you are offering. The cut used here printed poorly and the whole general effect is that of a smudge. And then the cut used was one of the most gruesome scenes that could have been employed, showing the girl after the attack and the villain being choked into submission. The selling lines that are used below the cut is based on the violence of the picture.

We cannot understand why the selling power of Beatriz Michelena's name and the attractiveness of a picture of a beautiful woman were ignored.

Ideas and enterprise are forefathers of prosperity.

UNQUESTIONABLY the Strand theatre, Sioux City, S. D., got the attention of all the people to its display on the Rothapfel Programme, but we question whether the display went far enough in telling just who Mr. Rothapfel is and the reasons why the people should expect something more than the usual picture show in his selection and direction of the various units. We believe that the designer of this display realized that Mr. Rothapfel might not be known to all the patrons of the Strand theatre for in the box at the right, it says:

Mr. Rothapfel is creative. He selects only the best photoplays available. Out of this he builds a program including Magazine, Novelty Prelude, Dramatic Features with Special Music and Electric Effects.

It would have been a great deal better to have made the selling argument on the ground that here was the man who created the Strand, the Rialto and Rivoli and refer to them as the temples of the motion picture and then to have told the public that his art was brought direct to the people of Sioux City through the productions for which Mr. Rothapfel himself is responsible. We are very much afraid that this display left the impression that Mr. Rothapfel was some sort of an "introducer" who travelled along with a lot of pictures that he had gathered together.

Local advertising of the Rothapfel Programme has generally been inadequate, not in space, but because the exhibitor has not taken the trouble to tell the public enough.

"Perhaps" hesitates. IS gets there.

LIBERTY THEATRE, Spokane, Wash., certainly foes put it up to Fairbanks to make good in "The Knickerbocker Buckaroo." It helps along no further than to show a picture of the star starting a locomotive by turning the driver around and then is content with the star's name, the title of the picture and the fact that it is his latest seven part feature.

We haven't any doubt that the Liberty did big business on this one, and we haven't the slightest doubt that it would have done more had it properly featured the production, told its time in making and its cost. Ordinarily we would say that such details have been done to death, but the public had been waiting so long for a new Fairbank's production that in this case it would have impressed considerably.

WHILE it cannot be claimed that there is anything especially attractive about the head of a cannibal, it certainly gets the eye and J. L. Johnston, in preparing this three column, fifteen inch display for the Strand theatre, Minneapolis had that one object in view. Evidently he tried to make his selling argument the briefest possible, especially since the first section of the Martin Johnson picture had already been shown in Minneapolis. But we really believe that this is a case where the selling argument should have gone in greater detail and where the appeal should have been made to those who did not see the first picture.

One of the strongest elements in this picture, to us, is that fact that Mrs. Johnson, a very beautiful young woman, made this trip with her husband and certainly her capture together with that of her husband by the tribe of the "big Numbers" and their rescue by a British warship. That would have resulted in giving a reason for people to see it rather than the sideshow effect that this display gives.

Experience is a good teacher, but TRY is a better leader.

HERE is a case of study in backgrounds. We have commented many times here on the fact that it is hard to use black and white and halftones or even Ben Day and backgrounds and get the proper effect. The man who designed this eight inch, double column display for Tally's theatre, Los Angeles, realized this, so he used a circle of white space to make the head and shoulders of Florence Reed stand out. Physical appeal has been brought out strong here, but we are not at all sure that the Ben Day background helps things along much.

It rather leaves them of being added for good measure. The selling argument is a curiosity arousing one that could have been improved by indentation. Why are so many exhibitors unwilling to sacrifice a little space at the side when a little smaller type would have had the same effect. With this picture would advise a rather bold display of the figure of Miss Reed and a selling argument that people don't get as incidental, but one that they are forced to read.

It's not what you KNOW, but what you tell the public that counts.

SOMETIMES it appears to us that the moment a theatre takes unusually large space the manager loses his knowledge of what to do with it. Now in the first place never buy mere space. The ideal way to design advertising is to lay out your cuts, arrange the matter that you want to use in it, then cut it down to the limit, add a lot of white and then buy the amount of space that is necessary. Simply to buy the space first and then set in to fill it seems to have a bad psychological effect.

Such has evidently been the case with the Eureka theatre, Hackensack, N. J., with "The Man Who Turned White." Now this mass of type at the top means absolutely nothing. The very matter that should have been displayed has been crowded together with the name of H. B. Warner where it will scarcely be noticed and then the sides show methods have been used to call attention to the oriental dancing girls and the "Daredevil Arabian Night Riders." Even the display on the fact that Warner starred in "God's Man" is greater than that on the fact he is the star of this picture. Then we have the selling argument starting at the lower left and jumping over the cut to the lower right.

This is a terrible waste of space—an example of filling space and getting the least possible out of it. Don't buy space; plan your advertising first and then take the space necessary. It'll pay.

Don't believe in advertising? Well, the earth is SQUARE.

WINDSOR theatre has five inches single column in the Saturday afternoon paper, and evidently felt that this had to be filled up. So fill it up the theatre did.

It was bad enough in such a small space to take up space with the name of the author, the writer of the scenario and the director without going to the extent of giving the entire cast. Mahlon Hamilton and H. E. Herbert are the only ones especially well known and we believe that even their names might have been omitted with profit had that space been occupied with either a sound selling argument of the picture or a picture of Alice Brady.

There is also too much space taken up with the name of the theatre and the word "Theatre" itself is unnecessary here. It is simply a case of filling space and if this pays the Windsor the manager ought to become a millionaire with real advertising.

Ice is too high this summer to put your ideas in cold storage.

DISPLAY on this half page from the Atlanta, Ga., papers is terrible, but the idea is a good one. There was an effort made to stop the showing of "Auction of Souls," but the Superior Court ruled that it was a proper film to be displayed and the Atlanta Theatre did the right thing in advertising this fact, but there is so much of the capital letter and such a wandering about effect that it is largely lost.

How much more effective would it have been to have employed the same space but in three full columns with the opinion at the right, circles as if with a blue pencil with an arrow leading off and pointing to: "The Superior Court has said that," and then in large type "Auction of Souls"—"is a picture that you should see," and then to have gone ahead with the selling argument. As it is the opinion of the court is lost in the general mix-up.

Try to make speed in hurrying your show through and you're sure to hurry your patron away.

UNQUESTIONABLY there is a very strong line in this four column, nine inch display of the Mary Anderson theatre, Louisville, Ky. with "Auction of Souls," but here is another case where an additional three inches of space would have doubled the pulling power.

One immediately gets the crowded effect, and let us keep repeating that every time you do this there are going to be a lot of people to pass it by. We would have used that line "Women Sold For 85 Cents Each" in larger type some three inches above the top of the cut and then have carried the other matter down. The title of the picture is brought out fairly well by the Gothic type employed but the name of the Armenian girl, Aurora Mardiganian, whose story has been syndicated to thousands of newspaper readers, is too well known to be buried as it is.

The content is good, the illustration striking, but what an improvement three inches added to the whole thing would have made—a convincing sales argument instead of a jumble of type. And the continued refusal of the Mary Anderson to use a name plate doesn't help matters much.

This twelve inch, five column one from the Colonial theatre, Toledo, is much better though it lacks the punch that more prominence to the idea of the sale of the girls would have given, for we believe that line is even stronger than the title which has been featured to the limit in the Colonial advertisement.

But it gets the eye and one is pretty apt to read the matter at the right which gives an account of some of the things that are shown in this production. The half tone effect of the Turk and one of the Armenian girls does not stand out anything like as well as does the line drawing in the Mary Anderson display and in that the advertisement weakens.

Some fighters grin when they're hurt, but it's a whole lot better for a theatre patron to smile all the time—for then he'll be putting the real punch over.

PRINCESS theatre, Milwaukee, knew that many of the other theatres that would be represented on the same page would use large space and black type and therefore it decided to get the attention of all of the patrons of the house by using the name of the theatre in big black Gothic type. Then it has gone the rest of the way in using Chandler for Mabel Normand and the title of the production and for the selling argument.

Now this newspaper evidently realizes the pulling power of the picture of the star for it has used one and has left some white space around the cut, but has crowded up the remainder of the space so that whole effect is lost because there has not been so much as a lead left between the solid type. It is another case of using every line possible. Now we would have advocated an entirely different style of advertising in the same space, a name plate for the theatre, the type lighter and smaller and more white space and the result on the dead black Milwaukee pages would have been a display that would have stood out and attracted attention by the contrast.

"Regular Position" Billboards Make Business For Small City House

SOME one in answering the question "Does billboard advertising pay?" answered with a counter question "Where are your billboards and I will tell you." Then he went ahead with the statement that merely plastering a city with announcements of a picture was more or less hit or miss exploitation, that probably lots of them would attract attention and that others would be ignored.

"I would," he continued, "never post a 24 sheet stand unless I had some reason for posting that stand, unless I was sure that there was a certain element of the public that I would reach regularly. There is no more sense in the indiscriminate use of paper pasted to upright boards just any old place than there is in scattering an equal amount of matter about the streets and expecting some one to pick up those heralds. Perhaps they'll do good —perhaps."

It was just about six years ago that the MOTION PICTURE NEWS told of the success of A. E. Blanchard who was conducting a theatre in the lumber town of Bogalusa, La., and how he attracted attention by using a billboard facing the station and the public square where he carried the announcements of coming and current attractions until the public began to look to that place as the register of local amusement offerings. That was as religiously cared for as the front of the theatre

Now there comes to hand the case of the Vine theatre, a house seating 500 in Mount Vernon, Ohio, a city of 10,000. The Vine has adopted regular stands for its announcements and sees to it that the people look to those places for the current and coming attractions for the daily change offerings covering an entire week. Harris and Smoots, the managers, know that they have no strong opposition in their particular district, but they have also found that these continued advertisements in the same place every day gets lots of additional patrons.

For instance, one of the permanent displays maintained by the Vine is a board located at the south end of the city at the approach of the viaduct, over which all traffic from the outlaying country districts must pass to reach the business district. This board, as is shown in the accompanying illustration, contains places for twelve one-sheets on which the week's attractions are posted. One picture gets two displays, such as is shown at the left with the Paramount picture "Oh, You Women" being prominently advertised.

The permanent lines at the top advertise the theatre prominently. The results of such exploitation in such a prominent locality have proven of wonderful worth to Harris and Smoots.

Another excellent location for a display selected by the managers lies between Main Street and the Post Office. The value of such a position is immediately apparent. For Main Street and the Post Office are traversed by everyone in a city of the size of Mt. Vernon. Everyone going to the Post Office from Main Street must see this board.

On this stand there are places for five one-sheets.

Of course these stands are changed weekly. And not only do Harris and Smoots take care of these positions but they also maintain one more stand opposite the B. & O. passenger station.

Thus the entire city of Mt. Vernon as well as all visitors to it, know of the Vine theatre and the attractions that are playing there.

GETTING YOUR OWN POLICY

Isn't It Time to Think More About Your Own Theatre Now?

TURN through most any issue of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS in these weeks before the opening of the fall season and you will read announcements of the policies of the producing and distributing companies.

Does that mean anything to you in the way of your adopting a real policy for your theatre? We do not mean in the selection of the brands of pictures that you are going to show, but the principle on which you are going to conduct your house so far as your patrons and your town are concerned.

A real policy, a definite plan of action, a real determination to do things means as much to the smallest house in a fourth class city as it does to the biggest film company.

For two years we have been placing before you here the best policies of others, but lots of you have remained silent. It's time for you to "speak for yourself, John."

Des Moines, Handsome New Blank Theatre, Is Opened

Thursday, July 10, saw the opening of A. H. Blank's newest theatre, the Des Moines, in Des Moines, Iowa. This is the tenth fine theatre in his chain and follows just one year after the opening of the Rialto, Omaha, one of the finest houses in the middle west. Strand, Omaha; Garden and Palace, Des Moines; Garden, Family and Casino, Davenport, Iowa, and the Strand, Marshalltown, Iowa and others in his list.

The Des Moines has been erected in connection with the Iowa building, a six-story office structure at the corner of Sixth and Grand avenues, and represents an investment of $750,000. Every modern improvement is said to have been included in the building, whose completion has been delayed for several weeks because of a strike in Des Moines.

Cecil B. DeMille's "For Better, For Worse" was the opening attraction, besides shorter subjects. A twenty-piece symphony orchestra is maintained in connection with the theatre.

Arthur G. Stolte, who is well known to readers of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS because he was among the first contributors to the Exhibitors Service Bureau is manager of the new house, and there is no doubt that his unusual ability will contribute a great deal to its success. Mr. Stolte really broke into the motion picture business in 1912 when he started a motion picture page on the Waterloo Reporter, one of the very first in the country. The lute of the photoplay became all the stronger and thence he went to California for study at the studios. Recently he was manager of the Strand theatre, Omaha, leaving that post to take charge of the Des Moines, though the strike referred to has prevented his active work since that time. Mr. Stolte is a member of the Advisory Board of the Exhibitors Service Bureau.
